"(c) Regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Defense under this chapter shall be uniform for the Armed Forces under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of a military department.

"§ 1445. Allocation of administration and of program costs

"(a) Except to the extent otherwise specifically provided in this chapter, the educational assistance programs established by this chapter shall be administered by the Veterans' Administration.

"(b)(1) Except to the extent provided in paragraphs (2) and (3) of this subsection, payments for entitlement earned under subchapter II of this chapter shall be made from appropriations made to the Veterans' Administration.

"(2) Payments for entitlement earned under subchapter II of this chapter which is used by an individual to whom such entitlement was transferred under subchapter IV of this chapter, or which is used by the individual earning such entitlement after an election under such subchapter to transfer such entitlement which was subsequently revoked, shall be made from the Department of Defense Education Benefits Fund established under section 2006 of title 10 or from appropriations made to the Department of Transportation, as appropriate.

"(3) Payments for entitlement earned under subchapter II of this chapter that is established under section 1415(b) of this title at a rate in excess of the rate prescribed under section 1415(a) of this title shall, to the extent of that excess, be made from the Department of Defense Education Benefits Fund established under section 2006 of title 10 or from appropriations made to the Department of Transportation, as appropriate.

"(c) Payments for educational assistance provided under subchapter III of this chapter (whether used by the individual to whom the right to the assistance was provided by the Secretary concerned or by an individual to whom that right was transferred under subchapter IV of this chapter) shall be made from the Department of Defense Education Benefits Fund established under section 2006 of title 10 or from appropriations made to the Department of Transportation, as appropriate.

"(d) Funds for the payment by the Administrator of benefits under this chapter that are to be paid from the Department of Defense Education Benefits Fund shall be transferred to the Veterans' Administration from such Fund as necessary and in accordance with agreements entered into under section 2006 of title 10 by the Administrator, the Secretary of Defense, and the Secretary of the Treasury. Funds for the payment by the Administrator of benefits under this chapter that are to be paid from appropriations made to the Department of Transportation shall be transferred to the Veterans' Administration as necessary. The Administrator and the Secretary of Transportation shall enter into an agreement for the manner in which such transfers are to be made.

"§ 1446. Reporting requirement

"(a) The Secretary of Defense and the Administrator shall submit to the Congress at least once every two years separate reports on the operation of the program provided for in this chapter.

"(b) The Secretary shall include in each report submitted under this section—

"(1) information indicating (A) the extent to which the benefit levels provided under this chapter are adequate to achieve the purposes of inducing individuals to enter and remain in the Armed Forces and of providing an adequate level of financial assistance to help meet the cost of pursuing a program of education, and (B) whether it is necessary for the purposes of maintaining adequate levels of well-qualified active-duty personnel in the Armed Forces to continue to offer the opportunity for educational assistance under this chapter to individuals who have not yet entered active-duty service; and

"(2) such recommendations for administrative and legislative changes regarding the provision of educational assistance to members of the Armed Forces and veterans, and their dependents, as the Secretary considers appropriate.

"(c) The Administrator shall include in each report submitted under this section—

"(1) information concerning the level of utilization of educational assistance and of expenditures under this chapter; and

"(2) such recommendations for administrative and legislative changes regarding the provision of educational assistance to members fo the Armed Forces and veterans, and their dependents, as the Administrator considers appropriate.

"(d)(1) The first report by the Secretary of Defense under this section shall be submitted not later than April 1, 1985.

"(2) The first report by the Administrator under this section shall be submitted not later than April 1, 1987.".

(2) The tables of chapters at the beginning of such title and at the beginning of part III of such title are each amended by inserting above the item relating to chapter 31 the following new item:

"30. All-Volunteer Force Educational Assistance Program ..... 1401".

(b) Subchapters III and IV of chapter 30 of title 38, United States Code, as added by subsection (a), shall take effect on October 1, 1985.

COORDINATION WITH OTHER VETERANS' EDUCATION AND TRAINING PROGRAMS

SEC. 702. (a) Section 1508(f)(1) of title 38, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in subparagraph (A)—

(A) by inserting "30 or" before "34" the first place it appears; and

(B) by striking out "chapter 34" the second place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "either chapter 30 or chapter 34"; and

(2) in subparagraph (B), by inserting "30 or" before "34".

(b)(1) Section 1602(1)(A) of such title is amended by inserting "and before October 1, 1984," after "January 1, 1977," both places it appears.

(2) Section 1623 of such title is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(e) If a participant becomes entitled to educational assistance under subchapter II of chapter 30 of this title, the participant may elect to disenroll from the program under this chapter effective on the last day of the month in which the participant becomes entitled to such assistance.".

(c) The third sentence of section 1673(d)(1) of such title is amended by inserting "30," after "or chapter".

(d)(1) Section 1781 of such title is amended—

(A) by inserting "30," after "chapter" the first place it appears;

(B) by striking out "36," and inserting in lieu thereof "36 of this title or 106 or 107 of title 10,"; and

(C) by striking out the comma after "chapter 31".

(2) Section 1795(a) of such title is amended—

(A) by inserting "30," in clause (4) after "chapters"; and

(B) by striking out "Chapter 107" in clause (5) and inserting in lieu thereof "Chapters 106 and 104".

TERMINATION OF RIGHT TO ENROLL IN CHAPTER 32 PROGRAM

SEC. 703. No individual on active duty in the Armed Forces may initially enroll in the educational assistance program provided for in chapter 32 of title 38, United States Code, after December 31, 1984.

REVISION OF EDUCATIONAL ASSISTANCE PROGRAM FOR THE SELECTED RESERVE

SEC. 704. (a)(1) Chapter 106 of title 10, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"CHAPTER 106—EDUCATIONAL ASSISTANCE FOR MEMBERS OF THE SELECTED RESERVE

"Sec.
"2131. Educational assistance program: establishment; amount.
"2132. Eligibility for educational assistance.
"2133. Time limitation for use of entitlement.
"2134. Termination of assistance.
"2135. Failure to participate satisfactorily; penalties.
"2136. Administration of program.
"2137. Reports to Congress.
"2138. Savings provision.

"§ 2131. Educational assistance program: establishment; amount

"(a) To encourage membership in units of the Selected Reserve of the Ready Reserve, the Secretary of each military department, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Defense, and the Secretary of Transportation, under regulations prescribed by him with respect to the Coast Guard when it is not operating as a service in the Navy, shall establish and maintain a program to provide educational assistance to members of the Selected Reserve of the Ready Reserve of the armed forces under his jurisdiction who agree to remain members of the Selected Reserve for a period of not less than six years.

"(b) Each educational assistance program established under subsection (a) shall provide for payment by the Secretary concerned to each person entitled to educational assistance under this chapter who is pursuing a program of education and educational assistance allowance at the following rates:

"(1) $140 per month for each month of full-time pursuit of a program of education;

"(2) $105 per month for each month of three-quarter-time pursuit of a program of education; and

"(3) $70 per month for each month of half-time pursuit of a program of education.

"(c)(1) Educational assistance may only be provided under this chapter for pursuit of a program of education at an institution of higher learning and may not be provided to a person after the person has completed a course of instruction required for the award of a baccalaureate degree or the equivalent evidence of completion of study.

"(2) Subject to section 1795 of title 38, the maximum number of months of educational assistance that may be provided to any person under this chapter is 36.

"§ 2132. Eligibility for educational assistance

"(a) A person who—

"after September 30, 1984—

"(A) enlists, reenlists, or extends an enlistment as a Reserve for service in the Selected Reserve for a period of not less than six years; or

"(B) is appointed as, or is serving as, a reserve officer and agrees to serve in the Selected Reserve for a period of not less than six years in addition to any other period of obligated service in the Selected Reserve to which the person may be subject; and

"(2) before completing initial active duty for training has received a secondary school diploma (or an equivalency certificate); is entitled to educational assistance under section 2131 of this title.

"(b) Educational assistance may not be provided to a member under this chapter until the member—

"(1) has completed the initial period of active duty for training required of the member; and

"(2) has completed 180 days of service in the Selected Reserve.

"(c) Each person who becomes entitled to educational assistance under subsection (a) shall at the time the person becomes so entitled be given a statement in writing summarizing the provisions of this chapter and stating clearly and prominently the substance of sections 2134 and 2135 of this title as such sections may apply to the person.

"§ 2133. Time limitation for use of entitlement

"(a) Except as provided in subsection (b), the period during which a person entitled to educational assistance under this section may use such person's entitlement expires (1) at the end of the 10-year period beginning on the date on which such person becomes entitled to such assistance, or (2) on the date the person is separated from the Selected Reserve, whichever occurs first.

"(b)(1) The provisions of section 1441(f) of title 38 shall apply to the period of entitlement prescribed by subsection (a).

"(2) The provisions of section 1441(e) of title 38 shall apply to the period of entitlement prescribed by subsection (a) in the case of disability incurred in or aggravated by service in the Selected Reserve.

"§ 2134. Termination of assistance

"Educational assistance may not be provided under this chapter—

"(1) to a member receiving financial assistance under section 2107 of this title as a member of the Senior Reserve Officers' Training Corps program; or

"(2) to a member who fails to participate satisfactorily in required training as a member of the Selected Reserve.

"§ 2135. Failure to participate satisfactorily; penalties

"(a)(1) A member of the Selected Reserve of the Ready Reserve of an armed force who fails to participate satisfactorily in required training as a member of the Selected Reserve during a term of enlistment or other period of obligated service that created entitlement of the member to educational assistance under this chapter shall, at the option of the Secretary concerned—

"(A) be ordered to active duty for a period of two years or the period of obligated service the person has remaining under section 2132 of this title, whichever is less; or

"(B) be required to refund to the United States an amount determined under subsection (b).

"(2) The Secretary concerned may waive the requirements of paragraph (1) or may reduce the amount of any refund under clause (B) of such paragraph, in the case of any individual member when the Secretary determines that the failure to participate satisfactorily was due to reasons beyond the control of the member.

"(3) Any refund by a member under this section shall not affect the period of obligation of such member to serve as a Reserve in the Selected Reserve.

"(b)(1) The amount of a refund under subsection (a) shall be the amount equal to the product of—

"(A) the number of months of obligated service remaining under the agreement entered into under section 2132(a)(3) divided by the original number of months of such obligation; and

"(B) the total amount of educational assistance provided to the member under this chapter, as increased by interest determined under paragraph (2).

"(2) The amount computed under paragraph (1) shall bear interest at the rate equal to the highest rate being paid by the United States on the day on which the refund is determined to be due for securities having maturities of 90 days or less and shall accrue from the day on which the member is first notified of the amount due to the United States as a refund under this section.

"(a) Educational assistance under this chapter shall be provided through the Veterans' Administration, under agreements to be entered into by the Secretary of Defense, and by the Secretary of Transportation, with the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs. Such agreements shall include administrative procedures to ensure the prompt and timely transfer of funds from the Secretary concerned to the Veterans' Administration for the making of payments under this chapter.

"(b) Except as otherwise provided in this chapter, the provisions of sections 1663, 1670, 1671, 1673, 1674, 1676, 1682(g), and 1683 of chapter 34 of title 38 and the provisions of subchapters I and II of chapter 36 of such title (with the exception of sections 1780(a)(5), 1780(b), 1786, 1787(b)(1), and 1792) shall be applicable to the provision of educational assistance under this chapter. The term 'eligible veteran', as used in those provisions, shall be deemed for the purpose of the application of those provisions to this chapter to refer to a person eligible for educational assistance under this chapter.

"§ 2137. Reports to Congress

"The Secretary of Defense shall submit to the Congress a report not later than December 15 of each year concerning the operation of the educational assistance program established by this chapter during the preceding fiscal year. Each such report shall include the number of members of the Selected Reserve of the Ready Reserve of each armed force receiving, and the number entitled to receive, educational assistance under this chapter during the preceding fiscal year.

"§ 2138. Savings provision

"A member who entered into an agreement under this chapter before October 1, 1984, shall continue to be eligible for educational assistance in accordance with the terms of such agreement and of this chapter as in effect before such date.".

(2) The items relating to such chapter in the table of chapters at the beginning of subtitle A of such title, and in the table of chapters at the beginning of part III of such subtitle, are amended to read as follows:

"106. Educational Assistance for Members of the Selected Reserve... 2131".

(b) The amendments made by this section shall take effect on October 1, 1984, and shall apply only to members of the Armed Forces who qualify for educational assistance under chapter 106 of title 10, United States Code, as amended by subsection (a), on or after such date.

ACCRUAL FUNDING OF DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE LIABILITIES

SEC. 705. (a)(1) Chapter 101 of title 10, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"§ 2006. Department of Defense Education Benefits Fund

"(a) There is established on the books of the Treasury a fund to be known as the Department of Defense Education Benefits Fund (hereinafter in this section referred to as the 'Fund'), which shall be administered by the Secretary of the Treasury. The Fund shall be used for the accumulation of funds in order to finance Department of Defense education liabilities on an actuarially sound basis.

"(b) In this section:

"(1) 'Department of Defense education liabilities' means liabilities of the Department of Defense for benefits under chapter 30 of title 38 and for benefits under chapter 106 of this title.

"(2) 'Normal cost', with respect to any period of time, means the total of the following:

"(A) The present value of the future benefits payable from the Fund for amounts attributable to increased amounts of educational assistance authorized under section 1415(b) of title 38 to persons who were not on active duty on October 1, 1984, and who during such period enter on active duty.

"(B) The present value of the future benefits payable from the Fund for amounts attributable to educational assistance authorized under subchapter III of chapter 30 of title 38 to persons who were not on active duty on October 1, 1984, and who during such period—

"(i) enter a fourth year of active duty, in the case of persons eligible for basic educational assistance under section 1411 of such title; or

"(ii) enter a period of service that will establish entitlement to such educational assistance under section 1421(b) of such title, in the case of persons eligible for basic educational assistance under section 1412 of such title.

"(C) The present value of the additional future benefits payable from the Fund by reason of eligibility authorized during such period for members of the Armed Forces who were not on active duty on October 1, 1984, to transfer educational assistance entitlement to dependents under subchapter IV of chapter 30 of such title.

"(D) The present value of the future benefits payable from the Fund for educational assistance under chapter 106 of this title to persons who during such period become entitled to such assistance.

"(c) There shall be deposited into the Fund the following, which shall constitute the assets of the Fund:

"(1) Amounts paid into the Fund by the Secretary of Defense under subsection (g).

"(2) Any amount appropriated to the Fund.

"(3) Any return on investment of the assets of the Fund.

"(d) The Secretary of the Treasury shall transfer from the Fund to the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs such amounts as may be necessary to enable the Administrator to make required payments of Department of Defense education liabilities. The Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Defense, and the Administrator shall enter into an agreement as to how and when, and the amounts in which, such transfers shall be made. Except for investments under subsection (h), amounts in the Fund may not be used for any purpose other than transfers as described in this subsection.

"(e)(1)(A) There is established in the Department of Defense a Department of Defense Education Benefits Board of Actuaries (hereinafter in this section referred to as the 'Board'). The Board shall consist of three members, who shall be appointed by the Secretary of Defense from among qualified professional actuaries who are members of the Society of Actuaries.

"(B)(i) Except as provided in clause (ii), the members of the Board shall serve for a term of fifteen years, except that a member of the Board appointed to fill a vacancy occurring before the end of the term for which his predecessor was appointed shall only serve until the end of such term. A member may serve after the end of his term until his successor has taken office. A member of the Board may be removed by the Secretary of Defense for misconduct or failure to perform functions vested in the Board, and for no other reason.

"(ii) Of the members of the Board who are first appointed under this paragraph, one each shall be appointed for terms ending five, ten, and fifteen years, respectively, after the date of appointment, as designated by the Secretary of Defense at the time of appointment.

"(C) A member of the Board who is not otherwise an employee of the United States is entitled to receive pay at the daily equivalent of the annual rate of basic pay of the highest rate of basic pay then currently being paid under the General Schedule of subchapter III of chapter 53 of title 5, for each day the member is engaged in the performance of duties vested in the Board and is entitled to travel expenses, including a per diem allowance, in accordance with section 5703 of title 5.

"(2) The Board shall report to the Secretary of Defense annually on the actuarial status of the Fund and shall furnish its advice and opinion on matters referred to it by the Secretary.

"(3) The Board shall review valuations of the Fund under subsection (g) and report periodically, not less than once every four years, to the President and Congress on the status of the Fund and shall recommend such changes as in the Board's judgment are necessary to protect the public interest and maintain the Fund on a sound actuarial basis.

"(4) The Secretary shall keep, or cause to be kept, such records as necessary for determining the actuarial status of the Fund.

"(f) Not later than six months after the Board of Actuaries is first appointed, the Board shall determine the amount (hereinafter in this section referred to as the 'original unfunded liability') that is the present value (as of October 1, 1984) of future benefits payable from the Fund to persons who on October 1, 1984, are on active duty (and to dependents of such persons to whom entitlement to such benefits is transferred). The Board shall determine the period of time over which this amount should be liquidated and shall determine the amortization schedule for the liquidation of such amount over such period.

"(g)(1) The Secretary of Defense shall carry out periodic actuarial valuations of the educational programs described in subsection (b)(1).

"(2) Based on the most recent such valuation, the Secretary of Defense shall estimate the normal cost for the next fiscal year.

"(3) If at the time of any such valuation there has been a change in benefits under an education program described in subsection (b)(1) that has been made since the last such valuation and that increases or decreases the present value of benefits payable from the Fund, the Secretary of Defense shall determine an amortization methodology and schedule for the liquidation of the unfunded liability (or negative unfunded liability) thus created such that the present value of the sum of the amortization payments equals the increase or decrease in the present value of such benefits.

"(4) If at the time of any such valuation the Secretary of Defense determines that, based upon changes in actuarial assumptions since the last valuation, there has been an actuarial gain or loss to the Fund, the Secretary shall determine an amortization methodology and schedule for the liquidation of such gain or loss through an increase or decrease in the payments that would otherwise be made to the Fund.

"(5) Based on the determinations under paragraphs (2), (3), and (4) and the determinations made by the Board of actuaries under subsection (f) the Secretary of Defense shall determine the amount needed to be appropriated to the Department of Defense for the next fiscal year for payments to be made to the Fund under subsection (h). The President shall include not less than the full amount so determined in the budget transmitted to Congress for the next fiscal year under section 1105 of title 31. The President may comment and make recommendations concerning any such amount.

"(6) All determinations under this subsection shall be made using methods and assumptions approved by the Board of Actuaries (including assumptions of interest rates and inflation) and in accordance with generally accepted actuarial principles and practices.

"(h)(1) The Secretary of Defense shall pay into the Fund each month the amount that, based upon the most recent actuarial valuation of the education programs described in subsection (b)(1), is equal to the actual total normal cost for the preceding month.

"(2) The Secretary of Defense shall pay into the Fund at the beginning of each fiscal year (or as soon thereafter as appropriations are available for such purpose) the sum of the following:

"(A) The amount of the payment for that year for the amortization of the original unfunded liability, as determined by the Board of Actuaries under subsection (f).

"(B) The amount of the payment for that year, if any, for the amortization of any liability to the Fund resulting from a change in benefits, as determined by the Secretary of Defense under subsection (g)(3).

"(C) The amount of the payment for that year, if any, for the amortization of any actuarial gain or loss to the Fund, as determined by the Secretary of Defense under subsection (g)(4).

"(3) Amounts paid into the Fund under this subsection shall be paid from appropriations available for the pay of members of the armed forces under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of a military department.

"(i) The Secretary of the Treasury shall invest such portion of the Fund as is not in the judgment of the Secretary required to meet current withdrawals. Such investments shall be in public debt securities with maturities suitable to the needs of the Fund, as determined by the Secretary, and bearing interest at rates determined by the Secretary, taking into consideration current market yields on outstanding marketable obligations of the United States of comparable maturities. The income on such investments shall be credited to and form a part of the Fund.".

"2006. Department of Defense Education Benefits Fund.".

(b) The first payment into the Department of Defense Education Benefits Fund under section 2006 of title 10, United States Code, as added by subsection (a), shall be made not later than three months after the Board of Actuaries determines the amounts needed to be paid into the Fund for the fiscal year beginning on October 1, 1984. The first payment shall be made in a lump sum equal to the total of the amounts that would have been paid to the Fund each month between October 1, 1984, and the time such first payment is made.

EDUCATIONAL LEAVE OF ABSENCE FOR MEMBERS OF THE ARMED FORCES

SEC. 706. (a)(1) Chapter 40 of title 10, United States Code, relating to leave, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"§ 708. Educational leave of absence

"(a) Under such regulations as the Secretary of Defense may prescribe after consultation with the Secretary of Transportation and subject to subsection (b), the Secretary concerned may grant to any eligible member (as defined in subsection (e)) a leave of absence for a period of not to exceed two years for the purpose of permitting the member to pursue a program of education.

"(b)(1) A member may not be granted a leave of absence under this section unless—

"(A) in the case of an enlisted member, the member agrees in writing to extend his current enlistment after completion (or other termination) of the program of education for which the leave of absence was granted for a period of two months for each month of the period of the leave of absence; and

"(B) in the case of an officer, the member agrees to serve on active duty after completion (or other termination) of the program of education for which the leave of absence was granted for a period (in addition to any other period of obligated service on active duty) of two months for each month of the period of the leave of absence.

"(2) A member may not be granted a leave of absence under this section until he has completed any extension of enlistment or reenlistment, or any period of obligated service, incurred by reason of any previous leave of absence granted under this section.

"(c)(1) While on a leave of absence under this section, a member shall be paid basic pay but may not receive basic allowance for quarters or basic allowance for subsistence or any other pay and allowances to which he would otherwise be entitled for such period.

"(2) A period during which a member is on a leave of absence under this section shall be counted for the purposes of computing the amount of the member's basic pay, for the purpose of determining the member's eligibility for retired pay, and for the purpose of time in grade for promotion purposes, but may not be counted for the purposes of completion of the term of enlistment of the member (in the case of an enlisted member) or for purposes of section 1421 of title 38, relating to entitlement to supplemental educational assistance.

"(d)(1) In time of war, or of national emergency declared by the President or the Congress after the date of the enactment of this section, the Secretary concerned may cancel any leave of absence granted under this section.

"(2) The Secretary concerned may cancel a leave of absence granted to a member under this section if the Secretary determines that the members is not satisfactorily pursuing the program of education for which the leave was granted.

"(e) In this section, 'eligible members' means a member of the armed forces on active duty who is eligible for basic educational assistance under chapter 30 of title 38 and who—

"(1) in the case of an enlisted member, has completed at least one term of enlistment and has reenlisted; and

"(2) in the case of an officer, has completed the officer's initial period of obligated service on active duty.".

"708. Educational leave of absence.".

(b) Section 708 of title 10, United States Code, as added by subsection (a), shall take effect on October 1, 1985.

PRESEPARATION COUNSELING

SEC. 707. (a)(1) Chapter 53 of title 10, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"§ 1043. Preseparation counseling requirement

"Upon the discharge or release from active duty of a member of the armed forces, the Secretary concerned shall provide for individual counseling of that member. That counseling shall include a discussion of the educational assistance benefits to which the member is entitled because of the member's service in the armed forces and an explanation of the procedures for and advantages of affiliating with the Selected Reserve. A notation of the provision of such counseling, signed by the member, shall be placed in the service record of each member receiving such counseling.".

"1043. Preseparation counseling requirement.".

(b) Section 1043 of title 10, United States Code, as added by subsection (a) shall take effect on October 1, 1984.

TITLE VIII—CIVIL DEFENSE

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 801. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 1985 to carry out the provisions of the Federal Civil Defense Act of 1985 (50 U.S.C. App. 2251 et seq.) the sum of $143,200,000.

PROHIBITION OF CRISIS RELOCATION PLANNING

SEC. 802. None of the funds appropriated pursuant to the authorization of appropriations in section 801 may be obligated or expended for planning for population relocation in time of crisis.

TITLE IX—GENERAL PROVISIONS

REPORT ON EFFECT OF DEFENSE SPENDING ON ECONOMIC GROWTH

SEC. 901. Not later than 90 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the President shall transmit to Congress a report on the effect of the current and projected levels of defense spending on the economy, including the effect on rates of growth in the economy, the rate of inflation, interest rates, and the availability of capital for private productivity enhancement investment.

PROGRAMS FOR CONVERSION FROM MILITARY ECONOMY TO PEACETIME ECONOMY

SEC. 902. (a) The Secretary of Defense shall establish programs to provide economic readjustment assistance to communities and workers affected by the reductions in weapons programs and other defense programs provided for under this Act. Such readjustment programs shall provide the means to promote orderly economic adjustment which will (1) minimize the dislocation of workers, communities, and industries, (2) assure that such dislocations do not compound recessionary trends, and (3) encourage conversion of technologies and managerial and worker skills developed in defense production to projects which serve the civilian sector.

(b) Assistance which may be provided under programs established under this section includes—

(1) job training programs and job relocation expenses for workers displaced by termination of defense contracts affected by the reductions in defense expenditures required by this Act;

(2) emergency economic assistance and health care benefits for workers and their families directly affected by such reductions in defense expenditures; and

(3) emergency economic assistance to the communities directly affected by such reductions and defense expenditures, to be made in the form of grants designed to assist in the conversion of industrial plant facilities in the community to use in the civilian sector.

(c) There is authorized to be appropriated to the Department of Defense for fiscal years beginning after September 30, 1984, the sum of $5,000,000,000.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

A COURAGEOUS FATHER AND SON BATTLE NF

HON. SILVIO O. CONTE
OF MASSACHUSETTS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, in Massachusetts, the Governor has proclaimed May 1984 as "Neurofibromatosis Awareness Month." Even though over 100,000 Americans are afflicted with this genetic disorder and a major Broadway play, later made into a movie, focused on a man suffering from the disease, public awareness of NF is minimal, and scientific research into its causes and cures is just beginning.

"Elephant Man's Disease," as NF is commonly called, is a genetic disorder of the nervous system affecting both sexes and all national origins or races. Symptoms usually appear in early childhood or adolescence, but can occur as late as age 50. Usually progressive, symptoms may include small and large pressure-sensitive tumors just under the skin, curvature of the spine, enlargement and deformation of bones, tumors on the auditory and optic nerves resulting in deafness or blindness, and tumors of the brain or spinal cord. In about 5 percent of cases, these tumors become cancerous.

At present, little is known about the mutant gene responsible for this terrible disease or how to prevent it. The Federal Government has had some activity in this area. Three years ago, the National Institute of Neurological and Communicative Disorders and Stroke at the National Institutes of Health set up a Neurofibromatosis Clinical Research Unit to try to identify the gene responsible for the disease. In fiscal year 1983 a total of $750,000 was spent specifically on NF research.

Last July, I sponsored report language in my subcommittee markup of the fiscal year 1984 Labor/HHS/Education appropriations bill, encouraging NIH to vigorously pursue research and research training in this area. The language also directed NIH to provide the committee with a report on what has been done up to this point and what needs to be done. It was submitted earlier this year. The report sets out, for the first time by an organization like NIH, a comprehensive set of goals for the future. As the report states:

There is still much more to learn . . . these goals are ambitious. Yet, if the lives of neurofibromatosis patients and their families are to be improved we must try to achieve them. The NINCDS and the other NIH institutes, along with the Inter-Institute Genetics Clinic, have taken the initial steps.

The report noted that NIH is currently devoting about $3 million to research in some way related to NF.

The impetus for these programs and research are the thousands of children and adults afflicted with this deforming disease. Despite the ultimate results and symptoms of NF, the victims in many cases face the disease with courage and determination to lead a normal life—as they should. The movie, "Elephant Man," is an inspiring and thought-provoking statement about these victims. Claudette Kiely and her family, constituents of the First District, are such individuals. Mrs. Kiely's husband and four of her five children have NF. Her work on the behalf of H.R. 1676, the NF Commission bill and other measures, has inspired many.

At this point in the RECORD, let me call the attention of my colleagues to another family afflicted with the disease. The Boston Globe ran an article entitled "A Fighter's Lifelong Battle With the Crippling Disease NF." The short article describes the daily struggles of Barry Geer and his son, Timothy. I urge my colleagues to review this article and cosponsor H.R. 1676, a bill to create an NF Commission.

The text of the article is as follows:

[From the Boston (Mass.) Globe, July 3, 1983]

A FIGHTER'S LIFELONG BATTLE WITH THE CRIPPLING DISEASE NF

(By Jean Caldwell)

MONSON.—"I've been laughing since I was born," says 34-year-old Barry Geer of Monson. There is the slightest pause before the father of four adds softly, "I've had to."

The pause and the postscript are acknowledgement that the laughter is part of a decision made long ago that he would live a happy, productive life despite the obstacles fate put in his path.

A little more than two years ago, doctors told Geer that many of the physical ills that have plagued him from birth are due to neurofibromatosis (NF). They also told him that 12-year-old Timothy, second of his four children, has the same ailment. Then they said NF would kill them both at an early age.

Barry Geer's tumors affect his sight and his hearing, and those that press along his carotid artery and those lodged in his brain have caused him to have four strokes, leaving him with a limp and a tendency to mix up words occasionally.

In Timothy's case, the multiple tumors have destroyed most of his muscles and affected his voice. He wears leg braces and has frequent sessions with a physical therapist who is trying to prevent him from losing more strength and motion. What distresses him most are the tumors on his vocal chords, which make his voice barely more than a high-pitched whisper. It leads to teasing from the other kids at school, he says.

The elder Geer was just four hours old and weighed only 4 lbs. 2 ounces when he underwent the first of many operations. He was 30 years old when he suffered his first stroke. "A nurse put her arms around me. The doctor said it was going to be fatal. I laughed at it. I've been told that a lot of times and I'm still here. Being told you're going to die is nothing. Everyone is going to die. I had been in hospitals so many times as a kid and had seen so many friends die. . . .

"Someone always has something worse than you. As long as you can say I'm not that bad off, I think you can keep your head. If you get concerned and bite your nails, you're going to make yourself worse. I try to do what I can while I can."

His disease is a paradox. NF is the most common of the neurological genetic diseases, more common than muscular dystrophy or multiple sclerosis and yet, until recently, the public knew little, if anything, about it, according to Joan Rudd of New York City, president of the National Neurofibromatosis Foundation, Inc. The severest case on record and the most celebrated is that of John Merrick, whose life was portrayed in the Broadway play and movie. "The Elephant Man."

There are 100,000 men, women and children with NF in the United States, according to Rudd. For most, the ailment is not life-threatening and may consist of nothing more than a few cafe au lait spots—brown marks that look like oversized freckles.

SYMPTOMS OF THE DISEASE

NF is characterized by the formation of tumors, generally benign, along nerves in the body. The tumors may be external, as in John Merrick's case, or predominantly internal as they are in the Geers.

Dr. Robert Martuza, head of the NF clinic at Massachusetts General Hospital, one of only five such clinics in the United States, says one child in every 3000 is born with NF. About one-quarter to one-third of all NF patients are seriously affected. This can be cosmetic, as when large tumors or discoloration appears on the face. It can be orthopedic, as in the case of a pre-school girl whose legs swelled to such gigantic proportions that she was anchored to one spot. Or it can be neurological, as in Barry Geer's case, where tumors press on arteries or critical nerves.

There is no screening test for NF, according to Martuza, no way to detect its presence through amniocentesis and no way to predict at birth whether a baby identified as an NF child will have severe or mild involvement.

Although it is considered a genetic disorder, about half the cases appear to arise from a spontaneous mutation of a gene. Once a person has NF, however, it can be passed to offspring. Since the NF gene is dominant, there is a 50-50 chance any child born to an NF parent will have the disease.

● This "bullet" symbol identifies statements or insertions which are not spoken by the Member on the floor.

Often a parent learns he or she has NF only after a child is diagnosed, according to Martuza. The disease can be mild in the parent and devastating in the child or the reverse. The disease seems to grow worse with the onset of adolescence and during pregnancy, perhaps because of hormonal changes.

There is no cure and no treatment in the usual sense of the word, Martuza says. Troublesome tumors may be removed through conventional surgery, by laser beam or by radiation, but they have a tendency to grow back.

Although NF was first described in 1786, there was no concentrated effort to study the disease or to help its victims and their families until five years ago when the National Neurofibromatosis Foundation Inc. was formed. Dr. Allan Rubenstein, associate professor of neurology at Mr. Sinai School of Medicine in New York City, remembers announcing that he was doing a research project on NF. "I was overwhelmed by the hundreds of people who sought us out. They were absolutely desperate. They never had access to any accurate, up-to-date information." Although textbooks stated that NF was common, Rubenstein is convinced that no one really believed it until the foundation was formed.

When Geer married his wife Evelyn, she was 16 and he 18. All went well for a year and a half. Then he suffered a hernia at work that couldn't be repaired because his muscles had deteriorated. Later he was told he had a brain tumor. Despite his desire to work, he was considered unemployable. He could not pass the physical exam required for many jobs. In addition, he says employers' assurances that they will hire the handicapped fly out the window when the handicap is neurological.

Geer says, "I don't let things like that get me down. If I sat and said that's it, that's what would happen." Instead, he has focused his attention on home and family. He has turned a house that was shabby when they moved in a couple of years back into an attractive neat-as-a-pin dwelling with a bountiful garden. He cans the vegetables he grows and has won prizes for canning and flowers at local fairs.

He remodeled his kitchen. When his blind eye kept him from seeing well enough to cut the paneling he wanted to install, his wife took over with the saw.

ENCOURAGES HIS SON

Geer encourages Timothy to keep going. In bright light, Timothy is considered legally blind. The boy gets frustrated because it's hard to do things that he once did easily such as ride his bike. A physical therapist visits the home twice each week to exercise Timothy in an effort to keep the muscle tone he has left.

Perhaps it is Evelyn Geer who has the hardest time. She simply cannot bring herself to talk about NF. What's more, she really does not want their other children tested to see if they have it. "My husband has it. My son has it. That's enough," she says.

As his way of fighting back against NF, Geer has been busy trying to get more publicity for the NF foundation in the hope that research will lead to a cure. Like other families coping with NF, the Geers hope Congress will pass a bill to establish a national commission on neurofibromatosis. The commission would assess the nature and extent of current research into NF and identify the research that would be needed to develop a cure.

In the meantime, Geer takes comfort from being in touch at last with other families with NF—some 300 of them in Massachusetts. He treasures a letter from one member of a local NF foundation chapter which ends. "We need each other to fight NF."●

TRIBUTE TO THE LATE HONORABLE WALTER FLOWERS

HON. GUS YATRON

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 2, 1984

● Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of former Congressman Peter Kyros and myself I would like to add my sentiments and deep regret at the loss of our colleague and friend, Walter Flowers.

Walter was a dedicated and effective legislator who served his State and the Nation with vigor and pride. His constant optimism revealed the deep and genuine love he had for the people he represented and their values.

He was a man of great intelligence who possessed that precious virtue which permitted him to be immensely persuasive yet always patient and gentlemanly.

He gave of himself unremittingly to serve the Nation and this was made abundantly clear in pursuing his duties on the Committee on Judiciary during those difficult days a decade ago. Of Walter it can be said, that his integrity and courage stand as an example to all of us who seek to serve with honor in the House.

We shall miss him not only because he was a great American but because his friendship and experience enriched and touched our lives.

I want to express my deepest sympathy to his family at this sorrowful time.●

SMALL BUSINESS PERSON OF THE YEAR AWARD

HON. CHARLES PASHAYAN, JR.

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. PASHAYAN. Mr. Speaker, once again I have the great pleasure to call the attention of my colleagues to the fact that the Small Business Administration has chosen for the second year in a row a business from the 17th District to receive the Small Business Administration's Small Business Person of the Year Award for the State of California. Last year's State winner also was chosen to receive the National Small Business Person of the Year Award during a ceremony presided over by President Reagan.

Motion Designs, Inc., of Clovis, Calif., is this year's State winner. The Small Business Person of the Year Award is given annually by the U.S. Small Business Administration to recognize the outstanding small business person of the year and to honor the individual contribution which a particular business has made to the community.

But Motion Designs, Inc., a new and rapidly growing small business that manufactures the lightweight "Quickie" wheelchair, is more than a success story of a small business venture. It is an example of personal achievement that can be attained by dedication and friendship, and is an illustration of strength and bravery of which all Americans can be proud. The success of both the people who are involved and the product that they manufacture is the result of the kind of innovation, hard work, and determination that has earned the United States a reputation as the land of opportunity.

The business was begun by three friends who transformed a great tragedy in their lives into a remarkable achievement. One of the business' founders, Marilyn Hamilton, who was an active sports enthusiast and expert skier, had a tragic accident when she fell more than 100 feet onto a rocky cliff while hang gliding. She became permanently paralyzed from the waist down. However, when Maryiln remained determined not to give up her active life, her two close friends, Don Helman and Jim Okamoto, helped her to design a lightweight high performance wheelchair that could be used in daily as well as in sports activities.

Thus, Motion Designs, Inc., was born as a backyard operation 4 years ago. Today it employs 32 people producing over 300 Quickie wheelchairs a month in a 17,000 square-foot building. The wheelchairs are sold throughout the United States, Canada, and northern Europe—a testament to initiative and perseverance.

I am therefore particularly honored to join in recognizing Motion Designs, Inc., because of the contribution that the business has made to the handicapped community. I should like to think that the example which these three people have set in strength and perseverance alone will be a guide to other business entrepreneurs who are struggling to make their ideas a similar success.●

REAGAN'S VOTE PLOY ON CRIME

HON. JAMES J. HOWARD

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, in our dealings with the administration it is sometimes difficult to separate the facts from the rhetoric. This was especially true recently when President Reagan criticized Congress for stalling anticrime legislation. Ironically, it was this President who last year vetoed a package of tough anticrime bills, most of which he had requested, because he disliked one of the bills. His opposition to this one particular bill had never been conveyed to the bill's chief sponsors, Judiciary Chairman PETER RODINO and Crime Subcommittee Chairman WILLIAM J. HUGHES.

I recommend that my colleagues read the following column printed in the Asbury Park (N.J.) Press of April 6, 1984:

REAGAN'S VOTE PLOY ON CRIME

(By Robin Goldstein)

Its scary when Ronald Reagan turns his considerable powers as a communicator on you. This President is very good at saying what people want to hear, and those who disagree with him can end up sore from his tongue-lashing.

The president is talking a lot lately about law and order. He thinks the Democrat-controlled House of Representatives is stalling the passage of anti-crime bills, and he is mad about it.

The brunt of his message has been falling on two New Jersey Congressmen with strong reputations for law and order—Rep. Peter W. Rodino, hero of the Watergate impeachment hearings, and Rep. William J. Hughes, a stern former county prosecutor.

The two Democrats are in charge of most anti-crime bills in the House, Rodino as chairman of the House Judiciary Committee and Hughes as head of the subcommittee on crime.

They are still smarting from a March 27 speech Reagan delivered to a group of insurance agents.

"Many of our citizens peer out of their dwellings, relying on bolts, chains and even metal bars propped grotesquely against their door . . . And even with all this, they do not feel safe," the president said. "It is about time the American people start asking who is to blame for this."

In that and other speeches, the president lays the blame on Democrats in the House of Representatives, who he says are dawdling instead of passing a package of anti-crime bills already approved by the Republican-dominated Senate.

"Maybe it's time to move some politicians out of office in order to get criminals off the streets," Reagan said.

The line got a lot of laughs from the insurance agents. But it belies the rather calculated and hypocritical way that the Reagan administration is pumping up the law-and-order issue as a reliable crowd-pleaser in an election year.

Reagan has taken some strange steps for a president who claims to worry so much about law-and-order bills.

In 1982, for example, Hughes and Rodino scrambled in the waning days of the congressional session to save a bunch of crime bills that would have died, abandoned, when Congress adjourned. Most were bills that Reagan had requested, and represented months of hearings and legislative haggling. Congress worked into the night to approve the package of crime bills Hughes and Rodino put together.

But when the package arrived on President Reagan's desk, he killed the whole thing with a pocket veto. It turned out that the president, unknown to Hughes, disliked one of seven bills in the package so he vetoed the whole thing.

"I was sick when I saw a year and a half of my work go down the drain with that veto," Hughes said.

The veto didn't stop the president from complaining in a February radio address that Congress hadn't passed a bill to seize the profits and assets of drug traffickers. "Why should any right-minded person oppose it?" he asked.

Reagan didn't tell his radio listeners across the country that the drug profits bill was part of the package of bills he had vetoed.

Hughes, a conservative Democrat often courted by the White House because he agrees with the president's law-and-order views, points to some other ways in which the administration has sent mixed signals on the law-and-order question.

The Reagan administration, he notes, has repeatedly tried to cut the budgets of various anti-crime agencies.

Republicans have been having a lot of fun with the law-and-order question lately, at the expense of the Democrats. One group brought a bottle to a press conference to demonstrate how the Democrats in the House have "bottled up" the anti-crime bills passed by the Senate.

It's hard to say whether the House is "bottling up" the Senate crime package. Things are more complicated in the House than in the Senate; on the House side, the 40 different bills in the Senate crime package have to be parceled out among seven different committees and subcommittees for hearings, consideration and a vote.

Hughes' crime subcommittee is one of the most active in Congress, moving bills on tampering with drugs and food, child pornography, and drug penalties, to name just a few. And other non-controversial bills are moving in other subcommittees.

Rodino and other members of the Judiciary Committee have constitutional qualms about some of the Senate-passed bills. One bill would prescribe the death penalty for certain federal crimes such as treason, and another would amend the exclusionary rule so that certain evidence illegally obtained by police can be used in court.

In the case of these bills, the subcommittee chairmen may be flexing their strongest muscle—the ability to keep a bill from getting voted on.●

RENT-PLUS SYSTEM DESIGNED FOR ALASKA

HON. DON YOUNG

OF ALASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, I am most concerned about a provision included in the House Armed Services Committee Report on the Department of Defense authorization. Section 602 of the report seeks to compensate service members who are stationed in either Alaska or Hawaii and who live off base under the variable housing allowance rather than the current rent-plus system. The rent-plus system was designed for Alaska and Hawaii in order to account for the large differences in housing costs in these States as compared with the lower 48. Seeking to treat service members who are stationed in my home State of Alaska like service members in other parts of the country overlooks the unusually high cost of living in Alaska. For example, the National Association of Realtors lists the average cost of buying a home in the United States in 1983 as $83,100. By comparison, in the Anchorage area, the average cost of buying a home is $123,204.

While section 602 does contain a grandfather clause for members already stationed in Alaska and Hawaii, I am concerned about those service members that will be assigned to Alaska in the future. The House Armed Services Committee has not been able to assure me that they will not have to endure sharp reductions in their total housing allowances and consequently suffer declines in their standard of living under VHA. I understand that the Department of Defense is opposed to section 602. While I am in favor of streamlining the operation of the Defense Department where feasible, we must not at the same time compromise the quality of life of our service members. Until a study has been completed on the probable effects of this proposed change on service members in Alaska and Hawaii, I urge the House to reject this proposal.●

ASYLUM FOR SALVADORAN REFUGEES

HON. JAMES L. OBERSTAR

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Speaker, as a cosponsor of H.R. 4447, legislation to impose a 3-year moratorium on the deportation of Salvadorans, I very much hope that the Congress will enact this humanitarian protection for the victims of the conflict within El Salvador.

Having been to El Salvador twice within the past 2 years, and having met with refugees in Central America, and in the United States, I know that the Salvadorans now in the United States would face grave risk if they are deported while the civil war continues in El Salvador.

H.R. 4447 offers the House the opportunity to provide temporary haven until the conflict within El Salvador is resolved.

I want to share with my colleagues a compassionate, perceptive call for enactment of this legislation which appeared in the St. Paul Dispatch on April 2, 1984. The editorial reflects the kind of commonsense, humanitarian approach on this issue which I find throughout Minnesota at this time.

I urge my colleagues to read the editorial and to consider joining the 136

House Members who, in a bipartisan manner, have cosponsored H.R. 4447.

A HUMANE DEPORTATION BILL

A 26-year-old Salvadoran national with the assumed name of Rene Hurtado is living illegally in the Twin Cities. St. Luke Presbyterian Church in Wayzata has been providing him sanctuary since December 1982.

Another young Salvadoran with the assumed name of Manuel is living illegally in Minnesota with the help of the Twin Cities Friends Meeting.

Each once served in the Salvadoran army and fled the country. Manuel says his father and brother were killed by the death squads. Both Manuel and Mr. Hurtado fear that they would be imprisoned, tortured or targeted by the death squads if they returned to their homeland.

To remain in the United States legally, without the protection of churches, the two would have to qualify for asylum by proving that they are specifically wanted by the killers. Failing that, the government would attempt to deport them back to El Salvador to an uncertain future. For many like Mr. Hurtado and Manuel, the risk of being denied asylum is terrifying and so they have sought protection from churches. The district director of immigration for the Twin Cities has referred to the churches' efforts as "nothing more than a smuggling ring."

The U.S. policy, which has seen thousands of illegal Salvadoran refugees returned to their homeland, is under increasing attack in this country, as it should be. On April 12, the U.S. House Subcommittee on Immigration, Refugees and International Law will hold hearings on a bill that would place a moratorium on detentions and deportations of Salvadoran nationals. It is a disgrace that such a compassionate act has not been taken by the Reagan administration up to now. It is appalling that Congress would need to pass a law forcing the administration to do what should have been done long ago. But there may be no other choice.

There are an estimated 300,000 to 500,000 illegal Salvadoran aliens living in the United States. Many fled in search of safety, hoping not to be added to the list of 40,000 civilians killed in the civil war since 1979. Others came less out of fear than in pursuit of jobs, and their claims for protection are less pure.

A section of U.S. immigration law is designed specifically for those from troubled nations who neither desire citizenship nor qualify for asylum, which by the way is a costly and time-consuming process that the United States is ill-equipped to handle quickly. The alternative is called "extended voluntary departure." This status simply allows aliens facing danger in their home countries to remain in the United States temporarily and receive authorization to work until conditions improve at home. Natives of Ethiopia, Lebanon, Poland, Uganda and Afghanistan currently are in the United States under that program. Are the Salvadorans any less worthy of such treatment? No.

The Reagan administration has been reluctant to grant either asylum or extended voluntary departure to Salvadorans. To do so would be an admission that the U.S.-supported regime is repressive. Further, the administration worries that such a step would encourage new illegal immigration. Another reason is that State Department officials believe Salvadorans could find refuge in countries closer to their home.

Those all sound like lame and cold-hearted excuses from leaders of a nation steeped in humanitarian treatment of frightened and endangered refugees.

The Congress in 1983 passed a nonbinding resolution recommending that Salvadorans be granted temporary special protection in the United States, saying that deporting them was "creating potentially life-threatening situations for innocent nationals. "However, the administration continues to deport about 100 Salvadorans a week.

The bill to be heard by the House immigration subcommittee would impose a moratorium of up to three years on deportation of displaced Salvadorans. Unquestionably, the bill should be approved and should enjoy the support of congressional delegations from Minnesota and western Wisconsin.●

ADJUSTABLE RATE MORTGAGES NOT SUCH A GOOD DEAL AFTER ALL?

HON. FERNAND J. ST GERMAIN

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Speaker, adjustable-rate mortgages or ARM's, as they are more popularly known, are held by nearly 2 million Americans. ARM's contain a provision that monthly payments change periodically along with prevailing interest rates. As interest rates go up, so do monthly payments, and as they come down, so do payment requirements. Unfortunately, the trend has been up rather than down, and as has been documented in recent hearings before the Banking Committee, the full impact of ARM's has yet to be felt inasmuch as many of these mortgages contain provisions regarding terms and constraints on the borrowers quite capable of producing delayed "payment shock" to the holder.

In an article carried in the April 27, 1984, issue of the Wall Street Journal, Joann S. Lublin has described some of the problems attendant to the ARM and has noted steps being mounted by the Federal National Mortgage Association, as recently outlined by Chairman David Maxwell, to soften or eliminate the harmful effects we anticipate will happen unless such steps are taken. So that my colleagues can be brought up to date on the implications of this development in the mortgage industry, I ask consent that the article be printed in the RECORD.

[From the Wall Street Journal, Apr. 27, 1984]

FANNIE MAE IS MOUNTING A MAJOR ASSAULT ON ABUSES OF ADJUSTABLE-RATE MORTGAGES

(By Joann S. Lublin)

WASHINGTON.—The Federal National Mortgage Association is mounting a major assault on some abuses in adjustable-rate mortgages, which have fueled the recent housing recovery.

With such mortgages, dubbed ARMs, monthly payments change periodically along with prevailing interest rates. Their lower initial rates have made homes available to millions of families in recent months. Roughly two million home buyers have taken out more than $120 billion in ARMs since 1981. Industry figures show that they accounted for more than 75 percent of the $13 billion in new home loans made in February.

Fannie Mae is worried because certain ARMs, largely marketed in Texas, California and the Southeast, provide first-year interest rates far below those of fixed-rate mortgages but with little or no limit on increase in future mortgage payments. With such arrangements, "consumers could be turned off on an instrument that's essential, and secondly, the issue could become politicized," warned David Maxwell, chairman of the government-sponsored, privately owned association, in an interview. Yet AMRs "are the key to the long-term solvency of our financial institutions," he added.

The association's crackdown is taking three forms: A call to the lending industry to police the problem ARMs, restrictions on the type of ARMs Fannie Mae buys and inauguration of a consumer-education program. Its efforts carry considerable clout; Fannie Mae, the nation's leading supplier of home mortgage funds, holds nearly $9 billion of ARMs in its $80 billion mortgage portfolio.

Mr. Maxwell is expected to emphasize Fannie Mae's concerns in a speech today before the Texas Mortgage Bankers Association in Fort Worth. A line exists "between helping home buyers fulfill their aspirations and encouraging them to borrow beyond their means," Mr. Maxwell's prepared remarks state. "And we who care about the long-term health of the housing and mortgage industries should be the first to turn the spotlight on abuses in the marketplace."

The low initial rates, called "teasers," often fall in the 7 percent to 10 percent range, but Mr. Maxwell said they're as low as 4⅞ percent in parts of Texas. Conventional mortgages are averaging about 13.67 percent, according to the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corp. The spread of deeply discounted ARMs, without restrictions on future boosts in interest rates or mortgage payments, "carry the inevitable threat of payment shock," his speech points out.

"Payment shock" refers to the unexpected blow consumers could feel if they haven't budgeted for the possibility of much higher loan payments. A subsequent wave of defaults on ARMs "would be both an economic and political disaster for mortgage lenders," Mr. Maxwell predicts in the speech.

Fannie Mae has decided to generally stop buying ARMs with initial rates more than 2.5 percentage points below those of fixed-rate mortgages. The chairman also said the association won't purchase ARMs unless they limit interest-rate adjustment to a maximum of two percentage points a year.

"We know that the industry doesn't move in lock-step with Fannie Mae," Mr. Maxwell says in his speech. "But we hope that the market will move toward our standard—because our standard, we believe, is the right one."

In the interview, he expressed hope that lenders would eliminate deeply-discounted ARMs and better educate borrowers about their obligations under adjustable-rate mortgages. He said Fannie Mae will publish brochures to help lenders explain these responsibilities.

The lending industry likely will heed Mr. Maxwell's suggestions, as they come on the heels of recent similar expressions of concern by mortgage insurers and the Federal Reserve Board's vice chairman, Preston Martin.

And yesterday, in a speech to the Texas Mortgage Bankers group, Kenneth Thygerson, president of the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corp., said the government-connected corporation also is trying to craft a model Adjustable Rate Mortgage, with fuller disclosure of terms and constraints on borrowers' payment adjustments.

"The majority of lenders understand and will work to police themselves and probably tighten up in general," said Mark Riedy, executive vice president of the Mortgage Bankers Association of America. They don't want "to bring down the government in the ARMs area because ARMs are seen as a good way to make housing affordable to more families." ●

WHAT ROME NEVER LEARNED ABOUT WELFARE

HON. DANIEL B. CRANE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. DANIEL B. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, in this Chamber we often forget the wisdom of Confucius' advice: "Give a man a fish, feed him for a day; Teach a man to fish, feed him for a lifetime."

Liberals have ignored that aphorism, and the result is the intellectual bankruptcy of liberalism.

This is hardly the first time in history that well-intentioned social schemes have gone awry. The following article, reprinted from the Farmers' Almanac in the Farmland News, tells of another government which ignored the necessity of teaching to fish and perished. I am indebted to my constituent, Mr. Darrell Tracy of Rossville, Ill., for bringing it to my attention:

WHAT ROME NEVER LEARNED ABOUT WELFARE

History teaches us little because we always assume we are generations wiser than those who have gone before us. We take no heed, even when certain phases of history parallel our own.

History is a series of played-out dramas whose endings are known to us, yet we feel that this time the ending will be different. And because of this, we are always surprised when the curtain closes on the same ending after having followed the same plot.

History provides us, for example, with a clear look at the terrible drain the dole, or welfare, places upon a total society; worse yet, how it sometimes destroys those it professes to assist.

Almost a century before Christ, wealthy Roman landowners began driving the small farmers off the land in droves. The small, or individual, farmers could not compete with the great farms of the rich, so were forced to sell their land at whatever price the rich offered. Having then been deprived of their livelihoods, these farmers moved into Rome with their families. They were the panis frumentari, the urban unemployed. They were given grain from government stores on a regular monthly basis.

In 72 B.C., these unemployed reached a total of some 40,000. Thirty years later, under Julius Caesar, then numbers were more than 200,000.

Around 27 B.C., Augustus tried to reduce the number on welfare by refusing "those whose needs were pretended." He failed, for too many had been accustomed to free grain for too long.

Along with this great drain, Augustus had problems with the grain merchants. This group would occasionally withhold grain so as to force up the price, so a large supply of state grain was kept on hand to dump on the market whenever prices got too high.

To conduct welfare in an orderly fashion, a grain control token was issued (like our food stamps). The first of these were made of bronze and carried a portrait of the ruling emperor. Later, lead tokens were issued that could be redeemed weekly.

Under Emperor Aurelius (270-275 A.D.) the distribution of bread began instead of grain. Now, those on welfare didn't even have to grind their own grain or bake their own bread. It is recorded that on the first day bread was given out, more than 300,000 persons gathered in the narrow streets before the bakeries (which were now nationalized) to redeem their tokens. Traffic was tied up for hours.

One recorder of the times says: "Under the system, the unemployed were encouraged to multiply, for those with more children received more bread." (Sound familiar?)

The State also had to set up an army of officials and clerks to administer this program, so the program became even more costly.

What followed was ironical, but seemingly just. The large landowners were required to pay larger and larger shares of their grain in taxes so that Rome could continue to feed the unemployed. Taxes became so great that one landowner remarked: "It is no longer a privilege to be a Roman, but a burden!"

Why weren't the unemployed given jobs? The State had no means set up to do this, so as a result, children grew up without trades, without proper education and many would spend their whole lives on welfare. And because of this many turned to crime.

Rome never learned that when you give a man bread with one hand, you take away something else with the other hand—his incentive, his dignity. But when you give him work for his hands, he will supply his own needs.

Today, thousands stand around on street corners, victims of welfare, while cities decay for lack of repairs.—Martin Buxbaum.●

THOSE PENTAGON "CUTS"

HON. MIKE SYNAR

OF OKLAHOMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. SYNAR. Mr. Speaker, as I recall, last year's proponents of the MX could put forth only one straight-faced argument for building this $20 billion weapon: It would serve as the stick needed to whip the Soviets to the bargaining table. We can see now how effective the MX is at forcing negotiations—for the first time in decades there are no U.S.-Soviet arms control discussions.

With the "bargaining chip" argument now dead and buried, the absurdity of placing a new and improved ICBM in existing Minuteman silos is fully apparent. There remains no justification for building the MX.

I commend to the attention of my colleagues the following editorial from the Tulsa World, which provides an excellent discussion of the relationship of the MX to the Pentagon's spendthrift budget.

The article follows:

THOSE PENTAGON "CUTS"

One would almost think, from reading recent news accounts, that Congress has finally decided to draw the reins on runaway defense spending. Last week, the House passed a budget resolution trimming defense spending. The House Armed Services Committee recently voted to cut $19 billion in defense spending.

But wait.

The "cuts" in defense spending really only trim the projected increase in Pentagon spending. It's like saying that instead of spending $30 billion more than last year on military hardware, we'll only spend $25 billion more. See, we've "saved" $5 billion.

No one contends that America does not need to rebuild its defenses. But that will not be accomplished by throwing money at the Pentagon any more than poverty was eliminated by throwing money at it.

Astronomical cost overruns on parts and equipment are well documented. By now everyone has heard of the thousand dollar screwdrivers the Pentagon is so fond of purchasing.

Beyond that, however, the U.S. is not spending money wisely. Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan has pointed out the unreasonableness of spending billions of dollars on the MX missile. The MX is supposed to be a more modern missile to replace the Minuteman, now considered too vulnerable to be an effective weapon. But plans now call for the MX to be located in old Minuteman silos, making the new missiles just as vulnerable as the old ones.

In short, there is ample room in the Pentagon budget to both cut waste and rebuild our military might. Present defense spending proposals do not accomplish either objective.●

PROFESSIONAL DEVELOPMENT RESOURCE CENTER ACT

HON. WILLIAM D. FORD

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing the Professional Development Resource Center Act of 1984. In recent years overwhelming evidence has mounted demonstrating the need for renewed efforts to assist our Nation's elementary and secondary schools in the pursuit of educational excellence. After numerous national reports, considerable media attention and many public opinion polls, two facts have become crystal clear. The first is that we have placed very high expectations on our public schools. At a time when schools are dealing with an ever more diverse school-age population, we are also asking them to produce a better educated and better prepared generation than at any time in our history. The second fact is that in order to accomplish this ambitious goal, our schools and the people in them require the full support, cooperation, and encouragement of all levels of government.

Mr. Speaker, this bill addresses these needs. It responds to one very central concern: Continuing education for teachers in the classroom. My bill will provide those on the frontline of education, the classroom teachers, with essential year-round opportunities for improvement and renewal. The bill gives the Secretary of Education the authority to make competitive grants to local school districts for the establishment of locally developed professional development resource centers. These centers will design activities to assist classroom teachers in expanding their professional capabilities. Furthermore, these centers will not offer activities for teachers but will design and conduct activities with the full involvement of teachers at every stage. It is clear that unless teachers have a stake in defining the activities that will foster their own professional growth, they will be less likely to be motivated by or benefit fully from them. Activities of the centers will include updating and expanding subject matter expertise, applying the latest educational research to the classroom, exploring new educational tools and their use in instruction, teaching new technologies and their applications, and developing curriculum materials.

Mr. Speaker, to those who are all too ready to complain about incompetent teachers in our elementary and secondary schools, I would suggest that they should accept an equal if not, in fact, greater obligation to foster the conditions that enhance teaching competence. Local school systems must also be willing to undertake this obligation. However, most school systems today are hard pressed for the funds to meet their basic operating costs. Allocating additional resources to the professional development of teachers is too often near the end of a school district's "wish list." Federal leadership and assistance and modest financial support is crucial to the development of our Nation's teacher force. If we are to demand professionalism from our teachers we must provide them with the means to fulfill that demand.

While there has been considerable attention focused on critical shortages of math, science, and foreign language teachers, we must not fail to make provisions for the broader problem of the continuous development of our Nation's teaching force. Every day 2.8 million teachers face classrooms filled with 40 million students. The majority of teachers are now between the ages of 32 and 42. Although new teachers will be needed as the school-age population begins a projected slow but steady climb, the bulk of our teaching force for the next two decades is already in the profession. We must invest resources to assist today's classroom teachers in expanding their knowledge and abilities. If we want people of intelligence, spirit, and capacity for growth teaching our children, we must offer such people constructive and creative mechanisms to nurture those qualities. We cannot ask teachers to instill the love of learning in their students without providing them with the means to continue learning themselves. I believe this bill is a useful step in that direction. I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this piece of legislation.●

TRIBUTE TO JOHN KELLY OF THE MARCH OF DIMES

HON. ROBERT G. TORRICELLI

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. TORRICELLI. Mr. Speaker, it was once said, "Every one of us is given the gift of life, and what a strange gift it is. If it is preserved jealously and selfishly, it impoverishes and saddens. But if it is spent for others, it enriches and beautifies."

In his many years of service to the Long Island chapter of the March of Dimes, John Kelly has enriched the lives of many. Through his generosity of spirit and devotion to the cause of mankind, John has made a tremendous contribution toward eliminating the incidence of birth defects in our country. John symbolized to us all the best that an individual can do to help his fellow man.

I am honored to have such a distinguished constituent as John Kelly and I am pleased that the Long Island chapter will be honoring his efforts at a dinner on May 18.

I ask that all of my colleagues join with me in paying tribute to John Kelly who has done so much to further the cause of research against childhood diseases.●

THE NATIONAL GUARD MEMORIAL: A TRIBUTE TO THE NATION

HON. JACK F. KEMP

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. KEMP. Mr. Speaker, today marks the 25th anniversary of the dedication of the National Guard Memorial and the first permanent home of the National Guard Association of the United States. The occasion was celebrated with a spectacular ceremony in which every Guard organization in the country was represented. The dedication speech was delivered by a former colonel in the Officer Reserve Corps, former President Harry S. Truman.

The building is a fitting memorial to honor the brave men and women who have volunteered to serve, protect, and, if need be, to fight for their country throughout the history of the National Guard—a history that predates the founding of this Nation. To commemorate this special occasion, I would like to share with my colleagues the reminiscences of the ceremony by Maj. Gen. Bruce Jacobs, publisher of the National Guard magazine, and a noted military historian.

The article follows:

THE NATIONAL GUARD MEMORIAL: A TRIBUTE TO THE NATION

Who was the ancient philosopher who uttered those immortal words to the effect that time sure flies when you're having fun? We are constantly reminded of the great underlying truth to this sentiment. Why it was only yesterday—or was it just last week—that we came down to the nation's capital to help open the spanking new National Guard Memorial on the northest corner of North Capitol and Massachusetts just down the street, so to speak, from the glistening majesty of the seat of government. The date, for those of you who appreciate historic accuracy, was May 3, 1959. What is that you say? Twenty-five years ago? Surely you jest.

One of the perks of being an aide to a senior National Guard general officer during that period was the opportunity to journey to Washington, D.C., to take part in the dedication activities. In fact, the general had kindly volunteered my services to the Association, and I was dispatched a week or so before the actual festivities to help Colonel Jim Deerin, who was the Association's "PR" man in those days. Not that Jim, who was one of the most "unflappable" of men, needed a lot of help; but anyone can use a "gofer" when the going gets hectic. It was, for a captain, a week of intense excitement highlighted by the opportunity of a lifetime to meet and to talk with some of the legendary Guardsmen one knew about from historical accounts and to find that they really existed!

It helps to understand the occasion if you put the spring of 1959 into perspective. It was only six years since the end of the fighting in Korea and 14 years since the end of World War II. In fact, it was only 40 years since the end of World War I—which is to say that the WWI veteran was no more of a phenomenon than are WWII veterans today! How about that, sports fans?

An astonishing number of the old soldiers who made that formation on May 3, 1959, has seen service in both world wars. Unquestionably, the dean of this group was the legendary Major General Milton A. Reckord of Maryland. My boss was Major General Donald W. McGowan, then assistant chief of the National Guard Bureau (Army) under Major General Edgar C. Erickson, who was chief, McGowan loved to recall that he had served as an 18-year-old battalion sergeant-major in the infantry regiment that Reckord commanded in the old 29th Division.

It is a matter of sheer coincidence that just a few weeks before getting started on this essay, we had a really nice letter from a retired major general named John C. Henagan, who had relinquished his command of the 51st Infantry Division sometime before the Memorial was opened. He is now nearly 90 years old but he was writing to ask where to find a particular history book he was anxious to read. On that date 25 years ago when the building dedication took place, he stood patiently in line behind Major Charles A. Barclay from Salem, Oregon, who gained the distinction of being the first to sign the guest register on that grand and colorful day. It also should be added that it was an incredibly hot day.

Henagan, who had come up to Washington from Dillon, South Carolina, for the occasion, was but one of the great names out of the past who took part in the stirring formation. Generals there were in platoons and many dozens of lesser rank as well. Among us captains of that day were Jim Lee of Utah (who would later be a War College classmate) and Byron L. (Barney) Dukes of Indiana. There were lieutenants, too, including Donn Devine of Delaware, Jose Canals of Puerto Rico and Nick Anacelli of Rhode Island, to mention just a few.

It is sometimes forgotten that the Guard had to come back from scratch after WW II. The Association was little more than a "Corporal's Guard" of determined but very senior people who, in many cases, had been denied the opportunity to serve in the war. They kept the Association alive, and they saw to it that the War Department included the Guard in its planning for military forces in the period after the end of hostilities.

In effect, a new National Guard Association emerged after WW II. The new Constitution & By-laws adopted at Buffalo, New York, in 1946 provided for individual memberships, it authorized the establishment of a "headquarters" in the nation's capital, and it founded the first Association publication, The National Guardsman—now National Guard magazine. From that time forward it was a foregone conclusion that one day there would be a building that would house the headquarters and would provide a National Guard Association "presence" in the city where the fortunes of the Guard would be influenced by the inclinations of the executive and legislative branches of government.

A few months after the dedication, Walsh, who had guided the affairs of the Association longer than anyone in the history of the NGAUS, had an opportunity to reflect upon the events that had taken place in the two years since he had put aside the mantle of leadership. "I think," he said in reference to the event in May, "the proudest moment in my life was when I stood at that rostrum and witnessed the dedication of probably one of the most beautiful buildings in all of America. . . ."

As we look at it, in the light of the passage of 25 years since its doors were first opened, it is indeed a beautiful edifice. We would venture to say, however, that the beauty is less in the architectural accomplishment as compared with the sacrifice and contribution of the many members of the National Guard who made it possible and whose dedicated service continues to make it a living centerpiece in the mosaic that depicts the contributions of the traditional "militia soldier" to each state . . . and to the nation.●

WALTER FLOWERS

HON. JOE MOAKLEY

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 2, 1984

● Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I commend the able gentleman from Pennsylvania for affording Members this opportunity to pay tribute to our late colleague from Alabama, Walter Flowers.

Walter's dedicated service in the House is well known to all Members. He was an able legislator, a honorable man, and a good friend. We will all miss him.

As a member of the Committee on the Judiciary, during the difficult and important events of 1974, he brought to bear his considerable intelligence and decency to make an important contribution.

He also offered his State and the Nation important service through his membership on the Committee on Science and Technology during the maturing years in which the legislative jurisdiction of that committee developed in importance.

In 1977, he relinquished a subcommittee chairmanship on the prestigious Committee on the Judiciary, in order to provide the leadership needed on the Science Subcommittee on Fossil and Nuclear Energy, as the committee began to exercise the expanded responsibilities caused by the abolishment of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy.

As subcommittee chairman, he provided important leadership to Congress in this important area, and contributed to the important gains made by his district and his State in the development of a strong new base of technology. I think Walter's distinguished service in this area provides all Members with a model for how a Member can fairly and intelligently balance the interests of his constituency and the Nation.

Mr. Speaker, I join my friend from Pennsylvania in extending my deepest sympathy to Walter's wife, Beverly, and the rest of the family. They have some fine memories of Walter to sustain them over the years, as do all of us here.●

RENUNCIATION OF THE CROWN

HON. FERNAND J. ST GERMAIN

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Speaker, on May 4, 1776, the General Assembly of the colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations broke its ties with King George III and declared itself free and independent from any allegiance to Great Britain. Rhode Island was the first of the original colonies to declare its independence and to mark the anniversary of this auspicious occasion, I am entering the following copy of Rhode Island's Renunciation of the Crown, which has been provided by the Rhode Island Heritage Commission.

RENUNCIATION OF THE CROWN

An ACT repealing an Act entitled, "An Act for the more effectually securing to his Majesty the Allegiance of his Subjects, in this his Colony and Dominion of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations;" and altering the Forms of Commissions, of all Writs and Processes in the Courts, and of the Oaths prescribed by Law.

Whereas in all States existing by Compact, Protection and Allegiance are reciprocal, the latter being only due in Consequence of the former: And whereas GEORGE the Third, King of Great-Britain, forgetting his Dignity, regardless of the Compact most solemnly entered into, ratified and confirmed, to the Inhabitants of this Colony, by His illustrious Ancestors, and till of late fully recognized by Him—and entirely departing from the Duties and Character of a good King, instead of protecting, is endeavouring to destroy the good People of this Colony, and of all the United Colonies, by sending Fleets and Armies to America, to confiscate our Property, and spread Fire, Sword and Desolation, throughout our Country, in order to compel us to submit to the most debasing and detestable Tyranny; whereby we are obliged by Necessity, and it becomes our highest Duty, to use every Means, with which God and Nature have furnished us, in Support of our invaluable Rights and Privileges; to oppose that Power which is exerted only for our Destruction.

Be it therefore Enacted by this General Assembly, and by the Authority thereof it is Enacted, That an Act entitled, "An Act for the more effectual securing to His Majesty the Allegiance of his Subjects in this his Colony and Dominion of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations," be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Clerk of the house, Josias Lyndon, wrote: "Resolved that the aforementioned written pass as an act of this assembly."

It was read and approved in the upper house the same day, as attested by Henry Ward, secretary.

HOW TO SUCCEED IN MEDICAL PRACTICE IN 1984

HON. RICHARD C. SHELBY

OF ALABAMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. SHELBY. Mr. Speaker, an article in the New England Journal of Medicine, March 15, 1984, edition, has come to my attention, and I want to share it with my colleagues. The article's incisive and thought provoking content makes it worthy of your consideration. As a member of a subcommittee that has been pondering the issues posed by this article, I found it particularly noteworthy.

Of special interest, however, is the article's author. I'm proud to note that Dr. John F. Burnum is my constituent and a valued and highly respected resident of my hometown of Tuscaloosa, Ala.

Dr. Burnum writes from a vast amount of experience. With an undergraduate degree from the University of Alabama, Dr. Burnum went to Harvard Medical School, graduating cum laude in 1950. After residencies at Cornell Medical Center and the Medical College of Alabama, and a fellowship at Duke, Dr. Burnum entered the private practice of internal medicine in Tuscaloosa in 1954. For a number of years, he has also been a clinical professor of medicine at the University of Alabama School of Medicine in Birmingham and its College of Community Health Sciences in Tuscaloosa. He also serves as a consultant to the VA hospitals in Birmingham and Tuscaloosa.

He reviews articles for several internal medicine journals as well as being a regular contributor of articles to such prestigious journals as the New England Journal of Medicine and the Journal of the American Medical Association. He has addressed numerous medical groups and serves in many advisory positions and on many professional committees.

Dr. Burnum writes not as a bureaucrat with no feel for the realities of medical practice. He writes as a seasoned practitioner, a man sensitive to the subtleties of treating the complex creatures that human beings are.

THE UNFORTUNATE CASE OF DR. Z: HOW TO SUCCEED IN MEDICAL PRACTICE IN 1984

The following address was given by Merin Gip, the Regional Inspector Commissioner of the Bureau of Health Care Delivery, at the 1984 inaugural meeting of the Coalition of Health-Care Providers and Consumers.

As Regional Inspector Commissioner of the Bureau of Health-Care Delivery, I wish to give an account of the unfortunate case of Dr. Z. This material is drawn from the hearing in which he was stripped of his hospital privileges and placed on probationary office practice because of failure to adjust to the new medicine. The hearing was occasioned by conjoined charges brought by the National Board of Hospital Administrators and ourselves, the state, Amici curiae included the U.S. Advertising Council and Statistical Analysands, Inc.

Dr. Z's rebellious obstinacy first came to our attention in the early 1970s. His dossier was soon swollen with complaints from many quarters—from our PSRO-PRO secretarial corps and data coordinators to high officials in the business and management of the medical industry. From the very outset, he failed to submit diagnoses that matched the computer disease and procedure codes. What was more, he refused to accept the guiding principles of the new medicine; that the encounter with the patient—the illness episode—is accurately and completely defined by a disease diagnosis (along with its accompanying tests and procedures), and that for every such disease there is a corresponding technological treatment.

Dr. Z insisted that patients came to see him for many reasons other than the presence of a specific disease. According to him, some wanted to establish themselves with a physician, so that if they were to become ill, they would have someone to call on who was familiar with them and their medical history. Others came for a medical evaluation, as a wise health practice or as a practical necessity, before embarking on a new business venture. Dr. Z believed that many patients came because of fear: if a good friend had just been found to have inoperable cancer, they might wish to know whether they had the same illness or whether their chest pain was due to heart disease. Many others came for genetic counseling, for advice on precautions to take when traveling abroad, for help in trying to decide whether to have surgery or take a new drug for gallstones, or for one of the many other reasons that people seek expert knowledge from professionals. Finally, according to Dr. Z, a visit whose purpose was disguised by an account of physical symptoms may simply have been made for the purpose of talking about the patient's troubles.

Moreover, Dr. Z claimed that when a disease was present, it was often just one of many diseases, each varying in severity from patient to patient, and usually inextricably mixed with emotional distress and adjustment difficulties—all components of the illness. Dr. Z claimed that illness is therefore unique and difficult to define by disease codes. Two similar patients may have identical grades of emphysema as described by pulmonary-function tests, but one may work without complaints and the other may apply for early retirement benefits; thus, the patients' feelings, their reactions to their disease, count.

Dr. Z's heretical views and his failure to code properly struck at the very heart of the new medicine: the data-collecting computer network. I need hardly remind you that in addition to using disease codes to pay for services and define treatment, we profile all physicians by these code numbers and corresponding costs per case. As a statistician, I can assure you that this gives us a complete picture of every physician's professional life and value to the health-delivery system. There is little that happens in American medicine that is not known to us. Therefore, Dr. Z was quickly singled out as a dyscodic outlier and heterogenicist. He was exposed as the shameless statistical deviate that he is.

With PSRO-PRO and then DRGs, Dr. Z's alienation from the new medicine worsened. Patients go to hospitals for acute illnesses, and naming their disease tells us all we need to know about the patients and their treatment. Dr. Z always seemed to be bogged down in the process of health-care delivery—in taking care of the patient, as he puts it—instead of stressing outcome. When asked by the review clerk for a patient's diagnosis and treatment plan, Dr. Z was known to reply that he was thinking, that he was trying to figure out what was wrong with the patient, and that this would involve studying and choosing the most appropriate tests to reach a diagnosis. He would then spend more time reading about the best treatment of the disorder, which in some cases might be nothing—that is, no technologic intervention. How can our peer-review data collectors deal with this kind of talk?

On another occasion Dr. Z said that explanation was the treatment. A patient with vertigo, who had been rushed to the hospital on several occasions thinking that he was dying, was told of the painful but harmless nature of the attacks and that he required no subsequent hospital care. Dr. Z asserted that, in addition to providing scientific expertise, physicians should express concern about their patients, gain their confidence and cooperation, and give them—and their families—peace of mind.

My answer to Dr. Z, of course, is that we have no code or audit criteria for explanation and reassurance or for what he calls "personal care." Our audit criteria were configured by experts and have been declared accurate and complete. Dr. Z's lame defense has been to say that the patient is not a disease and that the care of the patient is what counts. Tell that to a computer!

Despite mandatory attendance at indoctrination sessions, Dr. Z seemed incapable of understanding and participating in the new mission of hospitals—thus, his loss of hospital privileges. He was never able to think of medicine as an industry and view a hospital as a business. He was rude to the hospital's vice-president for marketing and opposed the plans to operate a health spa, give free cardiovascular stress tests to executives, and sell aloe tonic in the hospital gift shop, as well as all the other numerous publicity and selling strategies proposed by the marketing department. He could not see that hospitals have to be consumer-oriented, that they must sell what the consumer wants, nor would he support the hospital's policy, determined by strict cost accounting, of providing services to the public that are profitble and eliminating those that are not. His opposition to dropping the teaching program was particularly offensive.

Dr. Z is wrong. Hospitals are businesses, and the success of a doctor depends on the success of the hospital. Professional qualifications are not enough. The bottom line is whether the doctor can contribute to the hospital's overall marketing plan. Promotions and staff privileges will depend on whether doctors are winners or losers for the hospital. Low-paying-DRG profilers must go. The practice of medicine must change. There must be greater emphasis on hospital productivity and efficiency. Cost accounting must be part of physicians' grand rounds.

In today's world doctors and hospitals cannot succeed without computers. We must think in terms of DRG trees, outliers, hardware, and software; indeed, we must learn to think like computers. We can no longer look at patients as persons, but must view them as output or input, or as products. We must learn to manage product lines, to get into the habit of defining our output by product. Heart failure and shock, DRG 127, are now products.

We have made Dr. Z a test case in behavior modification and rehabilitation. He first felt the impact of monetary disincentives when he lost his hospital privileges. After thinking-adjustment sessions, he was given training in computer coding, advertising, market analysis, and selling strategies. At first I was optimistic about his progress, but I am told that he recently turned down our suggestion that he retain a publicity agent for his practice. When requested to be a preferred provider, he pulled out the old saw that physicians should be preferred for no reason other than their professional qualifications and abilities and that he did not like to be called a health-care provider in the first place. He has failed to understand the necessity of shifting the emphasis in medicine from personal services to a return on capital. He clings to the archaic belief that medicine is an ethical rather than a commercial enterprise. Our proposed time frame for developing his new mind set is short. If he cannot adapt to the new medicine, that is too bad; there are plenty coming along who will.

INTERNATIONAL LAW TAKING ITS LUMPS

HON. TIMOTHY E. WIRTH

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. WIRTH. Mr. Speaker, many of us have been deeply concerned about the policy of this administration—ignoring and flaunting international law.

I wanted to share with my colleagues the following article, written by Matthew Nimetz, former counselor of the State Department and Under Secretary of State:

The article follows:

[From the Rocky Mountain News, Denver Colo., Apr. 23, 1984]

INTERNATIONAL LAW TAKING ITS LUMPS

(By Matthew Nimetz)

International law, never a dominating force in world affairs has taken a battering in recent years. Many Americans seem indifferent to this years. Many Americans seem indifferent to this trend and even scornful of the rule of law. In this, they are courting disaster. They do not see that it is in the interest of the United States, which stands to lose the most in a state of world anarchy, to take the lead in upholding international law and the institutions that can protect it.

Again and again, token observance of the rule of law now gives way to cynical disregard, which in turn gives way to overt violation. The Soviet Union regularly violates human rights covenants and the Helsinki Final Act and has now added the invasion and occupation of Afghanistan to its suppression of self-government in Hungary, Czechoslovakia and Poland. Airplane hijackings, assassinations and other acts of terrorism are increasing throughout the world without concerted international reaction. Iran and Iraq openly flout the rule of law, Iran by its torture and genocidal policies toward adherents of the Bahai faith and Iraq by its use of chemical warfare against Iran.

Nor does the United States have a much better record. The Reagan administration has at best ignored and often transgressed basic rules of international conduct. Consider, for example, the questionable embargo occasioned by the European-Soviet natural-gas pipeline, the invasion of Grenada, the active support of armed warfare to destabilize Nicaragua, the mining of Nicaraguan harbors and most recently the withdrawal of Central American disputes from the jurisdiction of the World Court.

What are we to make of this alarming trend? Many people simply dismiss international law: It has never been strictly observed, and mechanisms for enforcement are at best weak and imperfect. Moreover, this argument goes, the Soviet Union and radical third world countries are routinely cavalier about international rules of conduct. But these observations miss the important point: A world composed of 160-odd fractious nations, if it is to grope forward to a more civilized regime, needs to strengthen the fragile strands of international law, not tear them down.

When the United States petulantly refuses to play by the rules it took the lead in establishing, we lose credibility with friendly governments and world opinion. We also make it more difficult to establish ground rules for relations with the third world and the Soviet Union.

Of course, in the face of the Soviet Union's open cynicism toward international law, the United States must reserve its freedom of action, particularly where our vital interests are at stake. But the United States cannot emulate the Soviet Union in international affairs. To do so is to expose ourselves to embarrassment, domestic discord and international repudiation.

The exercise of world leadership requires us to take international law seriously, and this in turn requires an intellectual integrity and self-discipline among our leaders that has been lacking. It also requires American public opinion, reflected through the Congress and through private organizations, including the organized bar, to focus greater attention on violations of international law wherever they occur.

When America accepts this responsibility, we enhance our leadership in the world community. To try to match the Russians in deviousness or the Libyans in irresponsibility or the Iranians in brutality is not only wrong but impossible for a country with our political culture, or allies and our long-term interests.●

THE 200TH ANNIVERSARY OF NORTH HEMPSTEAD

HON. ROBERT J. MRAZEK

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. MRAZEK. Mr. Speaker, this year, the town of North Hempstead celebrates its 200th anniversary. The story of how North Hempstead gained its separate identity tells much about its inhabitants, past and present. Today, I would like to congratulate the people of North Hempstead and tell a little of their story.

North Hempstead was originally inhabited by the Matinecock Indians. In 1643, settlers from New England purchased land along the north shore of Long Island from the Matinecocks and began farming and lumbering. Within a few years, Dutch colonists arrived from New Amsterdam and other settlements to the west. By the early 1770's, Hempstead was increasingly divided between these earlier, anti-British residents in the north and later, pro-British residents in the south.

The first clear break between the two sides came in 1774 when a committee of northern Hempsteaders was formed to cooperate with the Continental Congress. Tory opposition to this move was so strong that North Hempstead seceded on September 23, 1775, and declared itself an independent township. Within 2 weeks, North Hempstead had elected Col. John Sands to lead the local militia company in the fight for independence.

Freedom was brief for these early patriots as the British Army occupied the new town less than a year later during the summer of 1776. Over the nearly 8 years of occupation, North Hempstead's leading citizens were arrested, its thriving forest decimated, and its residents abused by enemy troops quartered in homes throughout the township. Though occupied and oppressed, the rebels continued to fight back by capturing a British sloop in 1777 and raiding the house of Colonel Ludlow in 1779. After almost 8 long years of brutal occupation and a further 6 months of uncertainty, the town members' courage and patriotism were rewarded on April 14, 1784, when New York State officially created the separate township of North Hempstead.

Since its founding as a distinct township 200 years ago, North Hempstead has gone through several phases of development. In the 1800's, the town was best known for its abundant and excellent agricultural production, particularly its milling industry and its apples, potatoes, and milk. This century's increased transportation links between the town and New York City fed local industrial growth at the expense of farming. The postwar migration to the suburbs vastly increased the town's population and opened the way for the new office complexes, distribution centers, and warehouses. Finally, North Hempstead has long been an artistic center including amongst its inhabitants the writers F. Scott Fitzgerald, P. G. Wodehouse, and Christopher Morley, and the musicians George M. Cohan and John Philip Sousa.

With such a noble history, residents of North Hempstead are justifiably proud of the 200th anniversary of their township and the badge of patriotism they earned fighting for their independence from Hempstead's Tories and Britain's King George III. The bravery and suffering of North Hempsteaders at the time of independence, including such Revolutionary War heroes as Col. John Sands and Supervisor Adrian Onderdonck as well as hundreds of ordinary citizens, continues to inspire today's residents of the town 200 years later. I am confident that North Hempstead's next 200 years will be as colorful and as inspiring as those just experienced.●

HON. ROMANO L. MAZZOLI

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 2, 1984

● Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, I am saddened at the passing of my good friend and former colleague, Walter Flowers of Alabama.

Walter and I worked together for many years as colleagues on the House Judiciary Committee. We also worked together on the Administrative Law Subcommittee where Walter served as my chairman.

Walter and I used to have a rivalry when Alabama met Notre Dame on the gridiron. Back in the salad days of Coach Bear Bryant and Coach Ara Parseghian, when the Crimson Tide and the Fighting Irish were participants in Holiday Bowl games vying for the national championship, I even arranged for Walter to get tickets—on the Notre Dame side, of course—for one or two of these titanic meetings.

Walter was a talented athlete whose prowess on the paddleball court was matched only by his legislative prowess in the Halls of Congress, where Walter was an effective legislator and one who represented his constituency well and diligently.

His keystone role in the Watergate impeachment hearings needs no retelling here. But, it was crucial.

I join my colleagues in paying tribute to my late friend and I extend to his family and loved ones my condolences.●

RHODE ISLAND INDEPENDENCE DAY

HON. CLAUDINE SCHNEIDER

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mrs. SCHNEIDER. Mr. Speaker, though all Americans celebrate the Fourth of July as the birthday of our Nation's independence from Great Britain, many of you here today may not realize that the State of Rhode Island and Providence plantations, whose second district I am proud to represent, was the first State to declare their independence from Great Britain by an act of the general assembly.

On May 4, 1776, 2 months before the Declaration of Independence was issued, Rhode Island voted to dissolve its association with the mother country and became the first independent Colony.

Since 1663, Rhode Island had been governing itself under a very liberal charter obtained from Charles II, upon his ascension to the throne of Great Britain. Over the next 100 years, Rhode Islanders eagerly and actively participated in the democratic process.

Though always ready to offer military and other assistance to the crown during the various colonial wars in the early and mid-18th century, Rhode Islanders began to chaff under the yoke of the British Crown beginning in the 1760's. This occurred as the crown began to intrude more and more into areas that Rhode Islanders felt their charter left in their own hands.

In 1772, Rhode Islanders took the audacious step of burning the H.M.S. Gaspee, to protest the revenue acts recently enacted by Parliament and signed by the crown. In this and several other incidents, Rhode Island clearly established itself in the forefront of the movement for liberty and independence.

Over the next 4 years, while all the American Colonies suffered general grievances from Great Britain which created a bond between the Colonies, Rhode Island and Massachusetts were singled out for harsher treatment at the hands of the crown for the attitudes and activities of the citizens of these two Colonies.

With their last vestiges of patience and loyalty extinguished, the citizens of Rhode Island, meeting in their general assembly on May 4, 1776, absolved themselves from all further allegiance and obedience to the crown and declared their independence.

Following is a copy of the resolution passed that day, 208 years ago. As you read the words, their courage and bravery shine clearly through—those noble citizens who took the lead in breaking the yoke of bondage that had been laid on their shoulders by the crown and Parliament. Their words and deeds will always be a source of inspiration, not only for Rhode Islanders, but for all Americans. Thank you.

An act repealing an Act entitled, "An Act for the more effectually securing to his Majesty the Allegiance of his Subjects, in this his Colony and Dominion of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations;" and altering the Forms of Commissions, of all Writs and Processes in the Courts, and of the Oaths prescribed by Law.

Whereas in all States existing by Compact, Protection and Allegiance are reciprocal, the latter being only due in Consequence of the former: And whereas GEORGE the Third, King of Great Britain, forgetting his Dignity, regardless of the Compact most solemnly entered into, ratified and confirmed, to the Inhabitants of this Colony, by His illustrious Ancestors, and till of late fully recognized by Him—and entirely departing from the Duties and Character of a good King, instead of protecting, is endeavouring to destroy the good People of this Colony, and of all the United Colonies, by sending Fleets and Armies to America, to confiscate our Property, and spread Fire, Sword and Desolation, throughout our Country, in order to compel us to submit to the most debasing and detestable Tyranny; whereby we are obliged by Necessity, and it becomes our highest Duty, to use every Means, with which God and Nature have furnished us, in Support of our invaluable Rights and Privileges; to oppose that Power which is exerted only for our Destruction.

Be it therefore Enacted by this General Assembly, and by the Authority thereof it is Enacted, That an Act entitled, "An Act for the more effectual securing to His Majesty the Allegiance of his Subjects in this his Colony and Dominion of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations," be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Clerk of the House, Josias Lyndon, wrote: "Resolved that the aforementioned written pass as an act of this assembly."

It was read and approved in the upper house the same day, as attested by Henry Ward, secretary.

For the first time the session closed with the words, "God save the United Colonies."●

ISRAEL INDEPENDENCE DAY

HON. BARBARA A. MIKULSKI

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. Speaker, in a few days, Jewish people all over the world will celebrate the 36th anniversary of the reestablishment of an independent Jewish state. Israel stands today as a beacon of hope to Jews everywhere and to people everywhere who believe in the ultimate triumph of justice.

Israel is a beleaguered country; that is true. But she is also strong. That was not always so. I want to recall a story of how we in America worked with the people of Israel to make that country strong.

On my office wall, I have a sketch of the great Israeli leader and former Prime Minister Golda Meir. In the early spring of 1948, just weeks before Israel declared her independence, Golda came to this country from what was then called Palestine. She sought funds for the tiny Jewish state so that it might fight off the assault that was sure to come from her neighbors.

She arrived with little baggage and $10 in her pocketbook. She meant to raise $25 million. She feared it could not be done and the state would die in its infancy, not for lack of courage, but for lack of funds.

This is what she told her audiences: "You cannot decide if we will fight for our freedom. We will fight. But you can decide if we will win. And if we win, the Jewish people will never again be a subject people; from now on, we will be free."

The American Jewish community heard her plea. When she left America, she had with her not $25 million, but $50 million.

When Golda arrived back in Tel Aviv, Ben-Gurion took her by the shoulders and said; "When the book of history is written, it will be recorded that it was by the work of a Jewish woman that the Jewish state was born."

In the years since Israel won her independence, she has survived endless military assaults and economic isolation. yet she flourishes today as one of the world's few genuine democracies.

Tragically, Israel is not accorded its full rights as a sovereign nation by most countries in the world. In fact, the United States is Israel's only true friend and ally. In the Middle East, the reverse is also true: Israel is the only country we can count on. As such, she is the linchpin of our foreign policy in that volatile region.

I was in the Middle East just about a year ago and, in the meantime, I have had extensive involvement in the politics of that region. Today, I want to discuss where we have been in our foreign policy toward the Middle East in the past year; where I think we have gone wrong; and what we can do in the future to support Israel, enhance our security and advance American values.

On my trip last year, I traveled to Israel and Lebanon. I met with a wide range of people and visited many strategically important areas—from Beirut to the Golan Heights. I talked with then Foreign Minister Shamir and Defense Minister Arens. I also talked with those with a differing view—Mr. Peres; Peace Now; and the Arab mayor of Bethlehem, Elias Freij. In Lebanon, I also met with government and military officials. I also spoke with the American Ambassador and our marines in the field.

Later, as a member of the House Ad Hoc Committee on Lebanon, I was constantly plagued by the same doubts about President Reagan's policy which had first struck me on my trip to the Middle East.

In the first place, President Reagan never gave the marines a clear role. The murkiness of their mission contributed to the failure of administration policy. The 1,800 marines stationed in a highly visible and vulnerable position could never have been expected to keep the peace in a country embroiled in civil war. It was President Reagan's misguided policy, not the dissenting voices from Congress, which doomed the Marines mission. I am proud to say that I voted to invoke the War Powers Act to trigger a national debate on our policy.

In the second place, when President Gemayal came to power in Lebanon, we all had great hope. But he never showed a willingness to be the president of all Lebanon. He was and is only the president of a Christian minority.

Furthermore, the United States did not pressure Gemayal into broadening the base of his support. We should have used our authority to persuade him to bridge old differences and reach out to the entire community. Instead, he used our Marines to buy time.

Finally, we pressured the wrong country to do the wrong thing. During negotiations for troop withdrawal prior to the now defunct May 17 agreement, the Reagan administration bullied Israel to withdraw.

We publicly chastised Israel and held up a previous agreement of strategic cooperation. We refused her offer to share military intelligence vital to this country. We even refused her offer of medical assistance when our marines desperately needed immediate attention after the horrible bombing of our headquarters in Beirut.

Within 24 hours of that bombing, our committee was in a meeting with Secretary of Defense Weinberger. We asked him, "Why, why did we refuse their assistance when it was so close at hand?" He told us that we had gone by the book and airlifted wounded men to hospitals thousands of miles away. Well, what about the book of commonsense?

Meanwhile, we never put the heat on Syria to withdraw from Lebanon even though it has occupied that country for 8 long years. We gave Syria the benefit of the doubt even though it is an ally of the Soviet Union.

Syria spent a generation using the Golan Heights as a launching pad for rockets on Israeli settlements. Do we really believe they will negotiate in good faith out of the kindness of their hearts?

We must learn that we cannot count on these hostile countries to deal in good faith unless we drive a very hard bargain.

That goes for our negotiations in Lebanon and for the overall Arab-Israeli conflict. The core of the Arab-Israeli conflict is the unwillingness of Israel's neighbors, except Egypt, to recognize her and make peace with her. Israel has clearly demonstrated her willingness to negotiate and to even make concessions in return for peace. But it cannot make concessions to a country which is in a state of war with her.

We must stand up for Israel, not stand up to her. We cannot buy Arab friendship with arms. Until the day they sit at the peace table, I say: "No weapons to countries at war with Israel." When the Saudis wanted AWACS, I said: "No peace, no planes." When the Jordanians wanted missiles, I said: "No peace, no way." And I will continue to say it over and over again because support for Israel must be the cornerstone of our Middle East policy.

Let us look at the record of our so-called "moderate" Arab friends.

When we sell the Saudis weapons, they raise the price of oil. When we count on their diplomacy in Lebanon, they doublecross us and sell out to the Syrians. When they advance a peace plan, it includes peace for everyone except Israel.

And what do they do with their great wealth? Do they use their riches to educate their people? On the contrary, they fear an educated people will tire of monarchy and their women will want to come out from behind the veil.

And what of Jordan and King Hussein? How often has he missed the boat to peace? Even as the President prepared another package of military goodies for him, the king was denouncing the United States as "unprincipled" and not "evenhanded" because of our support for Israel.

Well, the United States should not be "evenhanded." In all our meetings with Secretary of State Schultz, he stressed our commitment to Israel and I agree. Who in the Middle East is our one faithful ally? Which country in the Middle East has the only democratic government? Where can the United States turn in the Middle East to find a country we can always count on? There is but one answer to all three questions: Israel.

This question of "evenhandedness" always comes up in Congress at foreign aid time. This year I will vote, as I always have, for assistance to Israel. We hope to pass a $2.6 billion package of economic and military aid this year.

Before we vote foreign aid to any country, we should ask ourselves two questions: First, is this investment in our national interest? Second, is the country we propose to help doing all it can to help itself?

In the case of Israel, the answer to both questions is emphatically yes. Israel, as a democratic ally, is strategically vital to the United States in an otherwise unstable region. Every man and woman in that country devotes a part of his or her life to military service and a sizable chunk of their income to the national defense. Israel does not ask America to shed the blood of its own men in her defense; she only asks for our help.

There is one more crucial link in the security chain in the Middle East. Until the United States is energy independent, neither our security nor the security of Israel will be sure. President Reagan has been lulled to sleep by today's lower energy costs, but tomorrow a crisis could occur to put us once again in a weak position.

Until we are energy independent, Arab sheiks will hold the energy carrot out to the West. They will accept our gifts of money and military hardware and, in turn, finance terrorism with their petrodollars.

Today, the administration's policy in the Middle East is adrift. This part of the world demands our full attention. President Reagan has delegated authority for so long that he has lost control of events. In Lebanon, we have had as many policies as we have had roving ambassadors. Compare this to Camp David, where President Carter's personal commitment was the key to reaching agreement between Egypt and Israel.

The United States cannot solve all the problems in the Mideast. But we are a necessary broker. No other country can accomplish what we can. We must pick up where Camp David left off in our search for peace.

To advance American interests, we must have a policy that is both tough and principled. The United States, as the leader of the free world, should be a leader in the Middle East. At the same time, peace will only come if there are free leaders in the Middle East. I look forward to the day when such Arab leaders drop their swords and plough a field of peace with the State of Israel.

In the meantime, there is one constant in the Middle East: The faithful friendship of our democratic ally, Israel.

The United States is sometimes compelled to make alliances of convenience, but morality is the lasting measure of our foreign policy.

There are many strategic reasons for the United States to support Israel. But the most compelling reason to do so is because it is right. Thank you.●

ARMENIAN GENOCIDE

HON. ROBERT J. MRAZEK

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1984

● Mr. MRAZEK. Mr. Speaker, this week we commemorate the brutal genocide of the Armenian people which began seven decades ago.

This commemoration is especially important because the massacre of the Armenian people has often been known as the forgotten genocide. It is all but ignored in history books and courses, and still denied by the Turkish Government.

Yet the facts are clear. Between 1915 and 1923, 1½ million Armenians were either murdered or perished from starvation and exposure on forced marches. In addition, more than half a million Armenian survivors were exiled from their homes in the Ottoman Empire. Thus, the genocidal nature of this persecution is undeniable as over 80 percent of the then existent Armenian community in the Ottoman Empire died or were banished from their homeland.

Mr. Speaker, that anyone could deny the existence of these massacres is incredible and unacceptable as there is ample evidence that they occurred. For example, in a telegram on July 16, 1915, Henry Morgenthau, the American Ambassador to the Ottoman Empire, stated that "deportation of and excesses against peaceful Armenians is increasing and from harrowing reports of eyewitnesses it appears that a campaign of race extermination is in progress under a pretext of reprisal against rebellion." Front page headlines from the New York Times in 1915 included "Turks Depopulate Towns of Armenia" and "Turks Accused of Plan To Exterminate Whole Population."

The genocide of the Armenian people must not be forgotten. Continued observations of the massacres, such as the commemorative events taking place this week, and the presentation of exhibits, such as the prominent inclusion of the Armenian genocide in our capital's planned Holocaust Museum, will insure that this tragedy shall not be overlooked. In so remembering this dark episode of humanity, we contribute to the prevention of future genocide.●

CONGRESSIONAL CALL TO CONSCIENCE VIGIL

HON. ROMANO L. MAZZOLI

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, for the past several years, I have participated in the Congressional Call to Conscience Vigil in an attempt to draw attention to the plight of Soviet Jews and other prisoners of conscience who are seeking freedom and emigration from the Soviet Union.

Despite the best efforts by Members of Congress, Soviet Jewish emigration continues to tragically decline each year.

Last year at this time, I noted that from 1979 to 1982, the number of Soviet Jews that had been allowed to emigrate had fallen by over 90 percent. Well, Mr. Speaker, from 1982 to 1983, that number dropped by another 50 percent. Only 1,315 Soviet Jews were granted permission to emigrate in 1983. In addition, I understand that the Soviets have allowed anti-Zionist committees to be formed to further harass Soviet Jewish citizens.

In particular, I am concerned about the plight of the Yakov Beilin family. Yakov Beilin is a forestry technician who lives in a small Jewish community in Tula. Most of his family, eight aunts and uncles who previously lived in Vilna, were exterminated with their young children during World War II.

In 1973, Mr. Beilin's father died after a long illness. Before he died, his last stated wish was that his family move to Israel where his only sister resided. This request the widow Beilin decided to fulfill.

Yakov Beilin's mother was granted permission to emigrate to Israel, but Yakov Beilin, his wife, and two children were refused. Despite her age and frailty, Yakov Beilin's mother decided to make the move.

His mother remains most distressed by being separated from her family. She writes:

> I have but one desire. I beg you to help me bring my son and his family to Israel. The few years that I have left to live, I would like to spend together with him.

Mr. Speaker, as one of many concerned Members participating in this year's vigil, I hope the Soviet Union will exhibit respect for basic human rights and privileges, as guaranteed under the Soviet Constitution and the Helsinki Accords, and reunite the Beilin family and other Soviet families in similar circumstances.●

GYPSY MOTH PROMISING RESEARCH

HON. LAWRENCE COUGHLIN

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to share with my colleagues the following article describing an innovative gypsy moth pesticide control development. Sponsored through the combined efforts of Temple University, The Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, the Ben Franklin Partnership, the National Institute of Health, and Rohm & Haas, a biologist is on the verge of perfecting a pesticide to control the damage of the gypsy moth.

An insect which has plagued States throughout the Northeast, the gypsy moth predator is advancing south and defoliating thousands of acres of trees throughout the Nation. Although several years away from widespread use to combat the gypsy moth, I believe the following article which appeared in the April 9, 1984 Philadelphia Inquirer will detail some of the advances being made through genetic engineering.

The article follows:

[From the Philadelphia Inquirer, Apr. 9, 1984]

DEVELOPING A SAFE PESTICIDE

(By Linda Loyd)

Soon, the voracious leaf-eating gypsy moth caterpillars will chew their way across Pennsylvania, New Jersey and much of the Northeast defoliating thousands of acres of woodland.

To date, there is no best way to kill the gypsy moth. Chemical sprays are effective but stir up opposition from environmental groups because the sprays might harm humans.

One environmentally safe alternative to the chemicals is a bacterial insecticide called bacillus thuringiensis. BT, however, has shortcomings. In spray form, it has a shorter field life and is much less potent than chemicals such as Sevin, Orthene, Dylox and Dimilin.

A team of biologists at Temple University has been working for six years on ways to overcome BT's shortcomings. Under the direction of William R. Harvey, the biologists have isolated a crystal BT protein that could be 20 times more potent and still safe for humans.

Harvey's team has succeeded in isolating a small active protein fragment, called a peptide, that is toxic to some insects. Now that they have it isolated, they are trying to find ways to genetically implant it into seeds, which would grow into plants that are resistant to gypsy moths and other pests that destroy crops.

"We're a month or so away from getting a form of BT that will be useful and has the long-range potential to be a gene inserted into seeds," Harvey said.

When that happens, Rohm & Haas Co., which has supported the research, will obtain a patent and begin tests toward marketing the new BT as a spray insecticide and eventually putting it into seeds.

"It would revolutionize all insect control," Harvey said in his lab. "Maybe more important, in Pennsylvania there would be a whole new industry. I call it 'recombinant insecticides' because you recombine this gene into the plant."

BT works on the insect gut and not on the insect nervous system, as do most conventional insecticides. Because the insect gut works differently than the human digestive system, the BT kills insects but is not harmful to people.

"If the BT gene was put in an ear of corn, for instance," Harvey said, "then every kernel would have BT insecticide in it. If the corn borer ate it, that would be the end of it. In terms of dollars and cents, the market for seed worldwide is billions of dollars."

Rohm & Hass turned to Harvey, who has a doctorate in biology from Harvard University, because he had done pioneering work on the insect gut in the 1960s in Denmark. That work paved the way for later research on insecticides.

"Rohm & Haas has a number of options in terms of products," said Ronald Meeusen, a plant physiologist who heads Rohm & Haas' agriculture biology research at a 160-acre facility in Spring House, Montgomery County.

"Ultimately," Meeusen said, "what we would like to do is produce crops which are no longer susceptible to various insect pests. So we would be able to sell farmers crops that would have dramatically lowered requirement for insecticide. That would have environmental advantages, as well as cost advantages."

Through genetic engineering, Harvey hopes to come up with a BT gene that would kill all agricultural pests, including the corn borer, the tobacco horn worm and its cousin, the tomato horn worm, often seen in gardens.

Researchers at about 10 chemical companies across the country are searching for a more lethal BT, but Harvey said his team "will be the first people, I think, to have these BT peptides."

"We're a month away from getting ones that are 20 times as powerful," Harvey said. ". . . Other people are trying to do it, too. Whoever does it first is going to create a whole new industry. So the stakes are very high."

Harvey estimated that researchers were five years away from having a more potent form of BT that could be sprayed directly on trees. "We're about 10 years away from putting the thing in plants," he said.

Meanwhile, the gypsy moths will consume millions of acres of foliage from late spring to the end of June. In the last three years, the moths destroyed 28 million acres of forest land in the Northeast.

Gypsy moths have plagued states throughout the Northeast since 1869, when a Frenchman trying to develop a strain of silk brought them to this country. Defoliation has been on a downward cycle this year and last in New England, eastern Pennsylvania, New Jersey and eastern New York.

But the predators are advancing south, and defoliation is expected to increase in Virginia, West Virginia, Maryland and south western Pennsylvania, said Win McLane, pesticidesection leader at a U.S. Department of Agriculture center in Massachusetts.

About 43,000 acres in New Jersey will be sprayed this year under a state-funded moth-control program. Pennsylvania's $3.6 million spraying program will treat parts of 30 counties this year.

"At the moment," Harvey said, "there is no overall national program to control gypsy moths. It's left up to individual state and local governments. Once DDT was banned, the federal government didn't have any really effective weapon against the gypsy moth."

This summer the Agriculture Department will test some higher-potency strains of BT on 800 acres near Lock Haven in north-central Pennsylvania, according to James Nichols, chief of the Pennsylvania Department of Forestry's pest-management division.

But the BT tested by the Agriculture Department is only five to 10 times more potent than the present BT.

In Brownsville, Texas, where the department has based some of its BT research, Howard T. Dulmage, an Agriculture Department scientist, said that he was familiar with Harvey's research and called Harvey "a very good scientist."

"Somebody is going to come along with something, and it might be Bill Harvey," he said.

The Temple projects has received about $300,000 in financing each of the last two years, Harvey said, "divided pretty equally" among Rohm & Haas; Temple; the state, through the Ben Franklin Partnership, and the National Institutes of Health.

In another BT research project, Harvey is using similar techniques to come up with a strain of another variety of BT that kills mosquitoes, which carry encephalitis and malaria.

Through genetic engineering, Harvey is working to implant a BT gene into algae. If the work is a success, larvae would be killed immediately after eating the genetically altered algae. "You would have to introduce it only once," Harvey said, and each new generation of the algae would carry the mosquito-killing agent.

The goal is to curb malaria, one of the world's leading causes of death, especially in Third World countries.

The World Health Organization in Geneva, Switzerland, is "very interested in this approach," said Harvey, who talked with the organization about putting BT genes into algae.

"Imagine," Harvey said, "being the one who rids an area of the world of malaria. It would be exciting, wouldn't it?"●

FORMER SPOUSES OF FOREIGN SERVICE OFFICERS

HON. DAN MICA

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. MICA. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to introduce legislation today with the gentlelady from Colorado to offer much needed relief to former spouses of Foreign Service officers who have been shut out from any pension after years of faithful service abroad for the U.S. Government. These women have suffered financially without any recognition for their years of unremunerated, selfless service. Our bill finally addresses the needs of these former spouses who were not covered by the 1980 act, and I am proud to do my part to see that the Government at last does right by this group of women who have done so much for the United States abroad.●

THE EDUCATION FOR GIFTED AND TALENTED CHILDREN AND YOUTH IMPROVEMENT ACT OF 1984

HON. AUSTIN J. MURPHY

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, today I am pleased to introduce along with my colleagues the Education for Gifted and Talented Children and Youth Improvement Act of 1984. This legislation is designed to assist States to mobilize public and private resources and talent to develop, expand, and improve educational opportunities for gifted and talented students, support research, evaluate programs, and provide information and technical assistance. This measure is, in part, a response to the National Commission on Excellence in Education's report, "A Nation at Risk: The Imperative for Educational Reform." The Commission states,

> The Federal Government, in cooperation with States and localities, should meet the needs of key groups of students such as gifted and talented, the socioeconomically disadvantaged, minority and language minority students, and the handicapped. In combination, these groups include both national resources and the Nation's youth most at risk.

The Federal Government plays a critical role in meeting the educational needs of every group of at risk students except our gifted and talented children and youth.

While the Congress has, over the past several decades, developed, refined, and maintained discrete Federal roles for the various students with unique learning needs identified in the Commission's report, there is at present no Federal leadership directed at improving educational opportunities for gifted and talented children and youth. The very modest program proposed in this legislation is designed to fill that gap. The National Commission on Excellence in Education calls upon our Federal Government in cooperation with our State and local government, private enterprise, and our American citizens to share the responsibility for improving education.

During the 1960's, education policy and resource attention was focused on the needs of other special populations, and programs for gifted and talented students declined dramatically. In 1969, through the leadership of Senator Jacob Javits of New York, and my colleague, Congressman ERLENBORN of Illinois, the Gifted and Talented Children's Education Assistance Act (section 806 of Public Law 91-230) was passed. This act established gifted and talented youth as a Federal concern, gave them priority in several Federal programs, and required the Commissioner of Education to report to the Congress on the status of the education of gifted and talented children and youth.

The Congress again strengthened and improved the Federal role in 1978 with the passage of title IX of Public Law 96-561, the Gifted and Talented Children's Education Act. While Federal funding never exceeded $6 million in any year, the use of those funds to provide information, train and support leadership personnel, educate educational decisionmakers, and demonstrate programing options, provided the catalytic base necessary for State and local program improvement. Studies done by Zettel show that during that period of time, there were increases in the numbers of students served, personnel trained and employed, and resources committed.

With the passage of the Education Consolidation and Improvement Act of 1981 (ECIA) the Federal programs dissolved into the education block grant. For example, the Office of Gifted and Talented has been abolished and no one is presently designated to serve a leadership or advocacy function in this regard. No funding is available to support research and demonstration efforts or train personnel. It is therefore the purpose of this act to supplement the Education Consolidation and Improvement Act of 1981 by providing the limited Federal role recommended by the Commission on Excellence in Education in an attempt to improve the educational opportunities for the gifted and talented children and youth of our Nation.

The gifted child in society today is in an awkward position. He is respected by the public at large, he is envied by his parents and his peers, and he is neglected by our educational system. It was reported by U.S. News & World Report on August 8, 1983, that up to 18 percent of all high school dropouts are gifted students. This is an alarming statistic when you consider that while other nations nurture their students carefully and systematically, we fail to provide Federal leadership in the education of gifted and talented children and youth.

There has been a great deal of rhetoric regarding excellence in education. This bill will go beyond this rhetoric by directing both teaching and learning toward meeting the individual educational needs of each child. We have learned with our lowest functioning students that it is critical to design an appropriate educational plan that will allow the child to reach his or her full potential. We are currently learning that if our highest functioning students are to reach their full potential, we must design programs that will meet their unique learning needs. In order to truly obtain excellence in education, we can no longer afford to neglect our students at both ends of our educational spectrum.

This legislation will serve as a catalyst to bring business leaders into partnership with educators to insure an appropriate education for America's gifted students. An example of this partnership is the Allegheny Conference which was formed in western Pennsylvania. This conference consists of a consortium of businesses including the following: IBM, Alcoa, and Westinghouse Nuclear who work with schools to improve the teaching skills of high school teachers, and improve vital technical skills of our able high school students. The successful partnership between business and education in western Pennsylvania clearly indicates that if we expand these cooperative efforts across our Nation, we will begin to adequately address the needs of the gifted and talented. This bill will provide Federal support for these private sector initiatives in order to expand the educational opportunities for these at risk students.

Educational reform in our Nation must begin with the fundamental concept that each child performs and develops in our educational system at different rates: We must commit ourselves to developing an appropriate educational plan that will allow each child to grow and reach his or her full potential. I strongly believe that this bill contributes to improving the quality of education by providing modest support for States to develop and advance programs for our Nation's gifted and talented children and youth.

It is my hope that the Education for Gifted and Talented Children and Youth Improvement Act of 1984 will spark the interest of the public and foster national attention to the needs of our Nation's gifted and talented children and youth. My Subcommittee on Select Education anticipates holding a hearing on this legislation in the summer, which will give the public the opportunity to comment on this important issue.●

TIMOTHY TOWERS, YOUTH LEGACY OLYMPIC TORCH-BEARER

HON. NORMAN F. LENT

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. LENT. Mr. Speaker, the lighting of the Olympic flame was an important ritual during the ancient Olympic games in Greece, a tradition which continues in our modern Olympic games as well. I would like to take this opportunity to recognize a young man from my Fourth Congressional District in Long Island, N.Y., Timothy Towers of Levittown. He is one of the runners selected for the honor of carrying the Olympic flame to Los Angeles Coliseum for the summer Olympic games.

This is indeed a great honor for Timothy, and we are privileged to have a constituent of our Fourth Congressional District take part in this Olympic tradition for the 1984 summer games.

He will carry the torch for 1 kilometer in the 12,000-mile 1984 Olympic torch relay, which will begin May 8 in New York City and finish in Los Angeles for the start of the games on July 28.

Almost 400 Long Island boys and girls, aged 8 to 17, ran time trials around the Nassau Farmers Market in Bethpage on March 11 to qualify for the drawing. To qualify, the youngsters had to run the kilometer course (0.6 of a mile) in under 7 minutes. Timothy's time was 3 minutes and 23 seconds (3:23). The names of all qualifying runners were entered in a drawing and the winner was selected by former U.S. Olympic track coach and competitor Bruce MacDonald of Port Washington.

Timothy attends the St. James Elementary School in Seaford and competes on a Catholic Youth Organization track team.

I ask my colleagues in the House of Representatives to join me in congratulating Timothy for his participation in this exciting event as Long Island's "Youth Legacy Kilometer Olympic Torchbearer."●

AMENDMENT IN THE NATURE OF A SUBSTITUTE TO H.R. 5167

HON. RONALD V. DELLUMS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to offer a comprehensive substitute amendment to the Department of Defense (DOD) authorization bill.

The debate on national defense and national security policy in this Congress has focused almost exclusively on the total amount of DOD spending and the rate of real growth in that spending. In my view this is an incorrect focus. Military spending must be analyzed in terms of U.S. foreign and military objectives. If increased spending is necessary to insure our national security, then we must provide sufficient moneys; but first we must analyze the policy objectives we are trying to achieve.

The national security role of the United States should be to exert international leadership to bring the world closer to peace. Military tensions must be eased, detente must be revived, and the threat of nuclear war must be reduced.

I strongly disagree with the Reagan administration view, and the view of my colleagues on the House Armed Services Committee, as to what is necessary for our national security. It is for this reason that I feel compelled to offer my substitute amendment.

The major themes of my proposal are:

First, to lessen the threat of nuclear war through support for a nuclear freeze and for arms control initiatives leading to major weapons reductions;

Second, a noninterventionist conventional—nonnuclear—national security policy;

Third, a reduced U.S. military role in Europe and East Asia;

Fourth, a redirection of procurement policies to reduce waste, fraud, abuse, and massive cost overruns; and

Fifth, a stronger national security through a policy of conversion to an economy which is less dependent on military spending.

Implementation of these themes would greatly enhance our national security. In addition, implementation would provide substantial budgetary savings sufficient both to reduce significantly the unprecedented Reagan administration budget deficits and to make resources available for selective increases in social spending.

DESCRIPTION OF MAJOR PROPOSALS

The proposal includes the following principal changes from that of the administration request for national defense:

First, to lessen the threat of nuclear war; we must insist on aggressive arms control initiatives and negotiations. The proposal contemplates a nuclear freeze, followed by major arms reductions.

The alternative proposal would eliminate procurement and research and development for destabilizing weapons systems—the MX, the Trident II, Pershing II and cruise missiles. These are weapons which are a threat to, rather than an enhancement of, our national security. While we may have to reluctantly accept some existing nuclear weaponry as necessary to deter nuclear war, we must reject the current nuclear buildup whose purpose is to arm the United States to fight a nuclear war. The present U.S. nuclear arsenal—10,000 strategic, 15,000 tactical warheads—is more than sufficient for any deterrent objective. Funding for the expensive and unnecessary B-1 bomber program is also eliminated.

In addition, funding is eliminated for the administration's misguided Star Wars proposals. The defensive capability of this strategic defense system is illusory; it will only lead to a false sense of security; and it will seriously distort the allocation of both human and financial resources.

Second, to bring about a noninterventionist conventional—nonnuclear—policy, we must insist that the proper U.S. defense policy is to defend U.S. security interests; not to intervene militarily in and against Third World countries around the world.

The administration seeks to increase the number of aircraft carrier battle groups from the present 13 to 15. The principal purpose of such battle groups, however, is to intervene against Third World countries. These battle groups would serve little purpose in any confrontation with the Soviet Union; devoting such an extensive part of our naval budget to these expensive and useless forces is inappropriate.

I would initially maintain the current level of 13 battle groups with phased reductions to 10 groups over the next 5 years. Significant cuts are made in the procurement of battle group escort and support ships—where the bulk of the task force spending occurs—and in the reduced carrier air wings.

We must also reject the buildup of the rapid deployment force and eliminate all funds for this program. The only role of the rapid deployment force, now called the U.S. Central Command, is to promote an interventionist U.S. policy against small countries and to protect the oil fields of the Middle East and Southwest Asia. We have the Marines; the role of the Marines is to be a RDF, but even this role should be limited, and not increased.

Third, to reduce the number of troops stationed in and for Europe and Asia. Many of those proposing nuclear constraint advocate and expansion of our ground forces in Europe. This idea should be rejected on two grounds: it would vastly increase military spending, thereby escalating the deficit and reducing social spending; moreover, it makes no sense in terms of our national defense.

Approximately, some 35 to 45 percent of the military budget currently is predicted on the U.S. fighting a prolonged land war in Europe. The possibility of the United States again fighting a major land war there is unlikely. Given that there is no such thing as a truly conventional force, and that all United States and Soviet forces are now nuclear equipped, most analysts believe that there would be a virtually automatic escalation to nuclear exchanges; first tactical—Hiroshima scale—levels, then world-threatening strategic levels.

Even making the incredible assumption that a war involving the U.S.S.R., Europe, and the United States might avoid a nuclear confrontation, an extended European land war would still require a general mobilization. There is no need to maintain such a large standing Army to protect our national security interests. We propose reducing the number of Army divisions from 16 to 13 by fiscal year 1988.

Fourth, to seriously redirect procurement policies to reduce waste, abuse, and massive cost overruns. Cuts are made in various weapon systems which are redundant, ordered in larger than necessary quantities, having serious cost overruns, or simply too expensive for their military purpose. The recent publicity surrounding the Pentagon's purchase of various dime store hardware items for thousands of dollars per item are only recent examples of this outrageous practice.

Fifth, in addition, we must move toward funding a major conversion employment program—$45 billion over the next 5 years. The burden of a decision to eliminate or reduce certain weapon systems should be a national one and not concentrated in those cities and towns where those particular systems are produced. Thus, we must include moneys for approximately 300,000 jobs for fiscal year 1985 in areas where workers on military programs are displaced as a result of weapon systems cuts.

Even these proposed cuts are constrained by the nature of the present debate. The bulk of moneys authorized in the last few budget years for military weapons and hardware is only now being disbursed. For example, it is interesting to note that even if all new procurement were cut this year, the fiscal year 1985 spending for procurement would only be reduced by $13 billion.

This is because the only serious focus of concern in the Congress with regard to the massive military spending program is its impact on the deficit. Since outlays, not budget authority, affect the current year budget deficit, the reduction of current year outlays takes congressional precedence. Since procurement outlays take place over 5 to 7 years, cutting procurement provides few outlay reductions and the pressure to cut procurement lessens. Given this, the Congress then makes its reductions in precisely those accounts where spending should be the highest: readiness and personnel. Yet, in subsequent years, procurement comes back to haunt the budget process and the operational readiness of our forces is lessened, despite the massive increases in spending.

In sum, what we need is a policy based on the defense of U.S. interests, not an arming for nuclear war or for intervention around the world. Such a policy would require greatly reduced levels of military spending, would create fewer distortions in the economy at large, and would significantly enhance the prospects for peace and real arms reductions.

A CONCLUDING NOTE ON REAL GROWTH

The national defense is not some abstract number to be auctioned up or down. Unfortunately, last year's debate was such an auction: 10-percent real growth, the President; 6-percent real growth, the House Armed Services Committee; 4 percent, the House; and 5 percent, the compromise. This year the auction continues: the President requesting a 12.5-percent real increase—19 percent in current dollars, the House Armed Services Committee using a 6-percent figure, and the House Budget Committee proposing 3.5-percent real growth, the figure approved by the House. What is the meaning of this real growth?

A zero-percent real increase means complete acceptance of the extraordinary military budget approved last year. A zero-percent real increase means that the policy embodied in the 1985 budget should be essentially identical to that of 1984.

To give these numbers some life: the difference between zero real growth—that is, last year's complete budget in this year's prices—and the President's request, is about $35 billion. With that amount of money, the country could fund a 50-percent increase in all food programs—that is, food stamps, WIC, a 50-percent increase in AFDC, a 50-percent increase in medicaid, a 50-percent increase in SSI payments, fully fund the IDA/World Bank program for the poorest countries, create a quarter of a million new jobs, and still have $1 billion left over for petty cash.

But even zero-percent real growth is too high. Anyone who thought last year's budget was too high, logically cannot accept even a zero-percent real increase; rather, they must seek real decreases. Last year's defense budget, however, was an increase of 85 percent in dollar terms and over 45 percent in real terms—that is over 11 percent per year real growth for each of the years—since 1980. The President's fiscal year 1985 request in current dollars is more than double the fiscal year 1980 level. If the Congress has continued President Carter's fiscal year 1980 level of military spending, in real terms, and note, these fiscal year 1980 levels were already much too weighted toward military spending—the deficit projected for the fiscal year 1985–87 period would be reduced by more than half.●

WORLD POLITICS—AND TRAGEDY

HON. TIMOTHY E. WIRTH

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. WIRTH. Mr. Speaker, as Mr. Chernenko assumes leadership of the Soviet Union, it remains unclear what the policy of the new regime will be with regard to Soviet Jewry. Soviet Jewish emigration plummeted from a peak of 51,320 in 1979 to 2,688 in 1982. Only 1,314 Soviet Jews were allowed to emigrate in 1983. As profound as these figures are, they do not begin to express the individual tragedy experienced by the Soviet Prisoners of Conscience and their families.

In a recent article in the Denver Post, "World Politics—And Tragedy," David McQuay details the continuing tragedy of Nohim Meiman, a noted Soviet mathematical physicist, who has tried for almost 10 years to obtain an exit visa, and his daughter, Olga Plam, and her ongoing campaign to get her father out of the Soviet Union.

I commend this article to my colleagues' attention while applauding the continued efforts of this body to ease the oppression of Soviet Jews. America has long been a symbol of freedom for the oppressed peoples of the world. The recent change in power in the Soviet Union makes this a timely opportunity to renew our efforts.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert the McQuay article at this point in the RECORD and commend it to my colleagues' attention.

WORLD POLITICS—AND TRAGEDY

(By David McQuay)

BOULDER.—Olga Plam is creating a better flamingo in her office. It's a glass crystal flamingo with pink eyes and fragile, spindly legs, the tops of which she must thicken to strengthen the piece. A glass flamingo needs strong legs.

Near the flamingo, a small glass menagerie is herded: A clown with a red nose does a handstand. A peacock spreads crystal plumage. A half-finished pelican waits for a more graceful neck. Surrounded by the glass figurines, a black and white photograph of Plam's 73-year-old father, Nohim Meiman, keeps sentinel. He stands in a public square in Moscow frequented by dissidents, wearing a fur hat. He has the tragic eyes of an idealist.

Plam has two jobs: designing glass figurines for Crystal Zoo, a Boulder company that produces and distributes them to stores all over the United States and Europe, and engineering a campaign to get her father out of the Soviet Union. For almost 10 years her father, a noted Soviet mathematical physicist, has tried to get an exit visa, and Moscow has continually denied it, claiming that he is a security risk. Crystal can be cut and shaped; U.S.-Soviet politics is an impenetrable fog.

"Politics is so amorphic, such a mass," Plam said, "but it's amazing how it affects one person's life."

Two senators, Colorado's Gary Hart and Indiana's Richard Lugar, have sent separate letters to the Soviet ambassador to the United States, Anatoly Dobrynin, asking that Russia allow Meiman, who has angina, and Inna, Plam's stepmother, who has brain cancer, to emigrate to the United States. Moscow replies with silence, as it did when Walter Mondale told Plam during his vice presidency that he would try to help. Rep. Tim Wirth of Colorado prodded a dozen members of Congress to sign a letter to Leonid Brezhnev urging Meiman's release, and Wirth visited Meiman in Moscow, exchanging letters between him and his daughter. Wirth's colleague, Rep. Pat Schroeder, visited Meiman in 1978 and returned with a letter signed by Meiman and other Soviet Jewish dissidents that called for U.S. trade restrictions on Russia because of the oppression of emigrants.

Schroeder told a Denver Post reporter then that she smuggled out three hours of tapes of the dissidents' conversation in her underwear.

Twelve U.S. district attorneys, including Denver's Dale Tooley, met with Soviet officials in 1978 and were promised that all 883 Jewish families living in Moscow, Leningrad and Odessa who have applied for visas would be permitted to leave. In Russia, Jews can hold only 5 percent of the jobs in an office or school.

Then came the invasion of Afghanistan, the U.S. boycott of the Olympics, and a long cold silence from the Soviets.

There is silence on the telephone lines. When Meiman calls her, Plam sometimes hears the Soviet operator tell him, "There's no answer." When she got through to her father during a February rally in Indianapolis protesting Soviet treatment of Soviet Jews, she handed the phone to Sen. Lugar. Right after Lugar introduced himself to Meiman, the line went dead.

"Olga got hysterical," said Dr. Douglas Zipes, a cardiologist who directs the Soviet Jewry organization in Indianapolis. "It was an emotional experience that Hollywood could not have planned more dramatically." Somehow, they got through to Meiman again and finished the conversation. Zipes visited Meiman two years ago after being invited by Brezhnev's physician to lecture at the World Congress of Cardiology in Moscow, and Meiman gave him a Rachmaninoff record as a gift. Zipes gave it to Plam after he saw Meiman's inscription: "With love and sadness from Russia."

In a year in which the Kremlin refuses to see a U.S. ambassador and the United States mines a harbor in Nicaragua, it is unlikely that Olga Plam will see her father soon, if ever again. More than 30 years ago, Meiman headed the mathematics department of a project directed by physicist Andrei Sakharov. The project was the H-bomb. Plam does not like to talk about this chapter of her father's life, but she said that Meiman never knew much about the total project, that the information has become general scientific knowledge. Even Harvard and Princeton students have designed A-bomb plans "as a lark," as one of them put it. But one wonders what the United States would do about a Los Alamos scientist who decided to emigrate to Russia.

Meiman's first clash with the Kremlin came in 1950, when he and several other dissidents signed a letter demanding political freedom. For years Meiman kept a low profile. Then when he applied for an exit visa in 1975, he lost his chair at the Institute of Theoretical and Experimental Physics. In 1976, he sent a 'letter to the Soviet Academy of Science, arguing for Soviet scientists' freedom to attend conferences abroad, publish in Western magazines and correspond with Western colleagues. When he demonstrated for Jewish emigration rights a month later, he was arrested. And arrested again when he participated in a Jewish cultural conference.

And arrested again last year when he was 72. His typewriter and tape recorder were confiscated. His phone is tapped. His daughter never gets letters postmarked from Moscow. They're postmarked from all over the United States and Europe. Western visitors smuggle the letters out of Russia, just as they did a Meiman treatise that will be published in the May issue of Journal of Mathematical Physics. He cannot publish in his country.

Meiman's wife, Inna who was an English teacher until she became a dissident, has a brain tumor. She still hasn't been told how serious her illness is. Her X-rays were smuggled out of the country and diagnosed by physicians at a Washington clinic, but "Soviet surgeons say they don't have treatment for her," Plam says.

Plam, her husband Misha, and son Yegor, got exit visas in 1976, when U.S.-Soviet relations were warmer, believing that they would have a better chance of getting Meiman released by living in the United States. Their visa requests were refused four times. Soviet clerks told them, "Instead of going West, you'll go East."

Meaning Siberia.

After requesting the visas, they lost their jobs—Plam was an assistant professor at an art institute and her husband was a researcher in glaciology—and had to sell everything in their apartment.

"It was empty the day we emigrated," she said. She still doesn't know why the Soviet Union issued the visas. They were, she said, lucky. It was Sept. 16, 1976, and she has been campaigning for her father's release ever since. Misha Plam now does similar research at the University of Colorado in Boulder, and Yegor is now a 22-year-old man studying computer sciences in California. Moscow sometimes retaliates against the parents of emigrant children, and Plam isn't sure whether her flight has made things harder on her father. "I don't like to think that it's an additional punishment," she said, "but it might be."

The U.S. Department of Health is sending an invitation to the Soviet Union, offering hospital treatment for Inna Meiman, and it will probably be answered with silence. Olga Plam has run out of plans.

"All I have left is hope," she said. She shows another glass piece: A crystal heart. She wants to give one to Gary Hart, who she hopes will become president and help her father.●

COST-EFFECTIVE WATER PLANNING

HON. LEON E. PANETTA

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to my colleagues' attention an approach to local resource management which I feel can serve as a model in terms of cooperation, efficiency, and cost effectiveness.

As my colleagues are well aware, one of the most difficult policy areas for local planners—particularly in California—is the management and protection of precious water resources. The problems encountered by local officials in Santa Cruz County, in my district in California, in addressing the issue of water resource management are, I think, typical of those found in many other communities: Overlapping agency jurisdictions; a tendency to focus on each separate community's concerns rather than those of the region; and lack of an overall perspective on both short- and long-term needs. The results: Waste and inefficient planning which fail to meet the needs and concerns of local residents.

In order to avoid those problems, a joint planning process was initiated among the nine local agencies in the Santa Cruz area—the county, cities, and water districts—with responsibility for water resource management. That process, which began with a "water summit" in December 1980, has included a comprehensive analysis of the region's needs and will soon culminate in a review of five alternative water development scenarios. The participating agencies will then have the opportunity to decide whether a large joint project is warranted, or whether the information developed over the course of the study should be used in developing smaller, more individual projects.

This joint planning process was outlined by John Laird, mayor of Santa Cruz, in an article in the March 1984 issue of Western City. While the issues are different in every community, I am convinced that the process used in Santa Cruz can help other localities to avoid the problems caused by conflicting agency jurisdictions—not only in the area of water management, but in all aspects of local planning. Accordingly I would like to insert into the RECORD the text of Mayor Laird's article, in the hope that it will prove helpful to other communities in addressing the complexities of resource management.

"SUMMIT" MEETING LEADS TO COST-EFFECTIVE WATER PLANNING

(By John Laird)

Nine local government agencies in Santa Cruz County are nearing completion of a joint planning process they hope will enable the communities they serve to develop future water supply infrastructure more cost-effectively and without the inter-jurisdictional disputes which, so often, typify relations among agencies with overlapping responsibilities.

The joint planning process began a little more than three years ago, when the City of Santa Cruz proposed a December 1980 "water summit meeting" among the agencies serving the water needs of the area.

Since that first "summit" meeting, the agencies have based their actions on a recognition that water is a regional resource and that cooperation is more desirable than altercation.

They have (1) formed a joint powers agreement for water planning; (2) agreed to fund a region-wide planning study; (3) hired an outside consultant to perform the study; (4) are developing a consistent body of data on local water use patterns; and (5) are formulating creative new methods for projecting future water needs based on differing intensities of land use. In coming months, the JPA will receive cost projections for five alternative water developments which may result in a large cooperative project or the development of small, individual projects by the agencies party to the JPA.

Since that first "summit," almost all governing board decisions have been made by unanimous vote. Such consensus decisions have pressed each agency to satisfy its needs before any decision is made.

GROWTH MANAGEMENT

During the 1970's, Santa Cruz County's annual growth rate averaged over 4 percent, one of the highest in California. Local government officials were concerned about the communities' ability to meet the demand for infrastructure and services necessitated by this high growth rate.

Due to these concerns and the electorate's desire for environmental protection Santa Cruz County voters adopted a growth management program in June, 1978, and Santa Cruz City voters approved a similar measure in early 1979. These two jurisdictions cover almost 90 percent of the land mass in Santa Cruz County and about 75 percent of the population.

Key provisions in both measures require local governments to absorb only their "fair share" of population growth. This requirement was implemented through a residential permit allocation process, with annual growth rate targets set near the average statewide annual growth rate.

The key point in the county program is the Urban Services Line—a geographic boundary beyond which water, sewers, urban level streets, and fire protection will not be extended.

These voter-adopted measures and the national economic downturn led to a reduction in local growth rates over those prior to the enactment of growth management.

WATER PLANNING

Santa Cruz County has not been immune to inter-jurisdictional disputes over land use planning and water supply. This can be primarily attributed to the division of responsibilities among local agencies. Regional land use planning is the responsibility of Santa Crux County and the four cities of Santa Cruz, Watsonville, Capitola, and Scotts Valley. The cities of Santa Cruz and Watsonville and five water supply agencies provide water service to the great majority of local customers.

Only the cities of Santa Cruz and Watsonville have both land use and water supply authority. Each city provides water to a significant number of customers outside its municipal boundaries and future water supply for each city is expected to come from outside the city limits.

The county, which has land use authority for the large unincorporated area, is not a water purveyor. The two cities and five large water districts serve the unincorporated area.

These differing responsibilities and the enactment of growth management necessitated a rethinking of water planning processes in Santa Cruz County.

To engender cooperation rather than dispute, the City of Santa Cruz proposed the December 1980 "water summit." This meeting, attended by the governing boards of the county, cities and water districts, led to a joint review of land use and water development information and intentions for each agency.

That review, presented at a second meeting, indicated some districts used different measures of future need. Separate districts expected to capitalize on the same future water source, and some land use agencies were engaged in planning for the same areas. As a result, no firm conclusions on future water infrastructure development could be drawn from compiling existing information.

THE AGREEMENT

At this point participating local agencies, with the exception of Watsonville, committed to the development of an agreement for joint water planning.

Guided by this joint commitment, members from each elected board met regularly to develop the agreement for joint planning, a comprehensive scope of work for the region-wide supply and demand study and the process for selecting a consultant to carry out the scope of work.

Each agency had its own specific long-range and short-range concerns. It was the goal of the group drafting the agreement to incorporate as many concerns as possible in the final agreement—thus giving each agency a solid stake in the study, in the information developed, and in the possibility of participating in a joint water development when the study was completed.

The agreement raised $250,000 from the participating agencies to finance the study. Assessments were made to land use agencies on the basis of population and to water supply agencies on the basis of the number of connections in each district.

THE STUDY PROCESS

A request for proposals was issued for the study, and each agency was given an opportunity to participate in the consultant selection process. The Environmental Impact Planning (EIP) firm from San Francisco, in joint venture with Houshang Esmaili Associates, was selected to do the job. A task list and project schedule was negotiated and added to the "Scope of Work" in the consultant's contract.

Elected officials were concerned that the study be under the policy direction of a governing board made up of one elected representative from each agency. This board has met monthly, and oversees the policy issues involved with the study. Staffing the governing board was split between the two largest water purveyors.

The contract divided the study into specific task reports. Each report is placed on an agenda of the governing board, and action is taken at the next monthly meeting. This has allowed the staffs of each agency one month for review on each task report.

THE SUPPLY SIDE

The scope of work divided the assessment of local water resources into three categories: a groundwater assessment, a surface water assessment, and an analysis of resource problems.

The groundwater assessment is designed to determine the managed yield of identified structural basins and regional aquifers. Existing published and unpublished data are being supplemented by a limited water-level monitoring program.

The managed yield of each groundwater formation studied is understood to mean the yield of the information under the particular management practices specified in the groundwater study—such management policies being designed to protect, preserve, and assure the long-term viability of the formation for water supply purposes.

For those basins where sufficient data are lacking, a data collection program will be designed and recommended for future implementation by participating agencies.

The surface water study will quantify long-term yields of selected streams which are determined to have potential as significant sources of water supply, including on-stream and offstream storage. Additionally, a means will be developed to examine the effect of alternative definitions of "safe yield" on water availability for planning purposes from each stream reviewed.

A computer model has been generated to estimate monthly stream flows on selected streams at selected locations. A sixty-year record of flows has been generated at selected locations, and the model is suitable for use by any agency wishing to use it.

The analysis of resource problems will evaluate factors that might result in the degradation of existing or potential sources of water supply. Factors analyzed will include seawater intrusion, timber harvesting operations, land development, existing land uses, toxic chemical contamination, and any other surface or groundwater contamination.

THE DEMAND STUDY

The demand study is designed to develop information for setting land use and water planning policy by the participating agencies.

A more traditional method of forecasting demand has been to determine existing per capita water use and project that use against expected population and planned non-residential uses. Unlike such traditional methods, the purpose of this study is to reflect the inevitable changes over time in the mix between residential, industrial, commercial, agricultural, and other land uses.

Although limitations exist in the data base, information can be developed about different possible scenarios for growth—and the demand implications resulting from each. With this information on hand, decision-makers will be able to visualize how policies in the areas such as pricing, connection permits, service area boundaries, and type of land use permitted can affect demand.

For the purposes of the study, the two most useful units of analysis have been traffic zones and water meter book areas. The traffic zones, which reflect natural geographic barriers and city boundaries, can be correlated with County Assessor files on individual properties.

The water meter books provide information on 150 to 350 customers each and can easily be characterized by land use attributes such as lot size, zoning category, altitude, microclimate, and household income. These records can weight the significance in explaining water consumption on an annual average, peak month, and low month basis.

By using microprocessor capability, this data can be manipulated into three sets of interactive computer models. The first uses the land use files to predict land use development at various time intervals. The second will predict water demand based on the result of the land use model and a set of assumptions about factors such as water availability, prices, and conservation practices. The third model can be used to compute "before and after" states for real or hypothetical development projects.

These result, to the limits allowable by the data, will provide demand projections based on variable future land use decisions. The results will assist in matching identified water supply sources to future needs.

THE FINAL REPORT

Soon the governing body will review the task reports that have been completed to date. The consultant will be directed to prepare operations and maintenance cost projections for five alternative water development.

Following work on these alternatives, participating agencies will decide whether to pursue a large joint project, or use the information to develop small, more individual projects.

It would be premature to label this study and process a success. But the nine local government agencies can only gain from the trust that has been built by their cooperation, by the information gathered for the future, by cost savings from joint planning efforts, and by the creative new methods used to complete this study.●

HOLOCAUST VICTIMS' REMEMBRANCE DAYS

HON. ROBERT J. MRAZEK

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 30, 1984

● Mr. MRAZEK. Mr. Speaker, a half century ago, unspeakable atrocities, which would eventually claim millions of innocent lives, began in Europe. Today, I would like to discuss the observance of the Days of Remembrance of the Victims of the Holocaust.

As its title suggests, the essential reason for this commemoration is remembrance. We choose to remember for many reasons. First and, perhaps, foremost, we review what has happened so that it will never happen again. clearly, it is our collective responsibility to insure that our children, our children's children, and all of history's children remember the evil perpetrated by the Nazi regime.

Second, recalling and recording the Holocaust transforms its victims from an anonymous multitude into 6 million unique human beings. Thus, this act of commemoration serves to continue the fight against the Nazi dehumanization of the Jews by reaffirming the individual dignity of each of those who were murdered or imprisoned. As Wall Street Journal editor Daniel Henninger concluded a year ago:

> The undeniable dignity of each human being may seem like an idea so obvious that any intelligent person would take it for granted. That in the end is the point. The Holocaust movement would like to make sure that a simple and obvious idea is not taken for granted.

In this spirit of remembrance, I am pleased to note that planning and fundraising for a National Holocaust Memorial/Museum are proceeding at an impressive pace. The placement of the museum in our Capital's National Mall insures it the importance and accessibility it deserves. I am also pleased by the recent announcement of a New York City Holocaust Memorial Center. The living memorial, hopefully to be housed in the historic U.S. Custom House, would present the themes of Jewish immigration to New York, European Jewish life, and the Holocaust and its aftermath. This Memorial Center will serve to acquaint New York City, with the largest Jewish population in the world and the largest number of Jewish Holocaust survivors in one community, with the memory of its rich Jewish heritage and of the Holocaust.

Mr. Speaker, I am deeply moved by our Nation's efforts to recognize the victims of the Holocaust and to educate our people to the horrors of bigotry. Certainly, this is a goal which we, as Americans, must fully support so that we may comprehend the unique lessons of the Nazi Holocaust, as well as the universal implications of genocide and persecution. I would like to thank our colleague, ROBERT GARCIA, and the other cosponsors of this special order, for their efforts in commemoration of the Days of Remembrance of the Victims of the Holocaust.●

ROUKEMA LAUDS CHARLES LAGOS OF GLEN ROCK, N.J., ON HIS RETIREMENT AS MAYOR

HON. MARGE ROUKEMA

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to ask my colleagues to join with me to honor the achievements and contributions of a distinguished public servant from Glen Rock, N.J. After 8 years as mayor of Glen Rock, following 7 years as a councilman, Mayor Charles Lagos has announced he will retire. This indeed is a sad note for the people of Glen Rock.

Charlie, as he is affectionately known to his friends throughout Bergen County, has a solid record of civic accomplishment and conscientious leadership. After distinguished military service in Europe during the Second World War, Mayor Lagos settled in Glen Rock in 1952. He went to work to make Glen Rock and Bergen County a superlative place in which to live.

In addition to service in the town government of Glen Rock, Charlie Lagos has served as commander of American Legion Post 145 in Glen Rock. Three consecutive Governors of New Jersey from both political parties had enough confidence in Mayor Lagos to appoint and reappoint him to the Passaic Valley Sewerage Commission. He has also served as president of the Republican Mayors' Association, treasurer of the Northwest Bergen County Utility Authority, and as deputy Bergen County administrator.

But perhaps two hallmarks of his career best point to Charlie Lagos' concern for his community. He has given long service to the youth of Bergen County in the Boy Scouts. He has served as president of the Ridgewood-Glen Rock Boy Scout Council. For this the Boy Scouts have given Charlie Lagos one of its most coveted congratulations, the Silver Beaver Award. A second hallmark of Charlie's unfailing dedication is his work to improve senior citizens' housing in Glen Rock.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure that you and our colleagues will join to congratulate Mayor Charles Lagos on an exemplary career of public service. We all wish him well in retirement, and extend also to his wife, Lillian, two children and eight grandchildren our deep gratitude for the untiring efforts they too have extended to our community life. Mayor Lagos' commitment to his community over the years should serve as shining examples to those who follow the path of public service.●

AMERICA IS NOT BECOMING LIKE THE SOVIET UNION

HON. ED BETHUNE

OF ARKANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. BETHUNE. Mr. Speaker, the recent May Day celebrations in the Soviet Union and other East European countries should not pass without comment. Once again, we are treated to Soviet claims of kindness and concern for all people even as they display their military might. We also noticed with sympathy Lech Walesa's attempt to show that all is not well in the Soviet-controlled countries.

For indisputable evidence, we need only look to Afghanistan. The press has been full of reports lately that the Soviets are escalating their 4-year war in Afghanistan, and have, for the first time, begun using high-altitude bombers in an attempt to crush the Afghan freedom fighters.

Incredibly, some Members of this Congress—House and Senate—have tried to equate the U.S. rescue mission in Grenada with the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. I could not let this May Day pass without remarking on the naivete of these Members as well as that of the self-appointed "peace" representatives who also prematurely condemned the President for our action in Grenada.

I think such Members have forgotten the overriding principle of totalitarian governments, such as the Soviet Union. I believe the Soviet purpose and mentality has been grossly underestimated by those Members.

Hannah Arendt, in her book entitled, "The Origins of Totalitarianism" speaks of the Bolshevik movement. She says:

> At the time it seized power the danger to the movement lay in the fact that, on the one hand, it might become "ossified" by taking over the state machine and frozen into a form of absolute government, and that, on the other hand, its freedom of movement might be limited by the borders of the territory in which it came to power. To a totalitarian movement, both dangers are equally deadly: A development toward absolutism would put an end to the movement's interior drive, and a development toward nationalism would frustrate its exterior expansion, without which the movement cannot survive.

In other words, a totalitarian government is threatened when its freedom of movement is limited to one country. They must expand to survive, and to convince their own people that their goal or world domination is being carried out.

Some also seem to have forgotten Khruschev's infamous statement of November 18, 1956, about capitalist countries. He said, "We will bury you."

And yet, we have people saying the U.S. rescue mission in Grenada makes them wonder if we are becoming like the Russians in Afghanistan.

Let us consider a few facts: It has been estimated that there are anywhere from 105,000 to 150,000 Soviet forces in Afghanistan, and from 35,000 to 40,000 Soviet troops in Poland. In Grenada we don't have combat troops. The United States only has about 350 MP's who are functioning as policemen and 35 Coast Guard personnel who are training Grenadians for their own coast guard. All of these U.S. personnel are scheduled to be gone by the 1st of next year. I should also note here that the British will also be helping to train Grenadians.

Can we say the same thing about the troops in Afghanistan or even Poland?

Soviet combat troops have already been in Afghanistan for 4 years.

First, the Soviets tried to take over in 1978 by murdering the president and putting their own puppet in power. Soon, the Soviets found out the Afghan's were not going to accept Soviet domination without a fight. They found out it was not going to be like rolling tanks into Hungary or Czechoslovakia.

I think we should stop and ask ourselves what the Soviets wanted to gain by invading Afghanistan. Certainly they did not feel threatened by this small country that barely had a military force.

Maybe the fact that they were not strong militarily had something to do with the Soviets decision to invade. But, I would again remind Members that totalitarian governments cannot survive without expansion.

And what goals—by contrast—did the United States have for going into Grenada? First and foremost, there was grave concern for the safety of American students on the island. How could anyone doubt that the fears of the students for their lives were real when we watched those students get off the planes in the United States and kiss the ground.

Second, the United States was responding to an urgent and formal request for help from the Organization of Eastern Caribbean States (OECS), as in accordance with the OECS treaty. These countries were afraid for the security and safety of the region.

We must remember that most of these small island nations also barely have a military. Yet the Cubans had already trained a 2,000- to 3,000-man army of Grenadians and had plans for a 25,000-member militia. For a country whose total population is only around 80,000, that is a pretty big army.

That the Communist's attempted to take over Grenada from within was further proven by the Communist-supplied weapons and equipment found on Grenada. There were about 10,000 rifles and machineguns, millions of ammunition rounds, and even some armored personnel carriers. All this for an island in the same region as other islands who did not even see a need for a military.

And what about the reception given to the Americans in Grenada? The U.S. press is always quick to zero in on any dissention to U.S. policy, yet all we saw were pictures of Grenadians cheering U.S. soldiers, and all we heard was "thank God for America." As a matter of fact, I understand Grenadian merchants are quickly selling out of T-shirts that say "God Bless America."

The pictures coming from Poland and Afghanistan are in great contrast. May Day is traditionally a day to honor the workers movement. Yet, we saw workers in Poland who do not like the Communist government and are willing to demonstrate they do not. These honored workers got the water hoses turned on them. These honored workers got martial law from the Soviets in 1981. As a bonus, these honored workers saw the Communists outlaw Solidarity in 1982. They cannot stand to be honored much more.

The Soviets are beyond water hoses in Afghanistan. Their use of high-altitude bombers in trying to gain control of the Panjshir Valley should give us some indication of how intent the Soviets are in dominating the Afghans. For the first time, the Soviets are using bombers from the U.S.S.R., not just the fighters from the Afghan bases.

The Soviets are also increasing the number of troops in Afghanistan. We should examine the numbers of U.S. troops in Grenada again. As I said earlier, the United States now has no combat troops in Grenada. The most we ever had there were 7,500, and they were only in Grenada for 2 months at most. The Soviet troop numbers in Afghanistan have gone from 85,000 to 105,000, and now we are hearing estimates as high as 150,000.

For all these troops, the Soviets do not seem to have much control. According to the State Department, "Attacks on Soviet and regime officials are common even in areas claimed to be under government control, and Soviet personnel need extremely tight personal security because of the constant threat of kidnaping and assassination." Increased Soviet brutality against civilians has, moreover, undermined the intense Soviet/regime propaganda campaign portraying the Soviets as peacekeepers and Karmal himself as a beloved and democratically chosen leader.

Once the U.S. and Eastern Caribbean forces had restored stability to Grenada and routed out the Cubans, there was no reason to fear for safety—either on the part of the military or civilians. There has also been no attempt by the United States or the Grenadians in power to stifle dissent. Newspapers in Grenada publish freely, public rallies are held, the court system operates, and an open society flourishes.

Reports from Afghan freedom fighters say that; "not a single Afghan is untouched, not a single village unscathed. The millennia-old water systems have been deliberately destroyed by the Soviets, water and soil poisoned, flocks and herds wiped out, hospitals and schools reduced to rubble, and virtually all the educated class killed or driven out."

"But as fiercely as the Afghans fight for their freedom, they are just as determined to keep their culture intact."

Again, I think we must remember the goals of totalitarianism. Arendt says:

Evidence that totalitarian governments aspire to conquer the globe and bring all countries on Earth under their domination can be seen repeatedly in Nazi and Bolshevik literature. What is decisive is that totalitarian regimes really conduct their foreign policy on the consistent assumption that they will eventually achieve this ultimate goal, and never lose sight of its no matter how distant it may appear or how seriously its idealistic demands may conflict with the necessities of the moment. They therefore consider no country as permanently foreign, but, on the contrary, every country as their potential territory.

Now I would ask the naysayers on Grenada, does it still seem as if the United States is acting like the Soviet Union?●

ADMINISTRATION'S ARMS CONTROL RECORD

HON. THOMAS J. DOWNEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. DOWNEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, the record of the Reagan administration on arms control negotiations with the Soviet Union is the subject of much debate and analysis. It is often difficult, however, to find authoritative facts on the specifics of that record.

Recently, though, the Center for Defense Information (CDI) has compiled a highly readable and reliable fact-sheet on the Reagan arms control record. The paper outlines the Reagan record in negotiations with the Soviet Union and goes on to compare this administration's negotiations with previous administration's achievements. It is, all told, a valuable analysis of a critical issue and I commend it to my colleagues.

CENTER FOR DEFENSE INFORMATION, MAY 1984

FACT SHEET ON REAGAN NUCLEAR WEAPONS NEGOTIATING RECORD

"We are caught up in a vicious and dangerous cycle in which suspicion on one side breeds suspicion on the other and new weapons beget counterweapons. In short, both the United States and its allies, and the Soviet Union and its allies, have a mutually deep interest in a just and genuine peace and in halting the arms race. Agreements to this end are in the interests of the Soviet Union as well as ours."—John F. Kennedy, June 10, 1963.

"In today's world, a nation's security does not always increase as its arms increase when its adversary is doing the same, and unlimited competition in the testing and development of new types of destructive nuclear weapons will not make the world safer for either side."—John F. Kennedy, July 26, 1963.

The Reagan Administration has a singularly unsuccessful record in obtaining any measure that would control, limit, or reduce the military nuclear competition between the United States and the Soviet Union.

President Reagan is the only American President who has not met with Soviet leaders since diplomatic relations were established fifty-one years ago by Franklin D. Roosevelt. President Reagan is the first President since Harry F. Truman not to have accomplished any agreement or treaty to limit nuclear weapons or reduce the risk of nuclear confrontation. All Presidents since Eisenhower have reached some agreement with the Soviet Union in their first term in office.

This fact sheet enumerates the Reagan record in negotiating with the Soviet Union. To give a basis for comparison with other Presidents, U.S.-Soviet summit meetings and the record of past achievements in the area of nuclear weapons control are also listed. It is useful to recall the record of other Presidents who acted in the national interest to maintain our security through cooperative measures undertaken with the Soviet Union.

REAGAN NUCLEAR WEAPONS NEGOTIATING RECORD

"Before arms control negotiations may be undertaken, the security of the United States must be assured by the funding and deployment of strong military forces sufficient to deter conflict at any level or to prevail in battle should aggression occur."—Republican Party Platform, 1980.

"Democracies will not sacrifice to protect their security in the absence of a sense of danger. And every time we create the impression that we and the Soviets are cooperating and moderating the competition, we diminish that sense of danger."—Richard Perle, Assistant Secretary of Defense for International Security Affairs, Newsday, February 18, 1983.

Intermediate Nuclear Forces (INF) Talks.—Negotiations failed at the end of 1983 as the United States began to deploy Cruise and Pershing II missiles to Europe. Success of diplomatic efforts to resume these talks as a separate negotiation is now highly unlikely.

Strategic Arms Reduction Talks.—START is now at a standstill. The talks recessed at the end of round five on December 8, 1983 with no date set by the Soviet delegation for resumption. This action by the Soviet Union was a consequence of the INF Talks breaking down. In any event, the negotiations were making little demonstrable progress. The original U.S. position called for a radical restructuring of Soviet forces, centered on deep cuts in their ICBM force. President Reagan belatedly recognized that Soviet rejection was certain because of their heavy concentration of forces in ICBMs, telling TIME magazine in February 1984 that, "I never heard any one our negotiators or any of our military people or any one else bring up that particular point." Under the original proposal mutual vulnerability to a first-strike against land-based missiles would have risen dramatically because of a great increase in the ratio of accurate warheads to targets. The Reagan START proposal would have allowed the U.S. to build all the new nuclear weapons it was planning on. The Soviet counter offer was for both sides to reduce one-third below SALT II limits in total launchers. This would have required a more substantial reduction by the Soviet Union, down to 1800 launchers.

Anti-Ballistic Missile (ABM) Treaty.—On March 23, 1983 President Reagan proposed a massive research program to develop a total defense against nuclear weapons. If development and testing proceed, this program would violate the 1972 ABM Treaty and could lead to its abandonment. It may also lead to an all-out offensive nuclear arms race to overcome defensive systems. The resulting competition between interacting offensive and defensive weapon systems and their countermeasures would likely result in a strategic and economic nightmare. The President's desire to build a defense that would render "nuclear weapons impotent and obsolete" is now a Pentagon program called the Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI). It carries an initial price tag of $25 Billion for research over the next five years. Development and deployment of a total defense could have a total cost of from hundreds of Billions to a Trillion or more dollars. There remains the unanswered question of where the money for adequate conventional military forces will come from if such a program proceeds.

Anti-Satellite (ASAT) and Space Weapons Negotiations.—President Reagan has failed to resume talks on an ASAT treaty since taking office. Talks by the previous Administration had made progress toward a worthwhile treaty. On April 2, 1984 the President submitted a report to Congress detailing his opposition to negotiations, claiming that a treaty could not be verified. Many experts dispute this contention. There has been no Administration interest whatsoever in domestic calls for negotiations to prohibit space weapons before it is too late to do so. There has been no response to the 1983 Soviet draft treaty which proposes a comprehensive ban on space weapons.

Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty.—In a July 1982 meeting of the National Security Council, the Reagan Administration decided not to resume trilateral negotiations (U.S., U.K., U.S.S.R.) to end all testing of nuclear explosives underground. This was in spite of very substantial progress made toward a treaty by the previous Administration. Both the United Kingdom and the Soviet Union expressed regret over this action. An end to all testing remains largely a matter of political will. The 1963 Limited Test Ban Treaty, the 1967 Non-Proliferation Treaty, and the 1974 Threshold Test Ban Treaty all pledge the United States to actively engage in efforts to ban all nuclear explosions for all time.

Threshold Test Ban Treaty.—On February 17, 1983 the Reagan Administration requested the Soviet Union to reopen talks on the still unratified 1974 Treaty for the purpose of improving verification provisions that have never gone into effect. On March 28, the Soviets turned down this request, stating that if the U.S. were to ratify the treaty the verification measures contained in the treaty protocols would be instituted and verification concerns would be easily resolved. The Soviets also stated that if any problems remained, the ratified treaty could be amended.

ACCOMPLISHMENTS OF FORMER PRESIDENTS

President, year, and treaty or agreement

Eisenhower, 1959: The Antarctic Treaty.—Prohibited nuclear explosions and deployment of nuclear weapons. Internationalized and demilitarized the continent. Served as a model for later "nonarmament" treaties.

Kennedy, 1963: Memorandum of Understanding Regarding the Establishment of a Direct Communication Link.—The agreement that established the so-called "Hot Line" between Washington and Moscow for crisis control in time of emergency.

Kennedy, 1963: Limited Test Ban Treaty.—Prohibited nuclear explosive testing in the atmosphere, outer space and underwater. Pledged all parties to the treaty to achieve the discontinuance of all testing of nuclear weapons for all time. Made it much more difficult to know what nuclear effects there are from explosions in the atmosphere. Made first-strike calculations much more difficult.

Johnson, 1967: Outer Space Treaty.—Banned nuclear weapons or other weapons of mass destruction from outer space. Limits the use of the moon and other celestial bodies exclusively for peaceful purposes. Modeled on its predecessor, the Antarctic Treaty. Provides a basis for further efforts to control space weapons.

Nixon, 1970: Non-Proliferation Treaty.—Helps prevent the spread of nuclear weapons to non-nuclear states. Provides assurance that peaceful nuclear programs are not diverted to military uses.

Nixon, 1971: Seabed Arms Control Treaty.—Banned emplacement of nuclear weapons on the ocean floors.

Nixon, 1971: Agreement on Measures To Reduce the Risks of Outbreak of Nuclear War.—Pledged both sides to take measures to improve safeguards against accidental or unauthorized use of nuclear weapons. Arranged for immediate notification should a risk of nuclear war arise from any incident of accident.

Nixon, 1971: Agreement on Measures To Improve the USA-USSR Direct Communication Link.—Improved the technology used to implement the 1963 "Hot Line" agreement.

Nixon, 1972: Anti-Ballistic Missile (ABM) Treaty.—Restricted ABM deployments to 100 launchers at one site, so that a nationwide missile defense system could not be built. Of limited duration, reviewed every five years. Prohibited development, testing, or deployment of sea-based, air-based, or space-based ABM systems and their components along with mobile land-based systems. This treaty made it possible to limit offensive weapons in the companion Interim Agreement. Established the Standing Consultative Commission to promote the objectives and implementation of the ABM Treaty and the Interim Agreement known together as SALT I (Strategic Arms Limitation Talks).

Nixon, 1972: SALT I Interim Agreement.—Limited strategic offensive nuclear weapons. Froze at existing levels the number of strategic ballistic missile launchers on both sides and permits an increase in SLBM launchers only with the dismantling or destruction of a corresponding number of older ICBM or SLBM launchers.

Nixon, 1973: Agreement on the Prevention of Nuclear War.—Outlined general conduct of both countries toward each other and toward third countries regarding the avoidance of nuclear war. Committed both nations to consult with each other during situations which could lead to nuclear war.

Nixon, 1974: Threshold Test Ban Treaty.—Prohibited underground nuclear weapons tests exceeding 150 kilotons in explosive power. The threshold is militarily important since it removes the possibility of testing new or existing weapons going beyond the limit into the megaton range. In Article I both parties obligated themselves to continue negotiations for a comprehensive test ban treaty. Not yet ratified by the U.S. Senate.

Ford, 1974: Peaceful Nuclear Explosions Treaty.—Companion to the Threshold Treaty above. Insured that no nuclear explosion for peaceful purposes would excede 150 kilotons. Provisions for on-site inspection. Not yet ratified by the U.S. Senate.

Ford, 1974: Vladivostok Aide-Memoire.—Major breakthrough agreement that provided basic framework for the SALT II Treaty.

Carter, 1979: Treaty on the Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms (SALT II).—Most comprehensive offensive arms treaty to date. Restricted what the Soviet Union could deploy in an all out arms race. Allowed equal numbers of delivery vehicles, MIRVed ballistic missiles, heavy bombers with cruise missiles, banned mobile missiles and rapid reloading of silos, limited heavy missiles and the number of warheads (MIRVs) each may carry to 10 on ICBMs and 14 on SLBMs. Provisions for data exchange. Froze number of ICBM launchers (silos).●

INTRODUCTION OF COAL BILL

HON. MARILYN LLOYD

OF TENNESSEE

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mrs. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I have today introduced two nearly identical bills, which differ only in the proposed funding mechanisms but have the same chief goal, to demonstrate new and emerging technologies for the environmentally clean use of coal. The first, and preferred version of this legislation, provides funding through existing appropriations and has 17 original cosponsors. The second, which I did not seek cosponsors for, provides funding through new authorization with the appropriations source yet to be determined. Both bills are entitled the "Clean Coal Production and Utilization Technology Demonstration Act."

Mr. Speaker, the enhanced use of our Nation's abundant coal resources can be made possible only if the technology is developed and demonstrated to address the acid rain and other pollution problems and broaden gasification and liquefaction options for this important domestic energy resource. These environmental problems have raised significant political concerns with many Members and it is obvious that our constituents expect leadership from the Congress in mitigating further environmental degradation from the necessary use of fossil energy resources.

Our proposed legislation is designed to address these environmental problems in a practical and politically acceptable fashion. There is a critical need for reasoned and deliberate action on acid rain with acceleration of the research program as the only clear requirement. Our goal is to initiate and expedite existing efforts to broaden the technology options for mitigating acid rain effects through application of new technologies. As regards longer-term technologies, there is a clear Federal need to encourage their acceptance in the marketplace through demonstration by initiating an accelerated and focused effort for coal technology demonstration.

Many of my colleagues have suggested enormously expensive policies for controlling pollution from powerplants and other coal burning facilities, which I cannot support at this time because acid rain is not well understood. Also, it is extremely important for every Member to recognize that we cannot simply legislate technology; it must be developed and scaled-up from the laboratory bench. If we ever expect to control pollution from coal utilization, there must be a rational program to develop the control technology in phase with achieving a better understanding of the national cost-benefit stakes in acid rain.

With all of the political furor created over acid rain and the vital national interests associated with energy independence, it seems almost incredible that the fossil energy research and development efforts in the Department of Energy budget has been cut back in each of the past 3 years. Yet, even in the face of private sector reluctance to prove out new technologies for improving environmental quality in the use of our coal resources, it has become increasingly evident that Government action is not only warranted but is necessary to protect our environment and our national security.

Our legislation establishes a technology demonstration program on advanced systems for coal burning, coal cleaning, and converting coal to liquids and gases. Its intermediate goal is to reduce air pollution from coal-burning powerplants and other facilities, and the longer term goal is to prove more efficient and environmentally acceptable processes for advanced combustion producing coal-derived fuels. The program will be administered by the Secretary of Energy in addition to his other responsibilities in coal research and development.

We have specified four near-term technologies for demonstration which seem promising at this stage, yet have not been proven at scale. We have provided for long-term, second generation technologies which may provide us with the answers to encourage cost-effective, clean coal usage.

Our preferred version of this legislation differs from all other coal technology bills principally in the specified funding mechanism. Because an intent of the legislation is to foster the technology for converting coal to synthetic fuels, we believe that it is appropriate to tap the funding for the Synthetic Fuels Corporation (SFC). Of the roughly $18 billion appropriated to the Energy Security Reserve, which is outstanding, the SFC might at best use only $4 billion through this fiscal year. Our legislation proposes to reallocate just $1.85 billion, that is, 10 percent of the overall appropriation for a cause that is most complementary to that of the Energy Security Act (ESA). In this way, we avoid asking for the appropriation of new funds and I believe since the ESA conferees expected a DOE demo program to remain in place, we support a program consistent with the intent of that act.

The other version of this legislation is exactly the same in substance as my preferred version, but provides funding through an additional authorization rather than using the Energy Security Reserve. This approach is less acceptable to me, and I know to many of you, because it raises the budget authority levels in the face of rising deficits. Although I felt constrained to offer this verison as an alternative, I am, nevertheless, hopeful that it will not be necessary to ask this body to act on it. I would remind my colleagues that budget outlays for either the SFC or this DOE program must be faced in the fiscal year 1986–87 timeframe.

Mr. Speaker. I am encouraged by the support I have gotten in the early circulation of this legislation and I would encourage other Members to join us in sponsoring this important coal bill. A summary and the text of the Clean Coal Production and Utilization Technology Demonstration Act is included for the use of all my colleagues in the House:

SUMMARY OF THE CLEAN COAL PRODUCTION AND UTILIZATION TECHNOLOGY DEMONSTRATION ACT

SECTION 2—FINDINGS AND PURPOSES

The Congress finds that the United States has vast domestic coal resources which are in the national interest to develop and utilize in an environmentally acceptable manner. It is in the national interest to demonstrate advanced methods for reducing air pollution (including acid rain) from coal-burning powerplants and other coal utilization facilities.

The purposes of the Act are: 1. To authorize a program to demonstrate advanced coal production and utilization technologies for reducing air pollution from coal-burning electric powerplants, including emissions which may be potentially contributing to acid rain; and 2. Develop and demonstrate technologies for reducing emissions for coal utilization in general.

SECTION 3—DEMONSTRATION PROGRAM

The Secretary is authorized to establish a technology demonstration program on advanced systems to reduce air pollution from coal-burning powerplants and other coal utilization facilities. The Secretary is required to prepare detailed specifications for these advanced systems, and, within six months from the date of enactment, to solicit proposals from the public to cooperatively construct, install and operate them.

Detailed specifications must be prepared for the following advanced systems:

Limestone injection multi-stage burner to reduce SO^2 and NO^2 emissions by at least 50%;

Atmospheric fluidized bed boiler to reduce sulfur dioxide emissions by 90%, NO_x emissions to a maximum of .3 pounds/million BTU, and particulate levels to a maximum of .03 pounds/million BTU;

Stack emission desulfurization unit to reduce sulfur oxide emissions by at least 90% by weight while burning coal of 2.5% sulfur by weight;

Coal processing facility to remove at least 90% of total sulfur content;

Other undemonstrated technologies emerging from research and development programs which could reduce emissions from new and existing coal-burning powerplants;

100 MW_e pressurized fluidized bed combustion boiler;

Gasification combined cycle facilities to demonstrate (1) gasification in air or oxygen of 1000 tons of coal/day capacity while meeting clean air standards; and (2) advanced gas turbines.

10–30 MW_e coal gasification fuel cell system;

15 MW_e or less coal-fired gas turbine;

MHD facility of 10–50 megawatts electric;

5–10 tons/day coal liquifaction pilot plant; and Coal gasification system of 15 MW_e equivalent.

Other systems to demonstrate promising technologies for extracting oil and gas from shale and coal through field tests.

The Secretary is directed to report to Congress at least 45 days prior to accepting any proposal.

SECTION 4—FIVE YEAR PLAN

The Secretary is directed to prepare and submit to Congress a five year plan for achieving the goals of the Act.

SECTION 5. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

$1.85 billion of the funds appropriated to the Energy Security Reserve is subject to authorization and annual appropriation to the Secretary to carry out the Act.

The Secretary is authorized to spend $200 million of the $1.85 billion from the Energy Security Reserve beginning in Fiscal Year 1986.

H.R. 5592

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Clean Coal Production and Utilization Technology Demonstration Act".

FINDINGS AND PURPOSES

SEC. 2. (a) The Congress finds and declares that—

(1) the United States has vast domestic coal resources which can provide a long term, secure, and relatively inexpensive source of energy for meeting the Nation's electrical generating needs;

(2) it is in the national interest to find ways to utilize more of our most abundant energy resources in an environmentally acceptable manner;

(3) existing technology for reducing, or "scrubbing", sulfur emissions from coal-burning electric powerplants is energy intensive, prohibitively expensive, and results in a residue which is difficult to dispose of and is a potential source of environmental concern in itself;

(4) it is in the near- and long-term national interest to demonstrate the most technologically advanced and cost-effective methods for reducing air pollution from coal-burning electric powerplants, including those emissions which may potentially be contributing to acid rain;

(5) there must be an accelerated and focused effort to develop and introduce into the marketplace improved and advanced technologies that limit the emission of sulfur dioxide, nitrogen oxides, toxic trace elements, and particulate matter which result from coal utilization;

(6) a credible and productive Federal coal research and development program must be defined and sustained; and such a program must be adequately funded, insulated from short-term political and market fluctuations, sufficiently broad in scope to provide technology options, and executed in cooperation with the private sector and the Federal Government;

(7) the United States Synthetic Fuels Corporation is not responsible for demonstrating advanced coal production and utilization technologies at pilot-plant scale;

(8) the Nation has significant oil and gas resources in shale and underground coal which should be utilized as part of the Nation's overall fossil fuel mix;

(9) low cost hydrogen production from gasification is the key to efficient conversion of our domestic coal resource to liquid fuels; and

(10) the United States must develop a synthetic fuels capability for producing liquid fuels from coal; and the advanced liquefaction technologies involved are important for conversion of our plentiful coal resources.

(b) The purposes of this Act are (1) to authorize a program to demonstrate advanced coal production and utilization technologies for reducing air pollution from coal-burning electric powerplants, including emissions which may potentially be contributing to acid rain, and (2) to identify, develop, and demonstrate those clean coal technologies which may be developed for the long term for reducing emissions from coal utilization.

TECHNOLOGY DEMONSTRATION PROGRAM

SEC. 3. (a) The Secretary of Energy (in this Act referred to as the "Secretary") is authorized and directed to establish a technology demonstration program on advanced systems to (1) reduce air pollution from coal-burning powerplants and other facilities, and (2) prove more efficient and environmentally acceptable processes for producing coal-derived fuels. Such program and its funding shall be in addition to the Research and Base Technology activity contained in the existing fossil energy research and development budget of the Department of Energy. The Secretary shall prepare detailed specifications for each advanced system identified in subsections (b), (c), and (d); and within 6 months from the date of the enactment of this Act the Secretary shall solicit proposals from the public to construct, install, and operate these systems pursuant to such detailed specifications, on a cooperative basis with appropriate assistance from the Secretary, in one or more new or existing electric powerplants.

(b) The Secretary shall prepare detailed specifications for advanced systems to demonstrate each of the following near-term technologies:

(1) A Limestone Injection Multistage Burner (LIMB) capable of being installed in new or existing electric powerplants of at least 100 megawatts electrical capacity. The burner must be designed to reduce the uncontrolled levels of sulfur dioxide and nitrogen oxide emissions from burning coal by at least 50 percent each.

(2) An atmospheric fluidized bed combustion boiler capable of being installed in new or existing coal-burning electric powerplants of at least 100 megawatts electric capacity. The fluidized bed combustion boiler must be designed to reduce the potential sulfur dioxide emissions from burning coal by at least 90 percent by weight, and to reduce levels of all nitrogen oxides to a maximum of 0.3 pounds per million British thermal units (BTU) and particulate levels to a maximum of .03 pounds per million Btu.

(3) A stack emission desulfurization unit which produces only dry discharges and can be installed in new or existing coal-burning electric powerplants of at least 150 megawatts electric capacity. The unit shall be designed to reduce sulfur oxide emissions by at least 90 percent by weight while burning coal of at least 2.5 percent of sulfur by weight.

(4) Coal processing facilities which would remove at least 50 percent of the total sulfur content of the coal and be designed to remove at least 90 percent of total sulfur content. The capacity of these facilities must be at least 50 tons of coal per hour.

(5) Other undemonstrated technologies emerging from United States and international coal research programs which could contribute to the reduction of sulfur and nitrogen oxides, and particulate emissions, from new and existing coal-burning powerplants. These may include (but shall not be limited to) advanced combined sulfur and nitrogen oxides control processes, advanced, dry sorbent injection, and processing and combustion of clean coal-derived fuels from advanced processes.

(c) The Secretary shall prepare detailed specifications for advanced systems to demonstrate each of the following longer-term, second generation technologies:

(1) A pressurized fluidized bed combustion boiler including repowering of existing oil or gas-fired utility boilers which are at least 100 megawatts electric in size.

(2) Gasification combined cycle facilities/technology capable of demonstrating (A) gasification in air and oxygen at a size of 1,000 tons of coal per day or greater and the use of hot gas clean-up devices which remove particulates and sulfur oxides to meet or exceed national clean air standards, and (B) advanced gas turbines capable of being integrated with various classes of gasifiers and with gas clean-up technologies which demonstrate long-life and meet or exceed national sulfur and nitrogen emissions standards.

(3) A coal gasification fuel cell system of 10-30 megawatts electric including a state-of-the-art gasifier coupled to a phosphoric acid fuel cell. This system should be designed to demonstrate the ability of the fuel cell to function on coal-derived gaseous fuel.

(4) A coal-fired gas turbine of 15 megawatts electric equivalent or less designed to be fuel flexible, to handle various fuel forms, and to have the potential of yielding low cost power.

(5) A magnetohydrodynamics facility of 10-50 megawatts electric to demonstrate the engineering feasibility of power generation with coal-fired operation.

(6) A coal liquefaction pilot plant to demonstrate an advanced coal-liquefaction process at 5-10 tons per day.

(7) A coal gasification system of 50 megawatts electric equivalent designed for optimal production of hydrogen suitable for use in liquefaction processes and in upgrading shale oil and other feedstocks.

(d) The Secretary shall also prepare detailed specifications for systems to demonstrate any other advanced technologies which may appear promising for extracting gas and oil from shale and coal through field tests, with an emphasis on exploiting these resources in the Eastern region of the United States.

(e) At least 45 days prior to accepting any proposal for technology demonstration pursuant to this section, the Secretary shall report to the appropriate committees of Congress on the details of such proposal and explain why such proposal should be selected in lieu of any competing proposals.

FIVE-YEAR PLAN

SEC. 4. The Secretary, within 8 months following the date of the enactment of this Act, shall prepare and submit to the appropriate committees of Congress a five-year national coal engineering, development, and technology demonstration plan. Such plan shall be updated annually and submitted to such committees by January 31 of each succeeding year, and shall include—

(1) an assessment of the potential usefulness of each project to be undertaken pursuant to this Act, including specifics on the potential applications for the technology involved and the amount of emissions reductions which could be achieved through the use of such technology;

(2) an identification of the cost sharing arrangements among participants, including any financial assistance to be provided by foreign allies of the United States in the projects involved;

(3) an identification and definition of the near- and mid-term options for expanding, in an environmentally acceptable manner, the use of coal in the electric utility, industrial, and other sectors of the economy;

(4) a detailed description of the specific activities which have been, or will be, undertaken by the Department of Energy to encourage the use of such options;

(5) a statement and explanation of criteria for setting specific priorities, of major project milestones, and of a technology demonstration strategy for achieving these priorities and milestones;

(6) a comprehensive management plan which includes a detailed description of the financial requirements for the implementation of the five-year plan, and a listing of the expected yearly expenditures to carry out such plan; and

(7) the methods and procedures to be used to expedite the transfer of the technology involved and the lessons learned in the demonstration program.

SEC. 5. (a) Of the funds appropriated to the Secretary of the Treasury and deposited in the Energy Security Reserve established in the Treasury of the United States pursuant to section 195 of the Energy Security Act (Public Law 96-294, 42 U.S.C. 8795), $1,850,000,000 shall be available for use in carrying out the purpose of this Act pursuant to authorization and annual appropriation to the Secretary of Energy for those purposes. When so specified in appropriation Acts, any such funds so appropriated to the Secretary of Energy shall remain available until expended.

(b) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary of Energy, from the funds reallocated pursuant to subsection (a), $200,000,000 for the fiscal year 1986 to carry out the purposes of this Act.●

THE ABUSE OF THE CONGRESSIONAL ROLE IN FOREIGN POLICY

HON. NEWT GINGRICH

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, it is now obvious that there is a serious problem concerning the role of Congress in U.S. foreign policy. While there have been other battles over the roles of each branch in the foreign policy process, this time it has reached dangerous proportions. Liberal Democrats in the Congress have not just opposed the President's policies, which is their undeniable right, but they have taken outrageous steps toward undercutting those policies. There is little hope of any policy succeeding if there are 535 Members of Congress who believe that they can operate their own little State Department.

While no one can deny that Congress does have a role in American foreign policy, it must be remembered that the Constitution specifically delegates foreign policy prerogatives to the President. Conducting foreign policy, already difficult under the best of circumstances, is complicated immensely when the Congress oversteps it's constitutional bounds. Hugh Sidney, a serious and accurate observer of the American political process, has written a column in the April 30 edition of Time magazine which indicates how serious the current situation is. I submit this article so that some of my colleague may see the devisive effect they are having upon our foreign policy. The text of the article follows:

THE PRESIDENCY—BE WARY OF THE CAUTIOUS

(By Hugh Sidey)

One worry about the great Washington shout-out over how the U.S. should stand tall in the world is that we could soon produce a feckless breed of political leaders who would spend their time debating how best to do nothing.

Secretary of State George Shultz fretted about that in his office the other day. He is partisan, of course, but his concern over America's tendency to be gun-shy about world involvement reflects a broader perspective. "I think you have to be willing to be engaged where you think you might make a difference," he said. While he talked, the arguments about our involvement in Nicaragua raged on Capitol Hill, and the memories of our withdrawal from Lebanon were all too fresh.

Shultz accepts that such failures are an inevitable part of his job. But any U.S. leader, he believes, must take these types of risks or the world will overwhelm us. "I think the Lebanon situation was one that we almost necessarily had to get into," says Shultz. "So we didn't succeed in attaining the objectives that we sought, but we haven't failed completely either." In short, the wilingness to try was an important part of the policy.

There is about Shultz a little of the Princeton halfback he once was: a bit battered but more determined than ever to keep running. He views the Democrats who assault him every day as unrealistic. Gary Hart, who wants the U.S. military out of Central America, "has the stop-the-world-I-want-to-get-off idea," the Secretary says. Criticism from allies as well as foes will always be a leader's lot, says Shultz, and so too will be internal doubts and frustrations. But much of what he hears now, he protests, is "a way of saying we should never try anything that is difficult."

There are echoes of Shultz's position in former Secretary of State Dean Rusk's accusation that Congress meddles too much in foreign policy, rarely giving a presidential initiative a full and fair chance. A former National Security Adviser to a Democratic President fears that the Democrats may this year produce a presidential candidate, a party platform and a campaign mood that will be strongly isolationist. Both Walter Mondale and Gary Hart shy too much from risk, which is always a part of leadership, this man believes.

The enfant terrible of the House floor, right-wing Republican Newt Gingrich, 40, of Georgia, scales the rhetorical heights by quoting Winston Churchill about the years before World War II: "The malice of the wicked was reinforced by the weakness of the virtues."

Churchill had a string of spectacular failures as well as successes. So did Franklin Roosevelt in domestic policy during his struggle to lift America out of the Depression. John Kennedy's first year was one of almost continuous defeat, but fortunately, it was a year also marked by unceasing experiment in diplomacy and military improvement. In the American legend, the discouragements with men and events heaped on Abraham Lincoln in his early years of the Civil War sent him into fits of melancholia. But he always climbed out and tried again. He did something. That is not the least of the characteristics that kept Richard Nixon at the center of our political life for nearly 40 years. Even today he runs a kind of shadow presidency that speaks with the tempering that has come from defeat after defeat but still endures, uring the likes of Shultz to come back stronger after each rebuff.

The one thing worse that unsuccessful efforts in the Middle East, Central America or anywhere might be to do nothing at all, a pleasant prospect in the short run but a course that often invites the ultimate disaster.

A long time ago, students of power concocted a formula that has yet to be disproved: "An army of stags led by a lion would be better than an army of lions led by a stag."●

DANGEROUS PRECEDENTS EMPHASIZE THE SERIOUSNESS OF THE "DEAR COMMANDANTE LETTER"

HON. NEWT GINGRICH

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, the following column by Morton Kondracke, "Will Soviets Meddle With Our Election?" is a clear warning to every American that there is an increasing danger of foreign countries deliberately interfering in, and manipulating, the American political process.

Mr. Kondracke cites several Soviet attempts to exert such influence. For example, he notes the Soviet efforts to influence the recent election in West Germany and their stalling on arms control negotiations. He also cites attempts by the Ayatollah Khomeini during the Iranian crisis, by guerrilla groups in El Salvador, and by the Marxists in Nicaragua. These examples serve as a chilling reminder to every American that as foreign governments grow smarter, there is an increasing danger that their attempts to exploit our open free political system will grow greater.

In particular, as Mr. Kondracke notes, the "* * * Soviets meddled deeply in last year's West German elections. They did so rather deftly for a time, too * * *" and "The guerrilla groups in El Salvador and the Sandinistas in Nicaragua also know how to affect American political institutions. They regularly time military offensives and negotiating offers to affect votes in Congress."

Mr. Kondracke notes, "There is considerable evidence to suggest that, despite Mr. Chernenko's flat denial on April 8, the Soviets are already attempting to affect the American elections."

Let me suggest that while Mr. Kondracke might not agree with my conclusions, I believe that his article reemphasizes how dangerous the "Dear Commandante letter" to Nicaragua, signed by 10 leading House Democrats, is. It also shows the need to set a precedent that such letters and behavior are unacceptable, and that Members of Congress should not invite foreign governments to manipulate American politics or to influence the balance of political power inside the United States. The text of the column follows:

WILL SOVIETS MEDDLE WITH OUR ELECTION?

(By Morton Kondracke)

This presidential election may develop into more than a contest between American parties. We may have foreign adversaries horning in—possibly violently.

Konstantin Chernenko, for one, has said specifically that he is not conducting Soviet policy to affect the American elections. Undoubtedly the Ayatollah Khomeini would say the same, as would left-wing revolutionary leaders in Central America.

Yet, judging by the record, why should anyone believe them? The Soviets meddled deeply in last year's German elections. They did so rather deftly for a time, too, inventing one peace overture after another to support the Social Democratic Party, which probably would have rejected deployment of U.S. missiles had it been elected.

Something happened in Moscow, however, a few weeks prior to the West German voting. From soft and seductive, the Soviet line suddenly swerved and became turbulent and threatening.

One Soviet press article said a victory by the conservative Christian Democratic Union would lead Germany to "the nuclear gallows." Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko said U.S. missile deployment would lead to "an extended nuclear confrontation" amid which West Germany "cannot be ignored."

The Soviet attempt to intimidate Germany failed—the CDU won and the missiles are being deployed—but the example demonstrates that the Soviets are not averse to playing in other countries' politics. Why not in America's, too?

Meanwhile, the Ayatollah already has some experience with American elections. He helped elect Ronald Reagan in 1980 by holding onto the U.S. Embassy hostages in Tehran. He has not been adverse to medding in U.S. policy since then, either. It was an Iranian-backed Shi'ite group which perpetrated the bombing of the U.S. Marine barracks in Beirut last fall. It cannot have escaped Mr. Khomeini how the bombing broke America's will to persist in Lebanon and led to cries for a withdrawal.

The guerrilla groups in El Salvador and the Sandinistas in Nicaragua also know how to affect American political institutions. They regularly time military offensives and negotiating offers to affect votes in Congress.

There is considerable evidence to suggest that, despite Mr. Chernenko's flat denial on April 8, the Soviets already are attempting to affect the American elections.

Scarcely a day goes by without a denunciation of the administration in one forum or another. Soviet diplomats, Olympic officials, and academics are all spouting the same line—that Ronald Reagan is impossible to deal with and that U.S.-Soviet relations have never been worse and are getting more dangerous by the day.

The Soviet walkout from talks about intermediate-range nuclear weapons and the indefinite postponement of strategic arms talks seem to be part of the same strategy of convincing the world (and the American public, too) that Mr. Reagan is making the world unsafe.

Yet the Soviets know that President Reagan wants—and, politically, may need—progress on arms control prior to the November election.

Mr. Reagan totally altered his rhetoric in January, offering to show flexibility in negotiations and to consider any Soviet proposal. Behind the scenes, the word has been out for weeks that the United States would be willing to reach a quick interim agreement on strategic weapons instead of pushing for a full START treaty.

Such an option was suggested on a Sunday talk show in January by former Natinal Security Adviser Zbigniew Brzezinski, a Democrat. The next day, Mr. Brzezinski received a phone call from President Reagan, who said: "This is one of your fans calling."

Extensive administration study of Mr. Brzezinski's ideas ensued, and the Soviets know full well that such a deal as Mr. Brzenzinski proposed could be had more or less for the asking.

The deal involves American acceptance of the Soviet START proposal of limiting ballistic missile launchers to 1,800 on each side, and the Soviets' agreeing to the American idea of cutting back on the number of nuclear warheads in each side's arsenal. Mr. Reagan originally suggested a limit of 5,000 warheads (down from 8,000 on each side at present), but Mr. Brzezinski is suggesting 7,000 as a START starter, and the administration would go along.

Such a deal could be sealed at a Reagan-Chernenko summit just like the one that former President Gerald Ford held in 1974 with Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev at Vladivostok. The agreement would not have to be ratified by the Senate, and Mr. Reagan could come back saying—with justification—that it was a better deal than either Vladivostok or President Jimmy Carter's SALT II Treaty, both of which left each side with more than 2,250 launchers.

Why doesn't the Soviet Union agree to the deal? Three plausible reasons have been discussed: (1) the Soviets are waiting for a better offer from Reagan, (2) they don't want to help Reagan's political chances, and (3) they do not have their own internal politics sorted out yet.

Mr. Chernenko's elevation to the Soviet presidency more or less eliminates point three. One other possibility is a variation of points one and two—that the Soviets are waiting to see how American politics are developing and won't make a deal if Mr. Reagan looks like a loser, but will if he seems certain to win.

In other words, Soviet policy may not affect the election outcome, but be affected by it. If the Ayatollah or Central American guerrillas try to determine the outcome of the election, they may not succeed, either, but it would not be surprising if they tried.●

CRS STUDY: PRODUCTION OF BINARIES COULD LEAD TO CW PROLIFERATION

HON. JOHN EDWARD PORTER

OF ILLINOIS

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, the nonpartisan Congressional Research Service (CRS) just released a report entitled "Binary Weapons: Implications of the U.S. Chemical Stockpile Modernization Program For Chemical Weapons Proliferation," which concludes that producing binary chemical weapons undermines a variety of military, technical, political, psychological, and moral constraints now prohibiting other nations from producing or using chemical weapons.

The CRS study refutes the argument of binary proponents that chemicals used to produce binary chemical weapons are harmless. DF, a precursor chemical needed to produce the deadly nerve gas, "has a chemical structure similar to that of many phosphorus-based insecticides." DF is toxic and is lethal in relatively large amounts. Those working with the chemical would need to take safety precautions.

Binary chemical weapons, the study reports, are not more militarily efficient than unitary weapons. In fact, binaries are inefficient in ways that unitaries are not. For example, the reaction within the binary system cannot be relied upon to go to completion if suboptimal reaction conditions are present during its flight toward the target.

Mr. Speaker, this report is additional proof that the Congress should stand behind our 15 year commitment not to produce costly and unnecessary binary chemical weapons. I strongly recommend that my colleagues obtain a copy of this most worthwhile report. Wayne Biddle's article, "New Chemical Weapons Reported Less Efficient," from the Monday, April 30 New York Times is an excellent outline of the highlights of the report. Mr. Biddle's article follows:

NEW CHEMICAL WEAPONS REPORTED LESS EFFICIENT

(By Wayne Biddle)

WASHINGTON, April 29.—New chemical weapons sought by the Reagan Administration may be less efficient as weapons and more conducive to arms proliferation and terrorist use than existing types, according to a study by a nonpartisan Congressional organization.

The new weapons, called binary because they rely on two nonlethal chemicals that would mix to become lethal after the ammunition had been fired, are part of a $1.1 billion chemical warfare program requested for the 1985 fiscal year by President Reagan. Of this sum, $105 million is to prepare for production of binary artillery shells and aerial bombs called Bigeye that would release nerve gas.

The American chemical warfare stockpile consists of weapons that contain lethal nerve gas. No new chemical arms have been produced in the United States since 1968.

Congress has consistently denied the Pentagon money to produce binary weapons, though it has approved funds for a factory in Pine Bluff, Ark., that would manufacture binary weapons. The fiscal year 1984 budget authorization act allowed preparations for binary production, but prohibited the final assembly of any weapons until Oct. 1 1985, when the President would have to certify that it was in the national interest to make binary chemical weapons.

On the issue of chemical weapons proliferation, the study, conducted by the Congressional Research Service, said that the "chemistry of binary weapons makes them easier to produce than unitaries," or weapons that use a single gas. The study said that binary weapons "require lower investments of capital, skilled labor, and expertise than their unitary counterparts."

"A move by the U.S. or any other state to produce, stockpile and deploy binary nerve gas weapons will not necessarily cause terrorists to want binaries per se, but it would probably reduce the political and motivational factors inhibiting their decision" to seek chemical arms, the report concluded.

The Congressional study also said there were "significant misperceptions regarding binary technology." For example, it said, all binary ingredients are not harmless. Of the two chemical precursors of a nerve gas known as GB or sarin that would be formed in the artillery shells, one is toxic and would require safety precautions, the study said.

MAY NOT MIX PROPERLY

Moreover, "Binaries are inefficient in ways unitary weapons are not," the report found. It said that the chemical ingredients in the weapons may not mix properly if a shell's flight is too brief or if a bomb's glide path is too long.

An additional problem exists for Bigeye bombs, the report said. The two chemicals that form a nerve gas known as VX in a Bigeye are mixed once a plane carrying the bomb is airborne and ready to drop the bomb. An aircraft would not be permitted to return to base with a bomb onboard in which the gases have mixed to become lethal, the report said. Pilots returning with an unused Bigeye "would have to find a place to safely jettison it," the report said.

In testimony last week before a subcommittee of the Senate Armed Services Committee, Theodore S. Gold, head of chemical warfare programs in the Defense Department, said the Administration's 1985 budget request "does not include funds for complete facilities, for all the component parts, nor the load, assembly, and pack" of binary weapons. He said that about $90 million more would be required to complete production facilities at Pine Bluff, and about $10 million more would be needed to finish weapons that would be started if the 1985 request were approved by Congress.

Mr. Gold said the American stockpile of chemical artillery shells, produced from 1955 to 1968, "appears to be in good shape today." He said that an investigative panel had determined that "at least 50 percent" of the nerve gas, which is older than the munitions themselves, should still be usable by 1990.

SIZE OF STOCKPILE A SECRET

The size and composition of the American chemical weapons stockpile are military secrets, though professional journals estimate that there are between 30,000 and 40,000 tons of usable lethal chemicals. About half of this is thought to be GB and VX nerve gas, with the rest being mustard gas of World War II vintage. The Soviet arsenal is presumed by experts to be comparable.

In addition to the $105 million for preparations to produce binary weapons, Mr. Gold said the Administration was requesting $431 million for protective equipment, $26 million to maintain the current stockpile, $150 million to destroy obsolete weapons and $20 million for a new scientific laboratory at Edgewood Arsenal, Md., with the balance of the funds requested going for research and development.

The Congressional study noted that "other systems for the delivery of chemical agents are in various stages of research and development, including the Multiple Launch Rocket System, cruise missiles, and ground-launched and air-launched missiles."●

THE UNEQUAL ACCESS BILL

HON. JAMES H. SCHEUER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. SCHEUER. Mr. Speaker, in the near future the House will consider the "Equal Access Act" (H.R. 5345) under suspension of the rules. The Washington Post has twice published editorials which expressed grave concern about the bill. The April 13 editorial pointed out that my distinguished colleague from New York, GARY ACKERMAN, offered a number of amendments which would have prohibited discrimination against minority religions and prohibited outside religious leaders from conducting religious activities in the public schools. Unfortunately, these amendments were defeated.

I encourage all of my colleagues to read carefully the Washington Post editorial prior to House action on H.R. 5345.

The editorial follows:

THE UNEQUAL ACCESS BILL

We publish today letters from proponents of the so-called Equal Access Bill reported by the House Education and Labor Committee last week. The bill would require any secondary school that allowed any student groups to meet during free time on school property to allow religious groups the use of similar facilities. Failure to comply would result in the loss of all federal funding for the school system.

There are a number of specific reasons why this simple-sounding bill is objectionable. First, public secondary schools are not usually, during the school day, used as public forums. Laurence Tribe mentions in his letter the Widmar case, which we had cited, though not in the context he suggests. In Widmar, the Supreme Court allowed religious student meetings on the campus of the University of Missouri. Students at that institute are adults, they are not attending classes under compulsion of law, and the university had a policy allowing more than 100 groups of all varieties to use their meeting rooms. As the Supreme Court carefully pointed out, the university was a true open forum, and religious groups could not, therefore, be excluded. The bill under consideration, however, deals with children and would allow school administrators to bar all sorts of groups—political, social, ethnic—while still requiring that religious groups be allowed to meet.

It is clear from the legislative history of the bill that some religious groups with only a few adherents could be denied the use of school facilities and that ministers and laymen representing religious organizations could attend these meetings—on school property and on school time—and lead students in prayer and workship. Testimony before Congress is replete with expressions of this understanding. Rep. Gary Ackerman (D-N.Y.) offered amendments at both the subcommittee and full committee markups to prohibit both practices. His amendments were defeated.

Many well-meaning people in Congress do not seem to understand what is so troubling about this measure. "The practical result of the bill," said Linda Tarr-Whelan of the National Education Association in opposition, "would be extraordinarily divisive." Public schools should simply not be in the business of encouraging children to separate into groups for religious purposes. Each American is free to follow the tenets of the Rev. Sun Myung Moon, Louis Farrakhan or Pope John Paul II. That is guaranteed by the free exercise clause of the First Amendment. But when these religious leaders or their surrogates are given time and space to promote their beliefs in the public schools, while others may be cut out because their group is small, we run directly into the prohibitions of the establishment clause of the First Amendment.

This bill creates a risk that children will believe that their teachers, school administrators and the government are promoting religion, and even in some cases favor some religions over others. The way to avoid this risk is to keep religion in homes and churches and to spend school time on education.●

CRIME CONTROL LEGISLATION

HON. MANUEL LUJAN, JR.

OF NEW MEXICO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. LUJAN. Mr. Speaker, on March 16, 1983, the administration transmitted to the Congress its proposed comprehensive crime control legislation. It was introduced in the House and Senate on the same date—in the House as H.R. 2151 and in the Senate as S. 829. The Senate has already passed its version of the legislation, S. 1762, and I strongly urge the House to do the same. This legislation has been called the most significant Federal anticrime measure in over a decade. We owe it to our constituents to move this legislation promptly, because it is a thorough and comprehensive proposal for reform of certain aspects of our Federal criminal law and because it is a vitally important subject, impacting strongly on the lives and well-being of all our citizens.

The Senate bill, S. 1762, contains 10 titles, all of which are especially critical reforms in combating violent crime. They include bail and sentencing reform, criminal forfeitures and revision of the insanity defense. All of these areas address specific problems in current law. For example, the measure would make it more difficult to grant pretrial release to those particular defendants who pose a serious threat to the safety of the community. Currently, under chapter 207 of title 18, it appears that when considering pretrial release in noncapital cases, the judicial officer may consider only whether the defendant will appear at trial or other judicially required proceedings. Danger to the community and to others is only specified as a consideration in postconviction or capital cases. This proposal includes measures that would take into account safety of others and the community when considering pretrial release.

I am sure my colleagues would agree that this and other areas of the Federal criminal law are in urgent need of reforms such as the one just described—reforms which have long been urged by those who are concerned with our ability to deal with violent crime and repeat offenders. Mr. Speaker, I would conclude by urging my colleagues to move this legislation promptly. The matter is too urgent and of too great an importance to our law-abiding constituents to be allowed to remain in committee. I am certain that all of us who take our responsibilities seriously would agree that the House should stop deliberately stalling on S. 1762 and allow it to reach the floor so that we might all have the opportunity for full and fair debate.●

HISPANIC REGIONAL BUSINESS CONFERENCE

HON. ESTEBAN EDWARD TORRES

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. TORRES. Mr. Speaker, on April 17, 1984, I had the pleasure of participating in the Los Angeles Hispanic Regional Business Conference. The conference provided a unique opportunity for Hispanic business organizations to meet and exchange ideas. It also allowed these organizations to begin developing future strategies to enhance and promote their businesses.

The Los Angeles Hispanic Regional Business Conference was sponsored by the U.S. Hispanic Chamber of Commerce and cosponsored by five other Hispanic business organizations. Among its cosponsors was the Los Angeles Latin Business Association.

At this time I would like to share with my colleagues the remarks that were made by the president of this organization to the participants of the conference.

Statement of Raymond Rodriquez, president, Latin Business Association follows:

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

The city of Los Angeles was founded on September 4, 1781 as (El Pueblo de la Reina de Los Angeles, The Village of the Queen of the Angels). This tiny settlement was originally populated by a group of 11 families comprising 44 persons recruited from Mexico whose purpose was to establish outposts for Spain. In two centuries this dusty pueblo has gradually transformed into a huge urban complex of world wide importance and Hispanic influence.

Because Los Angeles has belonged to three countries, Spain, Mexico and The United States, The Latin Business Association also represents Latino business owners from every Spanish speaking country in the world. Our current 1984 officers come from Colombia, Peru, Mexico, Santo Domingo, U.S.A. just to name a few.

During the last 50 years the Los Angeles area has witnessed the development of some of the most important influential associations of our time. The contributions of these Hispanic associations of Los Angeles has reached international acclaim.

On behalf of our officers, directors, Board of Trustees and general membership, we invite you to join us in networking with the USHCO. The Hispanic Bankers Association, Mexican Chamber of Commerce, Mexican-American Grocers Association, not just a force for the 80's, but as a united voice calling upon those who are in decision policy making, that the Hispanic business owners of America will indeed make the difference in this country.

RAYMOND RODRIGUEZ, President, Latin Business Association.●

THE NICARAGUAN PEOPLE ENDURE 5 YEARS OF EMPTY SANDINISTA PROMISES

HON. C. W. BILL YOUNG

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Speaker, the Sandinistas ruling Nicaragua have been in power almost 5 years, but have yet to deliver on any of their promises to provide free elections, freedom of religion, freedom of the press, and uphold the sanctity of human rights.

Never has this been clearer than during the Easter season when on Good Friday, more than 100,000 Nicaraguans turned out in Managua to observe the holy day and loudly protest the Sandinista government's attempts to stifle religious worship.

On Easter Sunday, a pastoral letter from Nicaragua's nine Roman Catholic bishops was read during worship services asking that all Nicaraguans enter into negotiations for peace. The Sandinista's Interior Minister Tomas Borge promptly denounced this suggestion of peace saying:

This is a criminal suggestion. The pastoral letter seeks confrontation and violates the law of the land.

Clearly the Sandinistas have demonstrated that peace does violate the law of their land, as does the freedom to worship and the right to a free press. A Nicaraguan pastor who visited the United States last month told of the atrocities the Sandinistas have commited against the Nicaraguan people and their religious leaders.

Prudencio Baltodano, a pastor in the Unified Pentecostal Mission in Nicaragua, was attacked and tortured by a Sandinista army unit who bayoneted his neck and cut off one of his ears, saying:

We are Communists and don't believe in God.

This is another example of the perverted view the Sandinistas have of human rights for the Nicaraguan people.

In the most recent attack on religion, the Sandinistas, through their government sponsored newpapers, have launched a propaganda campaign against Managua's Roman Catholic Archbishop Obando y Bravo. The Sandinistas have attempted to link the archbishop to former Nicaraguan President Somoza through old photographs and false headlines.

The Sandinistas believes that by controlling the Nicaraguan press and scaring people away from the churches, the Communist control of Nicaragua will flourish. Instead, the Sandinista government is finding that the Nicaraguan people will stand up and fight for their rights and will not be silenced until the Government fulfills its promises of 1979:

ARCHBISHOP RAPS MEDIA IN NICARAGUA

MANAGUA, NICARAGUA.—Managua's Roman Catholic archibishop issued a letter accusing the government-controlled news media of conducting a campaign against him and saying the media would be responsible for his safety.

The office of Archbishop Miguel Obando y Bravo said in the letter dated Saturday that the media of the left-wing Sandinista junta was trying to "darken" the church leader's reputation by making him appear to be a rightist.

It said the church was holding "the official means of communication" responsible for "anything that might happen in terms of the personal safety" of the archbishop.

Archbishop Obando y Bravo has frequently been critical of the Sandinistas, who gained control of the country after winning the civil war against the government of the late President Anastasio Somoza in July 1979.

Church-state tensions increased after a pastoral letter was read in Catholic churches on Easter Sunday calling for negotiations between the government and anti-Sandinista rebels.

The archbishop's office said the prelate was in Rome on Saturday, meeting with Pope John Paul II and other church leaders.

Articles and broadcasts critical of Archbishop Obando y Bravo have beome prominent since the Easter statement.

On Tuesday, the government newspaper Barricada published old photographs of the archbishop meeting with Mr. Somoza. On the same day, the pro-government newspaper El Nuevo Diario carried a picture of the archbishop with the headline, "Guess Who's in Florida?" Many Nicaraguans consider Florida a haven for ex-members of Mr. Somoza's national guard.

"Not having any meaningful argument against (the pastoral) call for reconciliation, they have begun to attack the archbishop . . . trying to darken his image as pastor," the statement from Archbishop Obando y Bravo's office said. "They (the government media) have manipulated mere meetings and acts of protocol from the past" in a way that makes the archbishop appear as a Somoza supporter, it added.

NICARAGUAN, IN WASHINGTON, SAYS HE WAS TORTURED BY SANDINISTAS

WASHINGTON, April 23.—Prudencio Baltodano wears a white cloth over his ears to cover scars that he said remain from being tortured by Nicaraguan Army forces in February.

Mr. Baltodano, who says he was a Pentecostal preacher and farmer in El Tendido near the Atlantic coast of Nicaragua when he was attacked, came to Washington recently under the sponsorship of Nicaraguan rebels to tell his story of torture to Congress, the United Nations and the Organization of American States.

Mr. Baltodano is the latest Nicaraguan or Salvadoran to come to Washington under the auspices of an organization either favoring or opposing United States policy in Central America, to bear witness to atrocities said to have been committed by government forces or rebels in the region. The goal of these visits is to try to influence public and Congressional sentiment about Central America.

Last year, several Nicaraguans who said they had been mistreated by United States-supported rebels were brought to Washington by opponents of United States covert activities and were made available to reporters for interviews.

WANTS TO TESTIFY

Mr. Baltodano said in an interview that he wants to testify about repression in his homeland, and about how one of his ears was cut off and he was bayoneted in the neck for no apparent reason other than his religious beliefs.

A spokesman for the Nicaraguan Embassy, Isolda Hurtado, said that the Government had no knowledge of Mr. Baltodano or of the attack he described. "It is another story made up by the contras to discredit Nicaragua," she said, referring to the Nicaraguan rebel forces by the name under which they are known in Central America.

The Nicaraguan Permanent Commission on Human Rights has interviewed Mr. Baltodano and considers his story authentic, according to Marta Patricio Baltodano, the commission's national coordinator.

Mrs. Baltodano, who is no relation to Mr. Baltodano, said by telephone from Managua that the commission expects to present his case to the Nicaraguan Government this week.

Miss Hurtado, the embassy spokesman, said the commission had no legal standing as a human rights organization. She said the legitimate human rights organization in Nicaragua is the National Commission to Promote and Protect Human Rights.

ABUSES ARE ALLEGED

Roberto Ferrey, a spokesman for a Nicaraguan rebel group based in Costa Rica, said that the treatment of Mr. Baltodano was a reflection of abuses by Government forces against religious leaders and Miskito Indians in Nicaragua. Mr. Ferrey, who came with Mr. Baltodano to Washington from Costa Rica, said his rebel organization, the Democratic Revolutionary Alliance, was paying for the visit to publicize the Sandinista Government's misdeeds.

Reagan Administration officials and leaders of the alliance have said the organization is supported in part by the Central Intelligence Agency. Guerrilla leaders in Costa Rica said last week that this aid has included cash, it was not clear whether money provided by the C.I.A. was used to bring Mr. Baltodano to Washington

TIED TO A TREE

Mr. Baltodano, who has scars on his forehead and neck and no left ear, said he had done nothing to provoke the attack. "I was a farmer and preacher," he said. "I was not interested in politics."

Mr. Baltodano, 40 years old, said a unit of the Nicaraguan Army seized him and a friend early in February—he does not recall the exact date—while they were building a shelter for their families. He said the families were fleeing from fighting between Government forces and rebels.

Mr. Baltodano said several of the soldiers tied him to a tree, warning him. "You don't know what we do to evangelical pastors. We are Communists and don't believe in God." Mr. Baltodano said he was a pastor in the Unified Pentecostal Mission, one of a number of evangelical groups in Nicaragua that have attracted a large following.

He said he did not know the identities of the soldiers who assaulted him, but said they came from a Nicaraguan Army unit.

Mr. Baltodano said that although he bled profusely from the wounds inflicted during torture, he was able to escape with difficulty through the forest when the soldiers departed.

Mr. Baltodano said he now lives in Costa Rica. Mr. Ferrey said that Mr. Baltodano would present his case to members of Congress and talk to officials from the United Nations and Organization of American States.●

FEDERAL GRAND JURY REFORM

HON. JOHN CONYERS, JR.

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, I am today introducing a bill to reform the Federal grand jury. My bill is patterned upon the American Bar Association's Model Grand Jury Act. The ABA's Model Act implements some 30 principles and was developed during a 7-year study by a committee that included Federal and State prosecutors, public and private defense counsel, academicians, and judges. The ABA is to be commended for its work in this area.

The grand jury is a venerable part of our Anglo-American system of jurisprudence and was developed in part to protect individuals from the power of the prosecutor. Over time, however, the Federal grand jury has ceased to serve that function. It has become a tool that the prosecutor can, and sometimes does, use unfairly to intimidate, harass, and malign putative defendants. My bill reforms the Federal grand jury by: authorizing a witness to be accompanied by counsel in the grand jury room; providing transactional immunity to a witness who is compelled to give self-incriminating testimony; requiring that the target of an investigation be permitted to testify before the grand jury if the target so wishes; precluding the use of evidence seized in violation of the constitutional rights of the target; and requiring that exculpatory evidence be presented to the grand jury.

The reforms in my bill are realistic responses to valid criticisms and their implementation is long overdue. If enacted, my legislation will insure that the Federal grand jury is not merely a tool of the prosecutor but can serve its historical function of protecting individuals from prosecutorial overreaching.

H.R.—

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Grand Jury Reform Act of 1983".

SEC. 2(a) Chapter 215 of title 18 of the United States Code is amended to read as follows:

"§ 3321. Number of grand jurors; summoning additional jurors

Every grand jury impaneled before any district court shall consist of not fewer than sixteen nor more than twenty-three persons. If fewer than 16 of the persons summoned attend, they shall be placed on the grand jury, and the court shall order the marshal to summon, either immediately or for a day fixed, from the body of the district, and not from the bystanders, a sufficient number of persons to complete the grand jury. Whenever a challenge to a grand juror is allowed, and there are not in attendance other jurors sufficient to complete the grand jury, the court shall make a like order to the marshal to summon a sufficient number of persons for that purpose.

"§ 3322. Grand jury; rules of evidence

The attorney for the government shall not present to the grand jury evidence against a target which such attorney knows was obtained in violation of that target's constitutional rights.

"§ 3323. Duty to disclose exculpatory evidence to the grand jury

"(a) The attorney for the government shall disclose to the target, and if feasible present to the grand jury, all evidence that tends to negate one of the material elements of the crime.

"(b) The attorney for the government shall alert the grand jury to the existence of, and inform the grand jury of such grand jury's right to call for, evidence that bears upon a possible affirmative defense and that raises a reasonable doubt about the target's guilt.

"(c) After arraignment upon an indictment, the court, upon motion of the defendant made within 30 days after the defendant or defendant's attorney knew or reasonably should have known of the ground for such motion, shall dismiss an indictment if the court finds that—

"(1) the attorney for the government knowingly failed to comply with subsection (a) of this section; or

"(2) the attorney for the government knowingly failed to comply with subsection (b) of this section, and that, had that subsection been complied with, the grand jury would not have been justified in returning an indictment.

"§ 3324. Rights of the target of a grand jury investigation

"(a) Except as hereinafter provided, the attorney for the government shall advise a person upon whom such attorney or the grand jury has begun to focus an investigation, either personally, through counsel, or at such person's last known address, that such person is—

"(1) a target of the grand jury investigation;

"(2) entitled, upon waiver of immunity, to a reasonable opportunity to testify before the grand jury; and

"(3) entitled to present the attorney for the government with exculpatory evidence and the names and addresses of others who possess exculpatory information.

"(b) An indictment that issues without the notice required by this provision shall be dismissed, unless the court finds that the attorney for the government is unable with reasonable diligence to notify the target or that there are reasonable grounds to believe that giving such notice would create an undue risk of danger to other persons, flight of the target, or other obstruction of justice.

"§ 3325. Grand jury subpoena

"(a) Unless the court finds special need upon a showing by the attorney for the government or unless the witness consents to a shorter notice period, no subpoena to appear before a grand jury may require any witness to testify or produce a book, paper, document or other object designated therein at any time before 72 hours after service of the subpoena.

"(b) A subpoena to appear before the grand jury shall—

"(1) state the general subject matter of the grand jury investigation;

"(2) set forth any substantive provision of law, violation of which is under consideration by the grand jury, if such provision is known at the time of issuance of the subpoena;

"(3) warn that anything a witness says or any evidence given to the grand jury by a witness may be used against such witness in a court of law; and

"(4) advise the witness of the privilege against self-incrimination and of the right to the advice of an attorney as provided in section 3326(a)(1) of this title while appearing before the grand jury.

"(c) A subpoena shall be returnable only when the grand jury is sitting.

"(d)(1) A motion relating to a subpoena, including a motion to quash such subpoena, may be made at any time to the court that issues such subpoena, and such court shall take appropriate action upon such motion.

"(2) A motion made under this section at least two days before the subpoena commands the witness to testify or to produce a book, paper, document or other object designated therein shall upon appropriate application stay such witness' appearance until the court has ruled on such motion.

"(4) Upon motion, the court may quash a subpoena if the court finds that—

"(A) a primary purpose or effect of the witness' appearance is to secure testimony or other information in preparation for the trial of any person who is already under indictment or formal accusation by the United States, a State, or a subdivision of a State, for such activities; provided, however, that this provision shall not limit the grand jury from investigating other potential offenses of the same or other defendants;

"(B) a primary purpose of the witness' appearance is to secure information for purposes other than investigation of criminal activity;

"(C) the witness has not been advised of such witness' rights, as specified in subsection (b) of this section;

"(D) the evidence sought is not relevant to any proper aspect of the grand jury investigation;

"(E) compliance with the subpoena would be unreasonable or oppressive;

"(F) a primary purpose of the subpoena is to harass the witness;

"(G) the witness has given written notice (that such witness will) exercise the privilege against self-incrimination unless a grant of immunity is obtained or unless the court determines that the witness is not entitled to assert the privilege; or

"(H) the grand jury is inquiring into events that were under consideration by another grand jury that affirmatively refused to return an indictment based on such events, unless there is additional, newly discovered evidence relevant to such inquiry or unless the court determines that the interests of justice require reconsideration of the matter by the grand jury.

"§ 3326. Rights of grand jury witnesses

"(a)(1) A witness before a grand jury shall have the right to be accompanied by counsel during such witness' appearance before the grand jury, but such counsel shall not address the grand jury, raise objections, make arguments, or otherwise disrupt proceedings of the grand jury and may disclose matters which occur before the grand jury only to the same extent as such attorney's client is permitted to make such disclosure.

"(2) If the court determines that counsel for a grand jury witness has violated subsection (a)(1) of this section, then the court shall take such measures as are necessary to ensure compliance with such subsection including exclusion of the offending counsel from the grand jury room.

"(b) Immediately prior to being called into the grand jury room, a witness shall be informed of such witness' rights as set forth in subsection (b) of section 3325 of this title, and if such witness is a target, that such witness is a target of the investigation.

"(c)(1) Any witness who has previously testified before a grand jury shall, upon request and under such conditions as the court deems reasonable, be entitled to examine and copy a transcript or electronic recording of that testimony before such witness is required to testify again before a grand jury considering matters relating to the witness' previous testimony. A witness proceeding in forma pauperis shall upon request be furnished a copy of such transcript without cost. Such transcript shall be made available for inspection and copying not later than forty-eight hours before the witness is required to testify, unless, for cause shown, the court finds that more time is required to prepare such a transcript. The disclosure requirement of this subsection shall not apply to the continuation of testimony interrupted by a routine recess of the grand jury.

"(2)(A) Upon a showing of good cause, the court may, at any time, order that the disclosure of the recorded proceedings of a grand jury be denied, restricted, or deferred, or make such other order as appropriate.

"(B) Upon motion, the court shall permit the attorney for the government to make such showing, in whole or in part, in the form of a written statement to be inspected by the judge alone. If the court enters an order granting relief following such a showing, the entire text of the statement shall be sealed and preserved in the records of the court to be made available to the appellate court in the event of an appeal.

"(d)(1) An attorney for the government shall not call before the grand jury any witness who has notified the attorney for the government 48 hours before the scheduled time for the witness' appearance that such witness will invoke the privilege against self-incrimination, unless such attorney obtains a grant of immunity for such witness. In the absence of such notification, the witness shall appear before the grand jury at the time and place specified in the subpoena.

"(2) If the attorney for the government contests the availability of the privilege under the circumstances, such attorney shall file under a seal a motion to compel the witness to testify or give evidence. In such event, the court shall hold a hearing in camera, unless the witness requests a public hearing, to determine whether the witness must appear before the grand jury and assert the privilege against self-incrimination to specific questions asked by the grand jury.

"3321 Number of Grand Jurors; summoning additional jurors.
"3322 Grand jury; rules of evidence.
"3323 Duty to disclosure exculpatory evidence to the grand jury.
"3324 Report of the target of a grand jury investigation.
"3325 Grand jury subpoena.
"3326 Rights of grand jury witnesses.

SEC. 3. Section 6002 of title 18 of the United States Code is amended by striking out "no testimony or other information compelled" and all that follows through "any criminal case, except" and inserting in lieu thereof "such witness shall not be prosecuted or subject to any penalty or forfeiture on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which such witness is compelled to testify under the order, except in".

SEC. 4. (a) Chapter 121 of title 28 of the United States Code is amended by adding at the end the following:

"§ 1893. Recalcitrant witnesses

"(a)(1) Whenever a witness in any proceeding before or ancillary to any grand jury appearance refuses to comply with an order of the court to testify or to produce a book, paper, document or other object designated therein, the attorney for the government may apply to the court for an order directing the witness to show cause why such witness should not be held in contempt.

"(2) After submission of such application and a hearing, at which the witness is entitled to be represented by counsel, the court shall, upon a finding that such refusal was without just cause, hold the witness in contempt and order the witness to be confined.

"(3) No hearing under this subsection shall be held unless 72 hours' notice is given to the witness who has refused to comply with the court order, except that a witness may be given a shorter notice if the court, upon a showing of special need, so orders.

"(b)(1) Any confinement for refusal to comply with an order to testify or produce other information shall continue until such time as the witness is willing to give such testimony or provide such information. No period of such confinement shall exceed the term of the grand jury, including extensions, before which such refusal to comply with the court order occurred, and in no event shall such confinement exceed one year. This subsection shall not prohibit confinement for longer than a year for criminal contempt for such refusal.

"(2) No person may be held in contempt and confined more than once under this section for refusal to comply with an order to testify or produce a book, paper, document or other object designated therein if the order concerns the same event, transaction, or set of transactions.

"(c) Any person confined pursuant to this section may be admitted to bail or released in accordance with chapter 20 of title 18, United States Code, pending the determination of an appeal taken by such person from the order of confinement unless the court finds that the appeal is frivolous or taken for delay. Any appeal from an order of confinement under this section shall be disposed of as soon as practicable, pursuant to an expedited schedule, and in no event more than thirty days from the filing of such an appeal.

"§ 1894. Rights and duties of grand jury and attorney for government

"(a) Upon impaneling a grand jury, the court shall instruct and charge the grand jury on the rights, responsibilities and duties of the grand jury, including—

"(1) the duty to inquire into criminal offenses that are alleged to have been committed within the jurisdiction;

"(2) the right to call and interrogate witnesses;

"(3) the right to request production of a book, paper, document or other object, including exculpatory evidence;

"(4) the necessity of finding credible evidence of each material element of the crime charged before returning a true bill;

"(5) the right to have the attorney for the government draft indictments for less serious charges than those originally requested by such attorney;

"(6) the obligation of secrecy; and

"(7) such other rights, responsibilities, and duties as the court deems advisable.

"(b)(1) Any person, including a witness who has previously appeared before the grand jury, may present the attorney for the government with exculpatory evidence and request that such evidence be disclosed to the grand jury, or request to appear personally before the grand jury to testify or present evidence to that body. The attorney for the government shall promptly forward any request under this subsection to the grand jury and may make a recommendation as to such request.

"(2) The attorney for the government shall keep a confidential record of all such requests and the action taken on each such request.

"(3) The grand jury shall not be required to hear any witness, or consider any book, paper, document or other object, but shall consider all requests forwarded to such grand jury by the prosecutor. The grand jury may, upon an affirmative vote of a majority of such grand jury's members, hear the testimony or consider any book, paper, document or other object offered by a person under this subsection. If the grand jury decides not to hear such testimony or consider a book, paper, document or other object offered, the attorney for the government shall notify the person making such request, in writing, of the refusal.

"(c) The attorney for the government shall not bring before the grand jury any witness who has given notice in compliance with section 3326 (d)(1) of title 18, United States Code, that such witness intends to exercise the privilege against self-incrimination, unless such witness has been given a grant of immunity or a court has determined that such witness must invoke the privilege in response to specific questions.

"(d) The attorney for the government shall not initiate, and a grand jury shall not conduct, an inquiry into a transaction or event if another grand jury has refused to return an indictment based on the same transaction or event, unless the court finds, upon a proper showing, that additional evidence relevant to such inquiry has been discovered or that the interests of justice require reconsideration.

"(e) The attorney for the government shall not make statements or arguments in an effort to influence grand jury action in a manner that would be impermissible at trial before a petit jury.

"§ 1895. Unindicted coconspirators

The grand jury shall not name a person in an indictment as an unindicted coconspirator to a criminal conspiracy. Nothing herein shall prevent supplying such names in a bill of particulars.

A grand jury should not issue any report that singles out a person to impugn such person's motives, holds such person up to scorn or criticism or speaks of such person's qualifications or moral fitness to hold an office or position. No grand jury report shall be accepted for filing and publication until it submits in camera a copy thereof to all persons named or identifiable and such persons are given the opportunity to move to expunge any objectionable portion of said report and have final judicial determination prior to the report's being published or made public. Such motion to expunge shall be made within ten days of receipt of notice of such report. Hearings on such motions shall be held in camera.

(b) The table of sections at the beginning of chapter 121 of title 28 of the United States Code is amended by adding at the end the following:

"1893. Recalcitrant witnesses.
"1894. Rights and duties of grand jury and attorney for the government.
"1895. Unindicted coconspirator.

H.R. 1234: THE SANER ECONOMIC ALTERNATIVE

HON. RICHARD L. OTTINGER

OF NEW YORK

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. OTTINGER. Mr. Speaker, in light of Ambassador Brock's announcement yesterday that the administration will not seek an extension of the Japanese voluntary restraint agreement for its automobiles, I would like to speak on behalf of H.R. 1234, the domestic content legislation, as a far better economic alternative to the quotas.

The U.S. Trade Representative pointed to the unprecedented profits which the auto companies have reaped as proof that they no longer need protection from imports. The administration is misled by this fact. These profits are not only a result of the protection these quotas bring American companies, but these companies rely on the extension of the quotas to continue reaping such profits. This is what is wrong with quotas. They protect the domestic industry from competition unlike the domestic content bill which will encourage foreign companies to build plants in the United States. Quotas also encourage foreign companies to increase their prices and sell only high price, high profit models within their quota allotment. The quotas have been similarly unsuccessful in meeting their stated goals:

The Vras have not curbed import penetration. Instead the percentage of imports increased from 16.5 percent in 1979 to 22 percent in 1983. A report released by the Department of Commerce in January, 1983 predicted that if the restraints are lifted Japanese penetration could increase 35 to 40 percent.

The quotas have not provided the U.S. companies with the incentive to produce a competitive small car. The purpose of the quotas was to give the U.S. "breathing room" to produce a small car which would compete with the Japanese counterpart. Yet, three years later, the American companies are meeting Japanese competition by moving their production overseas. GM alone, in its bid to import 300,000 Isuzus and Suzukis, would jeopardize the jobs of 71,400 American workers.

The inherent problem with quotas is they create a barrier behind which the American manufacturers can be sheltered from imports. These barriers protect the companies from damaging imports but do not induce them to produce a competitive product. Instead, the U.S. companies are able to raise their profits without substantially increasing their productivity. Also, it is not just the American companies who have reaped enormous profits from these the quotas, so to have the Japanese. Though Honda, Toyota and Nissan sell only 30 percent of their total production in the United States, 50 to 70 percent of their profits are earned in this market. The ultimate loser is the American consumer who is forced to pay higher prices because of the decreased competition.

The domestic content legislation would not have these adverse economic effects. The purpose of this legislation is not to protect the American companies from competition but rather to maintain a healthy auto industry—a vital cornerstone of our economy. The bill simply requires that every company, foreign or domestic, be required to invest a certain percentage of their production in this country to meet their sales. The result will be decreased import penetration and a revitalization of our domestic industry.

Domestic content will also succeed where the quotas have failed by creating a fair and level playing field for competition among auto companies. Because all manufacturers will be required to produce a certain percentage of their cars on American soil, all the factors which have given the Japanese an advantage such as lower taxes and a weaker yen will be eliminated. Its companies will be manufacturing under the same economic conditions as their American counterparts.

Under this scenario competition will increase and the price of cars will decline. The American companies will have to improve their productivity in order to compete with those products manufactured by foreign producers on this soil. This in turn will lower prices as producers vie for the same consumers.

The domestic content legislation would assist the American auto market to regain its competitiveness while maintaining consumer choice. The enactment of this bill will create an expanded auto market, which automobile companies must manufacture inexpensive, efficient and well-built cars in order to maintain their market position. The winners under these conditions would be the American workers, who will keep their jobs, and the American consumers who will be assured of good cars at reasonable prices.●

A TRIBUTE TO FATHER BRUCE RITTER

HON. CHRISTOPHER H. SMITH

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I rise this afternoon to pay tribute to a truly special man, Father Bruce Ritter, a Franciscan priest who has devoted his life to reducing the pain and suffering of thousands of runaways, homeless and exploited young people.

Father Ritter began his ministry to these suffering children in 1968 and opened Covenant House Under 21 in New York in 1972. Since 1977, Father Ritter and his army of committed staff and volunteers have helped rescue more than 50,000 troubled young people from a life of drugs and prostitution. He has dared to go right where the problem is most acute—amid the sleazy shops in Times Square and in similar locations in Houston and Toronto. He is now in the process of establishing shelters in Boston and Fort Lauderdale. He also founded a long-term home for street youth in Guatemala.

Mr. Speaker, Father Ritter is indeed practicing what our Christian faith teaches. Like the Good Samaritan in the Gospel, he has not only recognized our "neighbor" in the shattered lives and dashed hopes of runaways and homeless children, but has responded magnificently with practical help and care. He does not just talk about love, he practices it. He is a doer of the word of God, not just a hearer. Clearly, Mr. Speaker, Father Ritter's ministry has afforded thousands of young people who have been abused and exploited by the pushers and the pimps a fresh start, a glimpse of hope, renewed self-respect, the forgiveness of Christ and a taste of unconditional love. When I think of Father Ritter's outreach, I am reminded of our Lord's words "For I was hungry and you gave me food, I was thirsty and you gave me drink. I was a stranger and you welcomed me, naked and you clothed me. I was ill and you comforted me, in prison and you came to visit me. Then the just will ask Him, when did we see you hungry and feed you or see you thirsty and give you drink? When did we welcome you away from home or clothe you in your nakedness? When did we visit you when you were ill or in prison? The King will answer them: 'I assure as often as you did it for one of the least of my brethren, you did it for me.'"

Mr. Speaker, you will recall that President Reagan recently recognized the outstanding contribution made by Father Ritter. In his state of the Union address the President called Father Ritter an "unsung hero" who is in the vanguard to "soothe the sorrow and heal the wounds of our children." Pope John Paul II recently summoned Father Ritter to the Vatican to discuss his ministry to runaways and the homeless so that his work can be duplicated elsewhere in the world.

I am pleased to inform my colleagues that Father Ritter will be honored in my hometown next week. Father Ritter, a native son of Hamilton Township, N.Y. will be honored at a testimonial luncheon in Hamilton sponsored by Mayor Jack Rafferty. I am also happy to note that May 8 has been declared "Father Bruce Ritter Day" by Mayor Rafferty.

Mr. Speaker, I would conclude by pointing out that no earthly honors could ever adequately recognize the unselfish accomplishments of Father Ritter. As our Lord said in the Gospel. His true treasure will be in Heaven. But I hope Tuesday's testimonial—and the funds raised by the lunch—will serve as some encouragement to Father Ritter. To let him know that he, his ministry is much appreciated not just by the runaways and the homeless, but by us all.

Father Ritter, you are truly an inspiration.●

HOLOCAUST VICTIMS

HON. LES AuCOIN

OF OREGON

Monday, April 30, 1984

● Mr. AuCOIN. Mr. Speaker, it is with deep empathy for those victimized and a strong commitment to the dignity of human life, that I join my colleagues in commemorating Yom Ha'shoa—the Days of Remembrance of the Jewish Holocaust. Last year we observed this dark chapter in world history through the first American gathering of Jewish Holocaust survivors who reunited in our Nation's Capital—15,000 strong.

Although they are not gathered together this year, their spirit and moral force are everpresent. Each is a living witness to the horror of the Holocaust. Each reminds us that we should never forget the 6 million innocent Jews who perished at the hands of the Nazis forces 40 years ago. Each reminds us of the need to remain vigilant against prejudice and repression.

A Holocaust survivor from my State of Oregon, Hannelore Wanderer, recalls that Jews at first were issued identification cards, then ordered to wear Jewish stars, then not allowed to sit on park benches or even go to the movies. And we all know how much worse it got.

In Buchenwald, Germany, over 56,000 people were killed. At the Dachau concentration camp in Munich, there were more than 40,000 deaths. The most abhorrent were the death camps in Poland where gas chambers and ovens were used to exterminate the Jews as part of the Nazi's campaign to eradicate Jewish life. At Auschwitz the estimated total number of deaths run as high as 2.5 million.

Mr. Speaker, the memory of the Holocaust is painful. But we cannot let ourselves forget this horrific example of man's inhumanity to man. We must engrain this event in our memories not only to pay tribute to the lives so brutally lost, but to insure that a similar atrocity is never revisited upon any people, anywhere.

That's why Congress approved in 1980 the creation of a U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum to serve as a permanent reminder. It is the reason I support the establishment of such a museum. The theme of the Holocaust Museum is to remember. The purpose to learn.

The museum will help sensitize those of all ages and backgrounds to the lessons of the Holocaust. In testimony before the Interior Appropriations Subcommittee on which I serve, my friend, Mark Talisman, vice chairman of the Holocaust Memorial Council, put it this way:

. . . [the] museum will be able . . . to preserve the record, to memoralize the world that was and is no more, and teach all the generations to come, so that none may ever distort or deny the truth, and so that another Holocaust will never again happen to any people.

As a country that stands foremost in the protection of human rights and civil liberties, I believe it is only fitting that we build a monument to the Holocaust and the moral cause it represents.

I look forward to the day when the doors of the U.S. Holocaust Memorial open and all those who come to visit will leave with a better understanding of the Holocaust and a resolve to fight for the protection of human rights and human dignity the world over.●

POLISH CONSTITUTION DAY

HON. ROBERT A. BORSKI

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. BORSKI. Mr. Speaker, today, May 3, is Polish Constitution Day. I would like to share with the House the remarks I will make this Sunday at the Polish Constitution Day celebration which will be held at the Shrine of Our Lady of Czestochowa in Doylestown, Pa.

Reverend Father, distinguished guests, ladies and gentlemen: Today, we are celebrating the Polish Constitution of May 3rd, 1791, one of the greatest documents known to man. It reminds us that the Polish nation and the American nation are bound together by a deep respect for the rights of men. As Polish Americans, I believe that we are the children of a great common heritage.

We can be very proud of the Constitution of 1791. We can also be proud of what Polish Americans have accomplished since the first immigration of Polish settlers to Jamestown in the 17th Century. We can be proud of Kazimierz Pulaski, Tadeusz Kosciuszko and other sons of Poland who came to America to fight for freedom. We can be proud of Poland's greatest native son, His Holiness Pope John Paul II. We can be proud of Lech Walesa, a recent recipient of the Nobel Peace Prize and the man who founded the Solidarity labor federation. We can be proud of the Solidarity labor federation, the Catholic church and the people of Poland who are continuing the struggle for a free and independent Poland. For these reasons and many more, I am introducing legislation naming August 1984 as Polish American Heritage Month.

Unfortunately, the people of Poland can celebrate their heritage only in their hearts. The iron curtain which cast its shadow upon the Polish nation after World War II is drawing even tighter. General Jaruzelski is carrying out a campaign of domination against the Polish people and their church.

When Martial Law was imposed in Poland in December of 1981, the United States government took steps to punish the communist leadership of Poland. The United States placed very strict economic sanctions on Poland because of the outrageous human rights and political liberty violations. Our goals were to have Martial Law lifted and the rights of the people restored.

Despite the good intentions of the United States government, Poland is no freer today than it was before American sanctions were imposed. Solidarity is still outlawed. The rights of the people are still ignored. In fact, our sanctions have caused a great deal of suffering for the people of Poland.

United States policy toward Poland must be reevaluated. It is correct to take actions against the Jaruzelski government, but not at the expense of the people of Poland. We should use available means to persuade the Polish government to restore basic liberties. However, our actions must take into consideration what the effects will be on the people. Our priority should be helping the people of Poland, not causing them more hardship.

I have written to the President urging him to make available new economic aid credits which will help the people of Poland. These credits would allow for the purchase of United States surplus farm products so that the people would have food. One important condition I strongly suggested is that representatives of the Catholic church in Poland and the Solidarity labor federation be included in the negotiations and in the distribution of the food and other American aid. This will guarantee that the people will gain the benefits of the aid. It will also make clear to the Jaruzelski regime that the United States will not tolerate its abuses of the church, Solidarity and the people.

Another problem that I believe should be addressed is the future of Polish nationals, who left Poland before the imposition of Martial Law. Presently, these people suffer the uncertainty of not knowing if they will be allowed to stay in the United States or if they will be forced to return to Poland. Although the Administration has placed them in Extended Voluntary Departure status—which allows them to stay in the United States for the time being—I believe that we must give them permanent relief.

Based on this belief, I have introduced legislation in the U.S. House of Representatives entitled the Polish Nationals Adjustment Act. This bill would allow the Attorney General to grant legal resident status to all Polish nationals presently in the United States who left Poland on or before December 13, 1981—the date Martial Law was imposed. This bill will guarantee that these people will be protected. It will send a clear message to General Jaruzelski that the United States will not abandon these people.

That is how the United States should formulate its policy: helping the people. The United States has the moral responsibility to stand against the outrageous abuses of the Polish government and to help the people who are suffering.

That is the deep respect for the rights of men that we—as Polish Americans—gain from both of our heritages. Today is the day to remember those who have fought so hard for our liberty. Today is the day to remind us that we should be proud of our beliefs in freedom and justice. Today is the day to recommit ourselves to the struggle for a free and independent Poland.

Each step we take will bring us closer to the day when the Constitution of 1791 will once again be the law of freedom for the Polish people.●

PUTTING VIOLENT CRIMINALS BEHIND BARS

HON. ROMANO L. MAZZOLI
OF KENTUCKY
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, I applaud the recent decision of the Federation of New York State Judges which adopted a resolution on April 23, 1984, calling on its members to send those convicted of serious crimes to prison regardless of the fact that such sentences could add to the overcrowding in the State's prison system.

The message here is clear and direct: Jurists who have long coddled violent criminals now realize that a violent offender ought to go to jail and that prison overcrowding is irrelevant to the sentencing decision.

I agree, totally, with the position of the New York Federation. The fear of crime and the insistence that violent offenders be put behind bars where they belong rank high on the list of concerns of the people of the Third District whom I am privileged to represent.

Emphasis must continue on rehabilitation and on finding alternatives to incarceration for nonviolent offenders, and we must continue to appropriate the funds to build prisons which offer appropriate housing and rehabilitation facilities.

But, prison overcrowding is simply no excuse to let violent and rapacious criminals roam the streets and do continuing harm to innocent citizens.

While this action involves only New York State and its criminal-justice system, I hope and pray it acts as a pattern and an example for other States and the Federal judicial system to emulate.

I commend to the attention of my colleagues the following article which appeared in the April 23, 1984, New York Times detailing the judges' decision.

[From the New York Times, Apr. 23, 1984]

STATE JURISTS ASK THAT MORE FELONS BE SENT TO PRISON

(By David Margolick)

ALARMED BY CRIME, FEDERATION CALLS FOR FIRM SENTENCES DESPITE LACK OF CELLS

New York State's largest organization of judges has called on its members to send to prison anyone convicted of a serious crime even if there is not enough space.

In a formal resolution to be officially released today, the group—the Federation of New York State Judges—declared that with crime remaining at high levels in the state, judges can no longer afford to take the shortage of prison space into account when they mete out sentences. The state's prison system now houses more than 32,000 inmates—116 percent of capacity.

The streets of New York have become "lawless marches of robbers, rapists and felons of every kind," in part because of a "true and common perception of a failing criminal-justice system," the resolution said. The organization represents more than 2,000 judges, including those in State Supreme Court, Criminal Court, Family Court and the four Appellate Divisions of the Supreme Court.

PUNISHMENT ONLY DEFENSE

"When the safety of the people of this state cannot be assured except by the severe punishment of those who brutalize them," the statement continued, "then the prisons to which such defendants should be sent should be built. Swift and severe punishment is the only defense against predators."

The judges' resolution brought a quick reaction from the Cuomo administration, which predicted that prison overcrowding would soon ease. It also renewed the debate over the relative efficacy of incarceration and other anticrime measures.

REHABILITATION TERMED FAILURE

The federation's president, Justice Francis T. Murphy Jr. of the Appellate Division, First Department, said in an interview that in the past judges had sometimes been "reluctant" to send people to overcrowded prisons and instead had approved plea bargaining. He declined to estimate how many criminals had avoided incarceration in this fashion.

"The federation has called on all judges in New York State not to be concerned with lack of space, but to sentence firmly and fairly any of those who would be a danger to society," he said. "This is mandated by our oath of office and our sense of justice."

In a statement accompanying the resolution, Justice Murphy said increased imprisonment was necessary in part because society had no other remedy for crime. Rehabilitation, he said, had proved to be a failure.

"Society is pressed to its ancient defense against the violent criminal: the fear of swift and severe punishment," he stated. "Either we take that road now, or we will live in the sickly twilight of a soulless people too weak to drive predators out of their own house."

For example, Justice Murphy said in his statement, judges need not approve plea bargains struck between the prosecution and the defense. Such agreements, he noted, account for 90 percent of all dispositions in State Supreme Court and often allow the defendant to receive a suspended sentence or to be put on probation without serving any time in prison.

While the resolution did not specify which crimes should require imprisonment, it called upon the judges to impose severe sentences upon people "who, if at liberty, would be at threat to the lives of the men, women and children of this state."

OVERCROWDING DOWNPLAYED

Lawrence T. Kurlander, Governor Cuomo's Director of Criminal Justice, said he saw nothing to suggest that judicial sentencing decisions had been affected in any way by prison overcrowding.

Mr. Kurlander noted that there were 4,000 more criminals in prisons in New York than there were when Mr. Cuomo took office, adding that the system had "removed from the streets of New York a whole lot of very, very bad people."

The Governor has put forward a three-pronged prison reform package that, Mr. Kurlander predicted, would help allay the judges' concerns. That plan calls for increased prison capacity, revisions in the state sentencing law, and greater reliance on alternatives to incarceration for nonserious offenders.

The plan provides for more determinate sentencing—under which inmates would have to serve a specified minimum number of years in prison—for particular crimes, and transfering decisions on parole for prisoners from parole officials to judges. The alternatives to prison would include increasing probation programs, removing drug offenders from prison one year early and placing them in therapeutic community facilities, and community service and restitution programs.

MORE CELLS BEING READIED

The Legislature has already appropriated $700 million to build an additional 8,600 prison cells by 1986. About 2,500 of those, Mr. Kurlander said, will be available by the end of this year.

In November 1981 voters rejected a $500 million bond issue to build additional prisons. The New York Civil Liberties Union, which opposed that measure, challenged the judge's resolution.

"I do not think that what Judge Murphy proposes will substantially protect anyone," said Salvador Tio, executive director of the civil liberties group. The resolution, he said "deals with crime once it has been committed rather than seeking explanations for aberrant, antisocial conduct," and was "an easy, law-and-order prescription for complex social problems."

"People from whom one would expect a greater degree of magnanimity have chosen to favor the warehousing of more and more people," he said. "Judges have a role beyond what they do in the courtroom, to enlighten public opinion."

CRIMINALS HAVE TAKEN CITY

In his statement accompanying the resolution, Justice Murphy said that the climate of fear in New York would have been "unthinkable" only a generation ago.

"If then someone had said that in 1984 hundreds of thousands of apartment windows in New York City would be covered with metal gates, and that private security guards would patrol the lobbies, hallways and rooftops of apartment buildings, we would have thought him insane," he said.

Ordinary men and women, he continued, "tell us that criminals have taken the city, that crime has beaten government to its knees, that the moral passion for justice has been drained out of society and, in its place, there is an overwhelming sense of helplessness."

Mr. Kurlander speculated that the resolution stemmed in large part from the judiciary's frustration over criticism that it has treated criminals too lienently.

"They have been silent, and been subjected to quite a lot of abuse," he said. "This is a good-faith way of letting the public know that they are no different from the rest of us, that their children, wives, husbands and families are as much the victims of crime as anyone else's."

Melvin H. Miller, a Brooklyn Democrat and chairman of the Assembly Codes Committee, said: "The Judges are tired of taking flak, and I don't blame them. But the present building program is adequate, and may even provide for some excess space somewhere down the line."

The resolution was approved by a unanimous vote of those present at the March 28 meeting of the federation's board of directors, which consists of the heads of various organizations of judges across the state.

In addition to Justice Murphy, the members of the board include the following judges:

Michael F. Dillion, Presiding Justice, Appellate Division, Fourth Department. Raymond Harrington, County Judges Association. Milton Mollen, Presiding Justice, Appellate Division, Second Department. A. Franklin Mahoney, Presiding Jusice, Appellate Division, Third Department. Maxine K. Duberstein, Council of Judicial Associations, State of New York. Edwin, Kassoff, Association of Supreme Court Justices, State of New York. Thomas R. Jones, Association of Supreme Court Justices, City of New York. Betram R. Gelfand, Surrogate's Association, State of New York. Marilyn R. Friedenberg, Association of Judges of the Family Court, State of New York. Leon Deutsch, Association of Judges of the Family Court, City of New York. Daniel McMahon, Association of Court of Claims Judges, State of New York. Harold Fertig, District Court Judges Association, State of New York. Anthony Corso, District Court Judges Association, State of New York. Samuel Greenstein, Board of Judges, Civil Court, City of New York. Robert W. Cacace, New York State Association of City Court Judges. Carol Berkman, Association of Criminal Court Judges, City of New York. Nicholas F. O'Shea, New York State Association of Magistrates.●

THE IMPORTANCE OF MILITARY HISTORY

HON. NEWT GINGRICH

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, military history is the key to developing a sound professional officer corps. For too many years, Americans have focused on quantitative analysis and computers for analysis of warfare. The recent renaissance in the use of history at the Army Command and General Staff College at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., and at the Marine Command and General Staff College at Quantico, Va., are both to be commended.

I am pleased to include a report on the resurgence of military history in the Marine Corps. The article by Lieutenant Colonel Bittner follows:

MILITARY HISTORY AT "COMMAND AND STAFF"

(By Lt. Col. Donald F. Bittner, USMCR, Military Historian, Marine Corps Command and Staff College, Quantico)

During the 1982-83 academic year, the study of military history has been reemphasized at the Command and Staff College. This renewed stress on serious study of man's ability to wage war—which goes all the way back to the roots of our profession—is part of a general trend in professional military education in the United States. Military history, although never neglected at the college, has moved from elective status to a central place within the core curriculum.

The "Battle Studies Program"—at the center of this renewed emphasis—has three main elements: campaign analysis studies; historical perspective presentations; and a symposium, "War Since 1945." The primary focus is on the campaign analysis studies, in which each of the 12 permanent conference groups studies a significant campaign which has occurred in the modern era. The product of each conference group of 13 or 14 officers is a two-hour presentation to the College, in which the students discuss the results of their research and analysis. Their framework of analysis is applicable in studying any of past campaigns, contemporary problems, or future situations.

The campaign analyses are objective. There are no "good guys" or "bad guys" in the studies; rather, all sides are studied in a detached manner, to ascertain what occurred and why. The analyses try to determine why commanders and their staffs acted as they did, and to identify consequences of command decisions and staff recommendations.

Three campaigns of particular interest to Marines, which were studied in the 1982-83 academic year, reflected these goals. The analyses of Belleau Wood (1918) and Peleliu (1944) scrutinized the operations of the Germans and Japanese, as well as the Marines. The students soon discovered the reality behind familiar generalizations of high combat professional effectiveness, that has long been associated with the armed forces of Germany and Japan: their leaders were skilled in application of tactical doctrine, the use of terrain, the art of command, the coordination of supporting arms, and in personal preparation for their responsibilities. Furthermore, the study of the projected invasion of Japan in 1945-46, "Operations Olympic/Coronet," revealed that the Japanese had thoroughly studied the amphibious operations of the United States forces as they moved through the South and Central Pacific between 1942-45; hence, they correctly anticipated the nature of the projected invasion of their homeland, and where the landings would take place.

One conference group also studied the Marine involvement in Haiti between 1915 and 1934, as a means of reemphasizing to the current generation of field grade officers the Marine Corps' heritage in nonconventional warfare conflicts. The Haiti case also reaffirms the continued relevance of this form of potential commitment of the Corps in the future.

The Battle Studies Program has made a fast start. No program, however, can remain unchanged; it must undergo continual evolutionary change to avoid any hint of stagnation, to remain intellectually challenging, and to shift orientation as appropriate. Accordingly, some of the campaigns to be studied must change each year. For the 1983-84 academic year, nine of the 12 campaigns are new. Five are of special interest to students of Marine Corps history:

"Gallipoli" focuses on the major amphibious assault of World War I and the subsequent Marine Corps analysis of its lessons in the inter-war era.

"Wake Island" draws attention to another element of our amphibious mission: the defense of an advanced naval base.

"Saipan" Discusses that famous amphibious assault of World War II, plus the thorny problem of command in battle and inter-service relationships through the "Smith versus Smith Controversy."

"Nicaragua" like "Haiti," draws attention to the Marine heritage in nonconventional warfare and to a country much in the current news and in which Marines have an historical relationship.

"Operation Dewey Canyon" is a study of a key regimental-level military operation of the Vietnam War.

To compare and contrast the campaigns studied in the 1982-83 and 1983-84 academic years reveals a growing emphasis on the American military tradition—and within that, the diverse heritage of the Marine Corps in the profession of arms. In addition, significant campaigns of both our allies and foes, past and present, provide new perspectives and further materials for reflection.

Two other points should be noted about the campaigns under study. Anzio is a classic study of an amphibious landing where subsequent operations ashore are tinged with controversial interpretations. Consequently, there can be no absolutely "correct" answers to the historical questions posed by that campaign. In addition, the British assaults in 1944 on Walcheren Island stresses the amphibious mission of the College, but from different perspectives. The operation is analyzed from the viewpoint of our allies in their conduct of the assault, to include the use of naval and air assets. But this analysis also examines German preparations to defend against an amphibious attack. The Royal Marines have granted complete access to their archival holdings for this operation, and the Command and Staff College has copies of all pertinent operational records, planning documents, and after-action reports from Canadian and British military archives.

To enable the students to place their campaign analysis studies within a proper context, the second element of the Battle Studies Program is organized around the concept of "Historical Perspectives." This instruction consists of presentations by the military historian, with a special focus on the nature of history and the field of military history. This is followed by a two-hour filmed interview with one of Britain's foremost post-World War II soldiers, Field Marshal the Lord Carver. Lord Carver, while drawing upon historical examples of World War II operations in North Africa, Italy, and Western Europe (as well as his own experience), makes interpretative observations on the profession of arms, leadership, training, and combat operations. This interview is also part of the instructional program at the British Army Staff College, Camberley, and the U.S. Army Command and General Staff College, Fort Leavenworth.

In addition, six distinguished historians are invited to the College to speak on subjects pertinent to the field of military history.

The topics of each speaker are specifically selected so that they add perspective to each student's awareness of military history and relate to the campaigns being studied. For the 1983-84 academic year, three speakers will also address the military traditions of our major North Atlantic allies: France, Germany, and the United Kingdom.

A two-hour military history readings seminar is also part of the course of study. All the students will participate in this seminar, conducted through their permanent conference groups under the direct cognizance of each faculty advisor, with the military historian serving as the general coordinator and advisor.

It should be noted that major works on strategy, such as those by Clausewitz and Mahan, are part of another readings seminar which is a key element of the strategy instruction program of the College.

The final element in the historical perspectives segment of the Battle Studies Program is the historical introduction to each major student operational problem exercise. This presentation outlines the major learning objectives of each problem. Each historical introduction also has an additional purpose: to make students realize that many situations they will later confront as commanders and staff officers have already been encountered by their predecessors. This causes the elements of some problems to remain similar, even though the specifics may have been altered by the passage of time between campaigns. Two general examples illustrate this point:

1. In comparing contemporary and future operations with those of the past, weather and climate are always key factors—especially in the extremes of cold, tropical, and desert environments; and

2. In maintaining military transportation systems, animals have had to be fed and watered, and vehicles have had to be fueled; over the years, the problems of logistical support have changed in form but not in substance.

The historical introductions for operational problem exercises are taught by the College's Landing Force Operations Division. Examples include the linkage of "Frequent Wind" (the evacuation of Saigon in 1975) with "evacuation of U.S. citizens . . . Eastern Mediterranean" and Alexander the Great's Persian campaigns with a present-day Persian Gulf amphibious assault and subsequent operations ashore scenario.

The last element of the Battle Studies Program is the "War Since 1945" symposium. This is a one-day activity in the spring which consists of seminars, panels, and a guest speaker presentation.

Between 22-24 students with demonstrated writing skills are selected to enroll in the "War Since 1945" seminar, which is taught by the College's military historian. For eight months they research, analyze, and write about conflicts since 1945. In the spring, these officers in turn conduct separate seminars for the rest of the students.

The symposium focuses on warfare since the end of World War II in which the United States was not actively or directly involved. This exclusion is deliberate to make the students aware of events and trends in warfare and the profession of arms that are independent of the continuing East-West conflict. The wars are separated into conventional and nonconventional ones.

For 1983-84, the students could not select a war that had been studied in the previous academic year or undertake a joint effort on a particular conflict unless it could be analyzed from a fresh perspective. To cover the war in the Falklands, for example, three officers are studying that conflict independently, from three different viewpoints. The 22 officers in the seminar, then, will have covered 22 separate topics by year's end.

In the "War Since 1945" symposium, each student participates in one conventional war seminar conducted by the designated officers. In the later stages of the symposium, students can question panels that compare conventional and nonconventional warfare, and can also listen to a guest speaker address a particular aspect of warfare since 1945. In June 1983 the speaker was the noted soldier-scholar Col Trevor Dupuy, who addressed the interrelationships of human and technological factors in war.

The Battle Studies Program is designed to acquaint the students with significant factors in warfare and the evolution of the profession of arms, with special emphasis on the modern era. The mental processes involved are similar to those involved in analyzing contemporary problems, and field grade officer students soon recognize the similarities in past, current, and future military situations. Certain key factors tend to emerge as "constants": command, control, and communications; logistics; terrain; and, possibly the most important of all, the human element.

The ultimate objective of this program is to develop the innate abilities of each student. There is no way a study of military history can make an officer into another Lee, Pershing, Lejeune, Patton, or Vandergrift. It can only reinforce the capability he already possesses.●

DAYS OF REMEMBRANCE OF THE VICTIMS OF THE HOLOCAUST

HON. JOSEPH D. EARLY

OF MASSACHUSETTS

Monday, April 30, 1984

● Mr. EARLY. Mr. Speaker, it is with pride and sorrow that I join my colleagues in commemorating the Days of Rememberance of the Victims of the Holocaust. The 6 million Jewish men, women, and children that died at the hands of the Nazis must not be forgotten. Their legacy should serve as a constant reminder of the dark side of human nature. The savagery of the Holocaust should never be understated and, yet, it may never be fully comprehended by rational, compassionate, and just men and women.

The survivors of the concentration camps are a living reminder that each of us must be our brother's keeper. None of us can expect to remain silent while others are persecuted and still be absolved of any responsibility in crimes against humanity. Silence on the Holocaust might invite a repetition of that unprecedented humiliation and degradation by man toward his fellow man.

Elie Wiesel, a noted Holocaust historian has eloquently stated why we must remember this systematic slaughter:

> Not only because of the dead; it is too late for them. Not only because of the survivors; it may even be too late for them. Our remembering is an act of generosity, aimed at saving men and women from apathy to evil, if not from evil itself.

The evil that inspired the Nazis' final solution may still lurk in human nature and we must not permit it to ever again gain the upper hand in the affairs of men.

There are some who would have us believe that the Holocaust never occurred. Such distortion of the truth is at the very least a cruel hoax. This commemoration serves to remind us of the constant human rights violations that continue to occur in many nations. As such, we must remain vigilant and refuse to participate in any activity that undermines the human rights of any man, women, or child anywhere on this planet.

It is for these reasons, and many others, that we observe the Days of Rememberance for the Victims of the Holocaust. We must draw strength from their deaths and assure that future generations will be guaranteed their human dignity.

Indeed, the past is prolog; and, we are the guardians against the evil that obliterated millions of innocent victims in the infamous death camps of the Third Reich. We will therefor continue to pledge ourselves as the protectors—unselfishly and determinedly—of the peaceful aspirations, dreams, and goals of our children and the yet unborn generations of all nations.●

ACID RAIN

HON. NORMAN E. D'AMOURS

OF NEW HAMPSHIRE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. D'AMOURS. Mr. Speaker, yesterday's defeat of acid rain control legislation in the Health and Environment Subcommittee abruptly dashed the hopes of those of us who have strived to pass an effective and equitable control program in this Congress. The opponents of acid rain control have dismissed the gravity of the acid rain threat to our environment, our economy, and our health; they have in effect ignored the findings and recommendations of eminent scientific bodies supporting the need for immediate controls; they have disregarded the widespread public support for effective action to control acid rain; they have turned away from tangible, good faith efforts by Members of this body and, in particular, members of the New England congressional delegation, to respond to legitimate regional concerns. In short, the opponents of acid rain control have shirked their responsibility to this Nation as stewards of our common environment and guardians of the national interest.

Ultimately, this outcome is largely the product of failed national leadership. Clearly, strong national leadership is necessary to overcome the sharp regional divisiveness that has characterized the acid rain debate in the past. As cochairman of the New England Congressional Caucus Task Force on Acid Rain along with my distinguished colleague from Massachusetts, Congressman SILVIO CONTE, I remain committed to seeking a comprehensive national solution to acid rain problem, and pledge to continue to pursue a dialog with my colleages. I call upon the leadership of the House and Senate to fill the void of leadership and join with me in this bipartisan effort.●

IN CELEBRATION OF CINCO DE MAYO

HON. EDWARD R. ROYBAL

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. ROYBAL. Mr. Speaker, on Saturday I will happily join our neighbors in Mexico in celebration of their independence day, Cinco de Mayo. On that memorable day in the town of Puebla, another victory was won in the name of freedom and equality.

As Americans who have also struggled for the protection of those inalienable rights of every person, we empathize emphatically with that small but determined army as they fought the tyranneous French. They fought for the same democratic ideals of justice and liberty in 1862 as we had in 1776. Thus, this day not only marks a joyous occasion for those of Hispanic descent but for all Americans who uphold these ideals.

As a nation comprised of peoples from diverse backgrounds let us rejoice not only in Mexico's independence but also in the variety they have added to our multifaceted culture. Today not only is our food flavored but our language and customs reflect this rich heritage. By sharing the heritage and traditions of our great neighbors to the south, it is my hope that we will develop a better understanding and cooperative spirit as we work to solve our similar problems. At a time when news of divisiveness and conflict pervades, let us not forget the commonalities that bind us together.●

VOLUNTEERS WORK TO REBUILD SALMON RUNS

HON. LES AuCOIN

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. AuCOIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commend the volunteer efforts by a group of my constituents from Depoe Bay, Oreg., a fishing community on the Oregon coast, to rebuild our dwindling ocean salmon fishery.

Despite the Government's ongoing investment in fisheries research, hatchery production, and management activities, salmon harvests in Oregon's waters have been declining steadily for many years. Last year was the worst season in memory because of the devastating effects of El Nino—a calamity which this House rightly defined as a physical disaster in approving recent legislation to enable fishermen, processors, and other small businessmen hurt by El Nino to obtain low-interest operating loans to tide them through very difficult times.

Many of us in the Northwest delegation have exerted much effort during the last 4 years to keep longstanding Federal investments in our region's fisheries resources from being eliminated or severely cut. Given the budget priorities of this administration, it has been difficult, to say the least, just to maintain level funding for fisheries production, research, development, and management activities.

That is why I want to salute the homegrown work of Vaughn Taunton of Depoe Bay and his friends, city council member Ray Osuna, Fire Chief Jay Williams, fisheries biologist Steve Mamoyac, and the employees of the Depoe Bay water treatment plant, in helping to rebuild Oregon's anadromous fish stocks. Their story is told well by reporter Peter Sleeth in an article which appeared recently in the Newport, Oreg., News-Times, and I ask that it be reprinted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as an example of volunteerism at its best:

DEPOE BAY VOLUNTEERS GROW THEIR OWN

(By Peter Sleeth)

More than a year ago, Vaughn Taunton noticed something a little fishy in Depoe Bay.

Perched above the bay in his restaurant, the Spouting Horn, he has a clear view of the dam and fish ladder on South Depoe Bay Creek.

"We've never noticed fish going over the dam," Taunton said. "Finally this year I've seen two fish go up it, but (before) I hadn't seen any in five years.

So Taunton, along with Ray Osuna and other local volunteers, decided to do something about it. They started their own salmon hatchery program, a program that depends on volunteers and donations to keep a steady supply of fish pouring into local streams.

Now, sitting behind the city's water treatment plant, 12,000 squirming chinook fry feed off their egg sacks while Taunton waits. Soon, when the egg sacks are gone and the fry are ready for release, they'll be scooped into buckets, slid into streams and sent on their way. Taunton and others are proud of the community spirit that put the program together and keeps it going.

"There's a real true spirit of volunteerism in this community throughout," said Depoe Bay Fire Chief Jay Williams.

"Williams, the Coast Guard, and a host of others all have chipped in on the effort, Taunton said. Just how the program started was with the help of the Oregon Department of Fish and Wildlife and its Salmon and Trout Enhancement Program (STEP). The program encourages volunteers to start programs like the one in Depoe Bay. The success of such a program hinges on those volunteers, said Dave Loomis, who helped with the program in Depoe Bay.

"It's interesting they've gotten a whole community to cooperate on this," Loomis said. "They've done a real good job."

To date, 52,000 salmon fry have gone through the five hatching boxes that were built at the expense of Taunton and Osuna. Only the coho salmon were released in the Depoe Bay streams; the steelhead and chinook were released on tributaries to the Siletz and Salmon Rivers.

"They don't really feel this is much of a chinook stream," said Taunton, pointing to North Depoe Bay Creek.

The hatching project is of benefit to the entire community, Taunton said. In a town that draws its lifeblood from the fishing industry, fresh supplies of what is becoming a scarce commodity are vital to the community health. Taunton points to his own sons who left Depoe Bay due to a poor fishing industry.

"And these guys had to go to Alaska to do anything," he said. "So what we're doing is trying to get more fish for everybody."

And everybody seems to be chipping in. The city workers insure fresh water pours through the hatch boxes that swallow up eight to 10 gallons per minute and keep the fry healthy as they squirm among the rocks. If Taunton should find he needs help in maintaining the fish or clearing a stream, he rarely has to ask. The help is waiting.

But what impresses Taunton most is that the whole project required only one meeting more than a year ago. No long, boring committee meetings, no taxpayers money being spent (other than the cost of the fry that the ODFW pays) and plenty of fish for Depoe Bay's future, at least Taunton hopes so.

"That's the only thing—you've got to wait four years to see if you're doing anything right," he quips.●

ELIE WIESEL—CONSCIENCE OF THE HOLOCAUST

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, on Monday at noon in the rotunda of this Capitol Building, hundreds gathered in a solemn and heart wrenching service to remember the nightmare of the Holocaust. There were survivors, whom this generous and great Nation accepted with open arms, their second generation American-born children, and other Americans committed to the prevention of a repetition of this ultimate example of man's inhumanity to man.

Elie Wiesel delivered a moving statement on that occasion. More than any other he has helped us to understand—to the extent that understanding is possible—the significance of that nightmare. His voice has been the clearest in calling for us to create conditions to prevent the repetition of that outrage.

His thoughtful and moving words have significance for all of us. I place his remarks in the RECORD so that my colleagues in the House may benefit from his insight:

REMARKS BY ELIE WIESEL, CHAIRMAN, U.S. HOLOCAUST MEMORIAL COUNCIL

DAYS OF REMEMBRANCE

Mr. Vice President, Congressman Yates, Distinguished Members of the House and Senate, Fellow Survivors, Friends:

For some of us, this is the most solemn and awesome day of the year. We delve into the darkest recesses of our memory only to confront and evoke a vanished universe surrounded by flames and penetrated by silence. The living and the dead locked together as they are during Kol Nidre services, young and old, pious and secular, princes and madmen, sages and wanderers, beggars and dreamers. On this day, Mr. Vice President and friends, we close our eyes and we see them—an erie procession which slowly, meditatingly, walks toward angels of death carried on wings of night into night. We see them as you see us. We are the link between you and them.

And, therefore, we thank you, Members of the House and Senate, and Mr. Vice President, for allowing us to be that link. We thank you, people of the United States, for creating a framework in which we could share visions and memories that intrude, defy language and comprehension. On behalf of the Holocaust Memorial Council, its members, its Board of Advisers, its Second Generation Advisers, its staff, its friends and allies, we thank all of you for joining us today.

It is symbolic that our commemoration takes place in this august hall of legislation and commitment to law, and commitment to truth, and commitment to humanity. What we are teaching the world from this room, thanks to you, Members of the House and the Senate is, that laws must be human. Laws are to serve humanity and not destroy it. Laws are given to human beings to perfect life and not to profane it. Laws, too, became corrupt once upon a time. And here with your deed and our words, we shall shield laws in the future.

And so once more, as we have done since 1979, on this Day of Remembrance we gather from all the corners of exile to tell tales—tales of fire and tales of despair and tales of defiance—tales that we must tell least we are crushed by our memories. In remembering them, remembering the victims in the ghettos and camps and the prisons, we become aware of man's singular vulnerability but also of his stunning ability to transcend it.

We remember the killers and we loose our faith in humanity. But then we remember the victims and, though scarred, our faith is restored—it must be. The fact that the Jewish victims never became executioners, that they never victimized others, that they remained Jewish to the end—human to the end—that inside ghettos and death camps, my God, inside gas chambers, they could speak of God, to God. They could say: S'hma Yisroael Adonai Elohenu, Adonai Echad—God is God and God is One and God is the Lord of Creation. To say those words there on the threshold of death and oblivion must restore our faith in them and therefore in humankind. We think of the victims and we learn that despair is not the solution. Despair is the question. And that is why we gather year after year—to fight despair; and only mine—ours.

As a son of the Jewish people, as a citizen who is proud to be a member of the American people, I live with a memory of Jewish children and their parents. It has been our task, it will remain our task, to maintain that memory alive. But then we remember not because we seek vengence; we don't believe in it. We only seek justice. We do not aim to hurt, only to sensitize. We believe that by retelling our tales we might help our contemporaries by making them aware of what could happen to human beings when they live in an inhuman society surrounded and penetrated by indifference on one hand, evil on the other, with so few opposing evil and indifference. That is why I allow myself at times to see in the Holocaust an analogy only to itself, meaning that nothing should be compared to it but that everything must be related to it. It is because of what we endured that we must try to help victims everywhere today: the Bahais in Iran who are being murdered by the dictatorship in Iran; the Miskitos on the border of Nicaragua; we must help the Boat People who are still seeking refuge; the Cambodian refugees; and the prisoners, so many of them, in Communist jails. It is because we remember what has been done to our people that we must plead at every opportunity, in this House and in all other houses, for Anatoly Shcharansky, Iosif Begun, Vladmir Slepack, and all the dissidents and prisoners who are in jail waiting for someone to shake off humankind's indifference. If they were to loose faith in us, we should be damned. It is because we remember the solitude of Jews in those times that we feel so linked to and proud of the State of Israel today. We Survivors, our friends and allies, are grateful to Israel, grateful to a people simply for existing, for inspiring us to keep faith in a certain form of humanity and tradition.

While we remember the victims we also remember those who tried to help us—the Raoul Wallenbergs and the Oskar Shindlers as Congressman Yates said. They were so few and they were so alone. It breaks our heart to think of their solitude, of their sacrifice. Memory is not exclusive. Memory is inclusive. It is because we remember the singular aspect of the tragedy that we remember its universality. We must also think of tomorrow as though it would be part of our memory. I think the world unleashed madness 40 years ago and that madness is still dominating spirits and minds of too many countries. There are too many signals of danger—racism, anti-Semitism, bigotry, fanaticism. We are scared of what humankind could do to itself. Therefore we tell the story.

In conclusion, Mr. Vice President, may I quote to you a legend of the great master work of human civilization and culture, The Talmud. The Talmud tells us that when God gave the law to the people of Israel he lifted up Mount Sinai over the heads of the Jewish people and said: "If you accept the law, you shall live. If not, you shall die." And so, we accepted the law.

I have the feeling today, Mr. Vice President and friends, that God has lifted above our heads a mountain of fire, and it is as though God were to say to us: If you obey the law—if you remember that we are all children of one father, if you remember that whatever happens to one people must affect all other people, if you remember that stupid cruelty is absurd and grotesque, and it is not in hurting people that one can redeem oneself—if you remember, you shall live and if not—But, we must remember.●

CONGRESSIONAL SURVEY RESULTS

HON. ROBERT F. (BOB) SMITH

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. ROBERT F. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, colleagues, today I would like to share with you and with every reader of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD nationwide, the results of my most recent opinion survey in my Second Congressional District of Oregon.

Like many Members of this body, I conduct an annual poll of my constituents during the first months of the year. I ask 10 questions on subjects which I expect will come before this body during the forthcoming session, and I put my constituents on the same spot that we in Congress often occupy by asking for pure "yes" and "no" responses. There is no opportunity for "undecided" votes.

Again this year, I have been extremely pleased with the responses of my constituents. More than 20,000 questionnaires were returned, representing the opinions of more than 34,000 persons. Though congressional questionnaires are admittedly not done with the same scientific calculation as professional pollsters, I have been happy to find in the past and again this year that the percentages in my own poll track right along with national, much more elaborate polls.

Which leads me to an extremely important conclusion: I believe in the results of this poll and I am anxious to see that everyone in this Chamber read the results.

This year, the Federal Government's crippling deficit and the ways to solve it occupied much of my questionnaire. I think the results are worth special attention in this Chamber. Those results are contained in the first three questions listed here.

I would be delighted to share the questionnaire itself with anyone who wishes it, but more than anything, I urge my colleagues here to read carefully these results. I am most grateful to my constituents for their help.

The following are results of this year's questionnaire:

1984 CONGRESSIONAL SURVEY RESULTS

Question/response percentages (numbers of individuals)

Question 1: "Do you favor an increase in taxes to reduce the federal deficit?" Yes: 15.3 percent (4,981); No: 84.7 percent (27,623).

Question 2: "Do you favor a decrease in government spending to reduce the federal deficit?" Yes: 96.1 percent (31,691); No: 3.9 percent (1,278).

Question 3: "Would you favor a combination of spending cuts and tax increases to reduce the federal deficit?" Yes: 34.2 percent (10,972); No: 65.8 percent (21,066).

Question 4: "Do you agree with the government's increased spending for defense?" Yes: 42 percent (13,717); No: 58 percent (18,949).

Question 5: "Should Congress repeal a law to 'index' taxes which is now scheduled to take effect in 1985 (the law will prevent automatic inflation-caused tax increases without a specific vote)?" Yes: 37.3 percent (11,373); No: 62.7 percent (19,082).

Question 6: "Should federal funds be used to pay for abortions?" Yes: 21.2 percent (7,046); No: 78.8 percent (26,153).

Question 7: "Should there be an amendment to the Constitution to allow voluntary silent prayer in school?" Yes: 68.4 percent (22,365); No: 31.6 percent (10,312).

Question 8: "Do you believe the use of merit pay for teachers would improve education in the United States?" Yes: 47.2 percent (15,397); No: 52.8 percent (17,230).

Question 9: "Should a share of long-distance charges be used to help pay for rural and local telephone service?" Yes: 62.3 percent (19,498); No: 37.7 percent (11,803).

Question 10: "Should there be a federal mandatory, minimum jail term for persons convicted of selling drugs to youths under the age of 18?" Yes: 92.7 percent (30,669); No: 7.3 percent (2,405).

Total questionnaires returned: 20,097; total respondents: 34,049.●

RECOGNITION OF H. LEE POWELL, JR.

HON. NICHOLAS MAVROULES

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. MAVROULES. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to recognize an American who has led a distinguished life of service to those in need throughout years of dedicated volunteer work. On this day, Mr. H. Lee Powell, Jr., a resident of Haverhill, Mass., is rightfully honored in the naming of the new addition to the Union Mission Nursing Home as the "H. Lee Powell, Jr. Pavilion."

Mr. Powell has set a high standard of volunteer leadership in giving his time, his talents, and his full measure of commitment. As president of the board of directors of Haverhill's Union Mission Nursing Home, he has provided the finest quality care to the elderly poor of the Merrimack Valley. Fully accredited by the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Hospitals, Union Mission has consistently elevated its standards while carrying out its motto of "people who love people."

Over his lifetime, Mr. Powell has served his church and community with a unique focus on the well-being of the less fortunate and a profound dedication that has inspired all those who have followed. All age groups and ethnic and racial groups have benefited in countless ways from his admirable philosophy of public service. Mr. Powell is truly a man of all the people: Working with equal vigor in support of the Kiwanis International sponsored Pediatric Trauma Center in Boston, to the improvement of a Boy Scout campground in Kingston, N.H., and in support of the frail and elderly.

It is both an honor and a pleasure for me to call the Nation's attention to citizens such as H. Lee Powell, a patriot and veteran leader, a man of principle and personal compassion, and an exemplary citizen of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.●

HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 295

HON. JAMES J. HOWARD

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to be a cosponsor of House Concurrent Resolution 295. The Olympic torch since the days of the ancient Greeks has been a symbol of sportsmanship, fair play, and dedication to brotherhood among mankind.

As we move into this Olympic year of 1984 with the games being held in one of our great cities—Los Angeles—once again one of the great moments of Olympic history is enacted when a mass assemblage in the Coliseum in Los Angeles will rise when the torch bearer in the tradition of the Greeks enters the stadium and lights the Olympic flame.

It is also fitting and proper as this torch moves around our Nation this symbol of sportsmanship be allowed to cross this bastion of freedom—our own Capitol Grounds.●

HAPPY 30TH ANNIVERSARY UC RIVERSIDE

HON. GEORGE E. BROWN, JR.

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Speaker, on Sunday, May 6, 1984, the University of California at Riverside will be 30 years old. The campus that started out in 1907 as a citrus experiment station, is now the collegiate home for 5,000 students, and a major employer for the Inland Empire.

Throughout the years, UCR has maintained its unique "personality." It cannot boast of its winning football team—it does not have one. Nor does it have the reputation of its free spirited, sometimes radical sister campus, UC Berkeley. It does not share the open grading system of Santa Cruz. And it cannot point with pride to the beachfront property that adds to the lure and beauty of UC San Diego, UC Santa Barbara, and UC Irvine. If you read the campus brochures, they will tell you UCR's attraction is its ability to give one a "damn good education," and indeed it does that and more, with a style all its own.

The 1,200-acre campus is beautifully landscaped with the best California has to offer—botanic gardens, palm trees, orange trees, and tropical plants with a backdrop of rolling foothills and the mountains of San Bernardino behind them. It looks good, and its inhabitants work hard. In addition to the two colleges—humanities and social sciences, natural and agricultural sciences—research continues at the Air Pollution Research Center and the agricultural experiment station among many others. The main campus library—there are four—boasts a collection of 980,000 bound volumes and is also a depository for U.S. publications and receives most California State documents.

The sunny weather makes the 48-bell carillon tower a natural gathering place and serves as a central focus on the campus. The Wednesday "nooner" series draws such varied campus activities as political speakers and jazz bands. The campus theater can host a ballet on the same evening the wood-beamed campus night club, the Barn, provides a country band and sells beer to drink on the patio.

The classes are small, the pace leisure, and no one is surprised if the professors and staff actually know the names of their students. "Traits like close student-faculty relationships and personal interaction don't happen by accident; they're developed over time and maintained because they work" the campus brochure says, and the campus is proud of that distinction. The teaching and research is solid if not flashy, and if all UCR can give you is a "damn good education" then it is indeed deserving of a sincere congratulations on a job well done.

With every best wish on the anniversary of your first 30 years and continued success for the next 100.●

THE CLEAN COAL PRODUCTION AND UTILIZATION TECHNOLOGY DEMONSTRATION ACT PROVIDES SENSIBLE ALTERNATIVES TO SCRUBBERS IN OUR EFFORTS TO REDUCE SULFUR EMISSIONS FROM COAL-BURNING FACILITIES

HON. TOM CORCORAN

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. CORCORAN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased today to join Congresswoman MARILYN LLOYD and several other colleagues in introducing the Clean Coal Production and Utilization Technology Demonstration Act.

This legislation would establish a technology demonstration program within the Department of Energy that would be funded with about $2 billion from the Energy Security Act's energy security reserve. As my colleagues know, these funds are now under the jurisdiction of the Synthetic Fuels Corporation.

The legislation being introduced today identifies specific near- and long-term technologies to be demonstrated with the objective of ascertaining "* * * the most technologically advanced and cost-effective methods for reducing air pollution * * * including those emissions which may potentially be contributing to acid rain." I believe that this approach represents a reasonable alternative to the existing scrubber technology. Scrubbers, which are in effect mandated by the Clean Air Act, are costly and inefficient. These costs are of course passed on to our constituents in the form of higher utility bills.

It seems to me that the provisions of this legislation present the most reasonable approach to continuing to clean up our environment in a way that will allow the production and utilization of coal, especially high-sulfur coal. We have vast reserves of coal in this country, and we must promote its use if for no other reason than to decrease our dependence on insecure foreign sources of energy. Furthermore, funding this program, with its specific list of technologies to be demonstrated, with synthetic fuels money makes much greater sense than throwing money at the "pie-in-the-sky" demonstration projects that have been pursued by the Synthetic Fuels Corporation.

Mr. Speaker, I commend Congresswoman LLOYD for initiating this legislation, and, especially as the senior Republican member of the Energy and Commerce Committee's Fossil and Synthetic Fuels Subcommittee, I look forward to working with her and other members in pursuing this approach. I urge my colleagues to join in supporting the Clean Coal Production and Utilization Technology Demonstration Act.●

A SALUTE TO MRS. EDWARDINA RIGGANS

HON. LOUIS STOKES

OF OHIO

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. STOKES. Mr. Speaker, as you know, May has been designated National Senior Citizen Month by the Congress. It also marks the beginning of our annual congressional senior citizen intern program, which will be held May 7 to 11, 1984. At this time, I would like to salute an outstanding senior citizen from my congressional district who will be serving as one of my congressional senior citizen interns for 1984—Mrs. Edwardina Riggans.

Mrs. Riggans was born in Cleveland, Ohio, on August 27, 1902. Her family moved to neighboring Cincinnati when she was a young girl. However, Mrs. Riggans later returned to Cleveland where she married and raised two children.

Throughout her 81 years, Mrs. Riggans has been an active and integral part of the community.

This sense of commitment to the community is demonstrated through Mrs. Riggans' unceasing membership and active participation in various organizations. In 1934, Mrs. Riggans joined the Wellman Club. For over 50 years, Mrs. Riggans has been associated with the club and has been a leading advocate in creating greater political awareness and voter participation in the Cleveland metropolitan area.

In 1960, Mrs. Riggans embarked on still another long-term community affiliation with her membership in the Karamu Golden Agers Club. The Golden Agers have been instrumental in providing a combination of social, cultural, and educational programs for the elderly in the community. Additionally, the Golden Agers have developed a number of supportive social services to enhance the quality of life for seniors in that particular community.

Perhaps Mrs. Riggans' greatest challenge and achievement came in 1969 when my brother, Carl Stokes, the former mayor of Cleveland, asked her to organize a senior citizen coalition. The purpose of the coalition was to boost senior citizen participation in government affairs and to provide a mechanism by which the concerns of our Nation's elderly could be expressed to government officials.

Mr. Speaker, through Mrs. Riggans' efforts, a permanent organization, Seniors of Ohio, was born. Under the leadership of Mrs. Riggans, the organization grew to, at one time, a membership of over 3,000. Amongst its many projects, the Seniors of Ohio devised and implemented a series of town meetings specifically for senior citizens and a variety of social programs to assist the elderly.

Mr. Speaker, Mrs. Riggans is not resting on her laurels. Today, she is still a visible force in the community. She maintains memberships in the Federation for Community Planning, the Police Board, and the Western Reserve Area Agency Board on Aging. In 1982, she was appointed to the State of Ohio Commission on Aging. Her membership at Antioch Baptist Church spans four decades and she serves today as the Secretary of the Sunday school class.

Subscribing to the philosophy, "there's no such thing as can't, get out there and try," Mrs. Riggans is an 81-year-old positive catalyst for the young and old as well as for the successful and the struggling.

The residents of the city of Cleveland are proud of Mrs. Riggans and her accomplishments. She is a mother, teacher, grandmother, philosopher, and inspiration to us all. I am proud to have Mrs. Riggans serve as my congressional senior citizen intern. It is an honor for me to salute her at this time.●

WENDELL GUNN ON THE BALANCING DOWN BUDGET STRATEGY

HON. JACK F. KEMP

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. KEMP. Mr. Speaker, the American people are not undertaxed, and they do not want tax reform as a cover for a back-door tax increase. They favor broadening the tax base as an opportunity for further cuts in marginal tax rates to enhance tax equity and encourage economic growth. Ending tax preferences, without lowering marginal tax rates is not only economically wrong; it threatens the chances for both Democratic and Republican efforts on tax simplification. It leaves less tax base which can be broadened.

I commend to my colleagues the following excellent essay by Wendell Wilkie Gunn from the Wall Street Journal on the importance of a budget strategy that avoids tax increases in order to keep this promising recovery moving and to continue lowering marginal tax rates for working Americans.

The article follows:

[From the Wall Street Journal, Apr. 25, 1984]

BALANCING DOWN AND BREAKING FREE

(By Wendell Wilkie Gunn)

"The real question America must face is not whether we should work toward a balanced budget, but how. As we look to the future, we can 'balance up' with tax increases and lock ourselves into economic bondage, or we can 'balance down' with lower tax rates and spending, permitting our economy to break free." These were the words of President Reagan in his March 27 speech to the Independent Insurance Agents of America. It is a clear statement of the budget strategy he has chosen for 1984 and beyond, i.e., a determined adherence to the strategy he initiated in 1981. It is called "balancing down."

Balancing down embodies the notion that a vital part of the goal of a balanced federal budget is the goal of achieving balance at a low level of taxes and spending. More specifically, it is a rejection of the idea that balancing up achieves any real benefits at all. Balancing up stifles economic activity. Balancing down permits it to break free.

Those who oppose the president on this issue come from both ends of the political spectrum. Liberal economists and politicians have always believed that deficit spending has a beneficial, stimulative effect on the economy, boosting aggregate demand and employment. But opponents also include conservative economists and politicians who have always decried budget deficits.

The political argument made by the liberals is that anyone who insists upon a balanced budget at the expense of "human" programs is inhumane, totally lacking in compassion. Needless to say, the conservatives have consistently lost the political fight against spending increases and concluded after each round that the only prudent thing to do under the circumstances is to increase taxes to finance them. The irony is that the conservatives put themselves into the awkward position of financing the spending that they opposed in the first place, all the while advancing their own reputation as austere and uncaring. That reputation persists. The most important result, however, was the upward spiral in spending and taxes that we have witnessed over the past 50 years.

For the taxers, particularly the conservatives, there is no way to reverse this destructive trend. For example, Fed Chairman Paul Volcker told the Senate Finance Committee in September 1979 that it was a shame that we had allowed tax rates to reach "such a high level that economic growth and productivity are stifled." Yet later, in response to a question, he said, "we cannot afford to cut tax rates substantially because the resulting increase in the deficit will fuel inflationary expectations." The implication is that the U.S. is permanently trapped. Increasing taxes produces stagnation; reducing taxes creates inflation. Balancing down embraces the first half of this notion but soundly rejects the second half.

Balancing down seeks to reverse this trend, while preserving the essential improvements in our national security without which no economic policy can produce its intended benefits. Of course, the taxers, presuming incorrectly that balancing down is simply a call for spending cuts, say that they, too, would rather reduce spending than increase taxes. But because they think that it is politically impossible to achieve significant additional spending reductions at the present time, they conclude that the only prudent thing to do is to increase taxes.

Thus the president's refusal to consider tax increases is regarded as "a lack of concern" about deficits. This is not the case. The reason the president insists upon balancing down is that he knows that the deficit itself is not the problem, but merely the reflection of a larger problem. The problem is that the government, through its spending activities, is diverting an excessive amount of resources away from private productive enterprise, a malady that cannot be corrected by increasing taxes. In fact, tax increases would serve only to mask the problem at best.

Balancing down recognizes that there are two financing sources for the government's spending—current taxes and future taxes (borrowing)—and the difference is important. We can increase current tax rates beyond their current high levels, then hope that we actually collect the increased revenues. This would surely slow down the recovery and abort any significant expansion of the tax base. We might even balance the budget in the process (although that is unlikely)—but at a very high level of spending and taxes.

On the other hand, we can give the tax base room to grow by reducing the tax barriers that stand between entrepreneurial dreams and real economic activity. Balancing down chooses the latter course. The Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981 was its beginning, declaring that tax-rate cuts would lead the way. The ERTA tax-rate reductions were a signal to investors and workers that this administration's preferred method for generating tax revenues is growth. At the same time, that fraction of the government budget called the deficit was left exposed as a reminder that our budget work was not yet finished. Of enormous importance, too, was the innovative tax-indexing provision, telling low-income and middle-income taxpayers that, in the future, if the government uses inflation to rob them, they won't also automatically be punished for it by being pushed into higher tax brackets. The economic recovery is clear evidence that the strategy is working, and it must be permitted to continue.

Then comes phase two of balancing down, as the climate of growth and expanding opportunities provides our first real hope for developing the political support necessary for achieving serious and substantive reductions in government spending. This will begin as people who previously depended for subsistence upon government support programs find what they wanted in the first place—productive opportunities in the marketplace—and government dependents become taxpayers. Balancing down reverses the cruel policies that, however well-intended they were, have served to destroy opportunities for people to improve themselves by their own efforts. It is therefore the most humane and compassionate policy of all.

Through balancing down, the president is simply helping us to discover again what made America great in the first place—economic freedom, pure and simple.●

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, I insert into the RECORD the following:

We are gathered here today to share the sorrow and grief of the Robinson family—one of the most humane, committed and productive families in our community. When any family suffers a loss this heavy, we must all grieve, for we are all reduced.

God has a purpose and a lesson for us in all things. But when death occurs as a result of a senseless act of violence, such at this one, His message is particularly hard to fathom.

One lesson we do learn from the death of Cheryl and Little Miss Jeannetta is what a fragile hold on life we all have, and how brief our stay here on Earth really is. For although the difference in the length of our stay on Earth and that of Cheryl and little Jeannetta seems very large to us now, it is in fact but a twinkling of the eye compared to the eons of time that have passed before we arrived here and will pass after we leave. For we are judged not by how long we are here, but by what we do while we are here.

The second lesson we learn is how important it is to be always ready, since our own time of death may come at any moment. As the great philosopher and writer William Shakespeare wrote:

"There is divine providence even in the fall of a sparrow.
If it be now, 'tis not to come.
If it is to come, it will not be now.
If it is not now, yet it will come.
The readiness is all."

I am sure that Cheryl Robinson and Little Miss Jeannetta were ready. And that they now rest in eternal peace.

Let us all remember the blessings we have, and may we do our best to serve our fellow man and God during our brief time here on Earth, and to be ready when our own time does come.●

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join with my distinguished colleague from Florida (Mr. MICA) in introducing legislation to provide annuity and health care benefits for divorced Foreign Service spouses.

The Foreign Service Act of 1980 recognized the unpaid service of Foreign Service spouses by providing retirement and survivor benefits for those who become divorced. Because that act only provided benefits for those divorced after the effective date, many deserving former spouses who were divorced before the 1980 act were excluded from its benefits.

There are numerous cases where divorced Foreign Service spouses are surviving on the charity of church and family or on Government welfare payments because of inadequate retirement income. We are all familiar with the case of Jane Dubs, the divorced spouse of the late Ambassador to Afghanistan, who was left with no survivor benefits after the tragic assassination of her former husband.

The legislation Representative MICA and I introduce today would provide annuity and health benefits for these former spouses. Since 1965, certain widowed Foreign Service spouses have been eligible for grants of annuity benefits. The dollar amount is small, yet it keeps many of these spouses, most of whom are women, from destitution. This legislation would provide the same amount for divorced Foreign Service spouses who are not eligible for any other annuity. The number of divorced Foreign Service spouses eligible for this benefit is estimated to be less than 200.

We can neither forget the contributions these women have made to the United States nor ignore the poverty which many of them now face.

I am also aware of Foreign Service spouses in the Washington area who suffer from serious health problems, some resulting from inadequate medical care and living conditions abroad. Three are going blind, one from lack of money for a needed operation, two have Hodgkins disease, several have minor children with severe physical or mental disabilities.

The legislation introduced today allows divorced Foreign Service spouses to participate in the Federal employee health benefits program by paying a sum equal to the agency and employee share of the health plan premium. There are virtually no costs to the Government for providing this benefit.●

"NATIONAL TUBEROUS SCLEROSIS WEEK" MAY 6-13, 1984

HON. BRIAN J. DONNELLY

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to bring to your attention the first observance of "National Tuberous Sclerosis Week" which will occur the week of May 6-13, 1984.

First discovered over a century ago, it is thought to afflict as many as 1 in every 5,000 births. Its symptoms include mental retardation, epilepsy, developmental delay, and other handicaps. In spite of its frequency, and the severity of the disease, very little meaningful or sustained research has ever been conducted on it.

Fifteen years ago, Raymond and Linda Connors of Rockland, Mass., formed the Tuberous Sclerosis Association of America, Inc. Since then, they and their organization have been the source of help and support for other families in their position. They have been instrumental in increasing awareness of this disease to the medical community and researchers in this country.

To assist in this worthy effort, last year, I introduced a resolution to designate the week of May 6 as "National Tuberous Sclerosis Week," and am pleased to say that this resolution was signed into law on April 13, 1984. I am hopeful that next week's observance will serve to draw the attention of the public and the medical community to the tragedy of this crippling disease, and the need for sustained research.●

M. SLADE CALTRIDER RETIRES

HON. STENY H. HOYER

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, on July 1, 1984, Maryland's State highway administrator, M. Slade Caltrider, will retire after having served the State with honor and distinction for the past 36 years.

Mr. Caltrider's career with the State began in 1948 when he worked as a road inspector for the State road commission. Beginning in 1960, and until his appointment as State highway administrator in 1978, Mr. Caltrider worked on and supervised engineering projects in Maryland's Montgomery and Prince Georges counties. As State highway administrator, he directed a staff of 4,100 employees and operated a budget of over $500 million.

Those of us fortunate enough to have worked with Slade know him as an inexhaustible source of knowledge and expertise concerning the State's 5,200 miles of highways as well as countless urban and country roads. Mr. Caltrider and his staff have readily shared their considerable technical judgment and advice with me and my staff on many Federal road projects including such major thoroughfares as the Baltimore-Washington Parkway.

Mr. Caltrider is a man held in high esteem by his colleagues. He holds the honor of having received the first certificate of recognition for outstanding and exemplary leadership in the field of equal employment opportunity ever awarded by the Maryland State Highway Administration in 1974. In addition, Mr. Caltrider is a member of several professional organizations including the National Society of Professional Engineers, the Maryland Society of Professional Engineers, and the Maryland Association of Engineers.

He is the epitome of a dedicated professional, and his leadership and technical skill in his field have been an invaluable part of the effectiveness of the Maryland Highway Administration.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to join with me in congratulating Mr. Caltrider on his well-deserved retirement. I am sure he and his wife of 34 years, Doris, will enjoy this opportunity to focus on new pursuits, and in the years to come, reflect with pride on Slade's many accomplishments and invaluable service to our State.●

PRESTON TRUCKING: ONE OF THE BEST

HON. ROY DYSON

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. DYSON. Mr. Speaker, the Washington Post's Washington Business Section of April 30, includes an article about Preston Trucking Co. of Preston, Md., concerning the company's inclusion in a new book entitled "The 100 Best Companies to Work For."

I am proud that the Nation's 12th largest freight hauler is headquartered in Maryland's First Congressional District. The Preston Trucking Co.'s success story is truly one of labor-management harmony and cooperation at a time when many companies suffer from internal strife. I find the feature enlightening, stimulating, and recommend it to my colleagues:

"BEST 100": FIRMS THAT OFFER WORKERS THE RIGHT STUFF

"THEORY Y" STEERS PRESTON TO SUCCESS

PRESTON, MD.—Preston Trucking Co.'s Howard Bradshaw pauses after replacing a freshly oiled truck piston, reaches into his red tool cabinet, and pulls out a smudged spiral notebook where he records worker productivity.

By his account, productivity at Preston's shop on the Eastern Shore is up 30 percent since 1980, when it took 51.9 man-hours to rebuild an engine. Last year the figure was 35.5 man-hours.

Why? "We don't have to spend so much time waiting for the foreman to make a decision," says Bradshaw. "There's more time to work on an engine."

During Bradshaw's first 12 years rebuilding truck engines at the shop next to Preston's corporate offices, he worked under the standard system, with managers watching every move. But in 1980, Preston shifted its management gears, gave its workers more control over their work and made the 41-year-old mechanic "team leader" of a self-managed unit of mechanics.

Now Bradshaw, his machine-shop counterparts and the drivers who ply the highways of the Northeast in Preston's orange truck cabs talk as if they were in business for themselves. In the front office, the people who run the company sound more like philosophers than managers of the nation's 12th-largest freight hauler.

The changes have been good for profits too. At a time when many established trucking companies are succumbing to a freight-haul recession and stiff competition spawned by deregulation, Preston is reporting higher revenue based on rising productivity. In this best of all possible trucking worlds, the labor-management love-fest has resulted in:

A 7.9 percent increase in productivity over the base year of 1978.

An overall savings of $19 million in costs since 1978, including a reduction of 4.8 million gallons of fuel in that period.

A 50 percent increase in the number of truck terminals since 1978, to 81 nationwide, with a corresponding 18 percent drop in the number of top executives and a 4 percent drop in supervisors.

Record 1983 revenue of $272.3 million, a 22.5 percent increase over 1982, translated to a 23.9 percent increase in earnings per share.

How did they do it? Billy G. Terrell, 41, Preston's ruddy-faced senior vice president for operations, attributes the company's recent success to "reflective listening, conflict resolution, non-threatening communication, assertiveness versus aggressiveness."

And from Preston's 1982 annual report comes this clue, a message from Goethe: "Treat people as though they were what they ought to be and you help them become what they are capable of being."

It seems to have worked. A series of interviews found no detractors, not even at the union hall.

Says Cliff Atkinson, the Teamsters' shop steward at Preston's Landover terminal, "Preston is just like a family. We can talk to the management, and they can talk to us. This is one helluva company. Heck, we don't even need a shop steward."

Working conditions and profit reports were not always so gleaming. It took some major gambles and a form of capitalism that some describe as creeping socialism to steer the company toward success.

Preston Trucking was founded in 1932 by A. T. Blades, who bought his first truck with a $500 loan, still heads the board at age 75 and still lives a mile down Highway 331 from corporate headquarters. In 1947, the company's annual revenue exceeded $1 million, and by 1961 the corporate net worth had passed the same milestone.

After growing gradually by hauling freight up and down the East Coast, in 1976 Preston acquired Shippers Dispatch Inc., which allowed it to branch out to the Mississippi River. Annual revenue exceeded $100 million that year for the first time.

In those years, when the Interstate Commerce Commission regulated routes, profits were all but ensured. Preston and its competitors could sit back and raise rates every time the unions asked for more money. But in the late 1970s, deregulation loomed, and Preston was forced to reassess its management philosophy after an incident in Detroit.

The Detroit terminal was one of the company's worst for productivity, and in 1978, the Preston brass dictated some policy changes. The union balked and organized a slowdown. According to company President William B. Potter, one driver who sat in his truck for two hours at a loading dock told a customer: "We're going to show those SOBs in Preston who runs this company."

Preston swiftly closed the terminal. But at the same time senior executives began studying other companies, and they hired a consulting firm, Behavior Systems Inc. of Atlanta, to examine working conditions at several Preston terminals, including the one in Detroit. The answers were uniform and unexpected: Workers complained that they frequently were disciplined but rarely praised; foremen aired the same complaints and added that they had no idea of the company's goals.

The consultant's prescription was retraining—from A. T. Blades on down to terminal janitors—in the arts of listening and communicating. Says Senior Vice President for Finance Sean Callahan, "We introduced two parties who had been dying to meet: drivers and supervisors."

Gradually, the company opened the lines of communication. Profit-and-loss statements were posted monthly. "Coordinators" (supervisors) met with "associates" (employes) at the beginning of each shift. Workers organized into teams that met often to discuss problems and solutions. Changes in policy that could be handled locally were made by consensus and implemented. Workers were encouraged to talk with management, even if that meant a call to corporate headquarters.

Now, top executives circulate continuously among the 81 terminals. Company newsletters sing the praises of employes who improve efficiency or simply go beyond the call of duty. Potter writes quarterly reports on the company's status to every employe. Each terminal has a television monitor to show videotapes describing, for example, how drivers can help sell Preston and expand routes. Drivers are encouraged to chat up their customers and take responsibility for quality service.

In business school terms, Preston changed from so-called "Theory X" management, which is autocratic, to "Theory Y" style, which is based on consensus. Some managers couldn't make the shift, according to Terrell, who says 25 percent left, either by choice or by pink slip.

"I was a 'Theory X' manager for 16 years," says Terrell. "So when we were asked to change, I was very confused at first. Now I'm a convert. There's been a cultural change in the organization. I find the job to be a lot more fun.

"It's carried into personal relationships," Terrell adds. "The wife of one of our drivers grabbed me at the Cleveland awards banquet and thanked me for the way her husband is treated at work. She said, 'He treats me and the kids better now, too.'"

Potter is enthusiastic about the new order. "Everybody can get the use of a man's hand," he says. "We want to get the use of his mind."

Preston also has decided to distribute some of the profits. On Jan. 1, the company adopted what is known as the Scanlon Plan, which calls for distribution of any profits derived from increased productivity, computed by comparing wages with net profits. Preston apparently is one of the first trucking companies to offer a Scanlon plan. Management also instituted a stock-option program in which employe purchases of Preston Trucking stock are subsidized at a rate pegged to the company's annual performance.

Meanwhile, other companies are making pilgrimages to Preston headquarters to find out what's going right. To date, representatives from Caterpillar Tractor Co., General Electric Co., Rubbermaid Inc. and Ford Motor Co. have inquired about the truckers' management style.

Potter believes more benevolent and open management at other companies could help boost the nation's sagging productivity.

"If we're going to go out and beat the Japanese," says Potter, "there's no question that we'll have to rely on better participation from the person doing the job."●

MOVING THE U.S. EMBASSY IN ISRAEL TO JERUSALEM—TESTIMONY OF REV. JOHN PAWLIKOWSKI

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, yesterday morning the Europe and Middle East Subcommittee and the International Operations Subcommittee of the Foreign Affairs Committee held historic joint hearings on the bill to move the U.S. Embassy in Israel from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem, which I introduced with my friend from New York, Congressman BEN GILMAN.

One of the leading witnesses at this hearing was the Rev. John T. Pawlikowski, professor of social ethics at the Catholic Theological Union, which is a constitutent institution of the University of Chicago. Father Pawlikowski is also a member of the National Christian Leadership Conference for Israel, and his testimony was presented on behalf of the conference.

Father Pawlikowski typifies the kind of intelligent, thoughtful support that our legislation to move the U.S. Embassy in Israel to Jerusalem has received from Roman Catholics and other groups throughout the United States. For the benefit of my colleagues in the House, who were unable to participate in these hearings, I place in the RECORD the statement of Father Pawlikowski.

TESTIMONY OF REV. JOHN T. PAWLIKOWSKI, O.S.M., PH.D. ON BEHALF OF THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN LEADERSHIP CONFERENCE FOR ISRAEL

Members of the House of Representatives. My name is Father John Pawlikowski of the Servite Religious Order. I serve as Professor of Social Ethics at the Catholic Theological Union, a constituent school of the Chicago Cluster of Theological Schools at the University of Chicago. For some fifteen years I have studied the varied facets of the Middle East political conflict through personal research and multiple visits to the region. My reflections have been expressed in a number of American and foreign publications including Worldview and Commonweal. I have in the past been part of a Middle East reconciliation group sponsored by the World Without War Council and am presently part of the Executive Committee of the National Christian Leadership Conference for Israel headquartered in New York City. The Leadership Conference represents a broad coalition of Christian groups and individuals from all parts of the country. My testimony this morning in support of the bill is presented in the name of this organization though the line of argumentation is my own as a professional scholar.

From my long-time analysis of issues involved in the Arab-Israeli conflict a number of firm convictions have emerged. One of these is particularly relevant, I believe, to the issue at hand—moving the U.S. Embassy to Jerusalem. Put succinctly it is simply this: Arab recognition of Israel must be seen as the lead card, not the trump card, in any resolution of the current impasse. This is a point clearly underscored by Dr. Aaron David Miller, a U.S. State Department analyst and author of the 1983 volume "The PLO and the Politics of Survival" (Praeger). In a recent interview in the peace-oriented Israeli monthly New Outlook, Miller says the following:

—future meaningful progress between Israel and its Arab neighbors will continue to be blocked unless there is nothing less than a fundamental change in the attitudes and policies of both Israel and the remaining confrontation states. The Arab states will have to recognize in an unambiguous fashion that recognition of Israel, far from being the final trump card of the game, is the opening card in negotiations. Israel, for its part, will have to come to the realization, no matter how painful, that this conflict will be interminable unless the Palestinians achieve a homeland of their own. (January 1984, p. 25)

I fully agree with Dr. Miller that both parties bear a responsibility for the current impasse. I have spelled out my thoughts on what Israel needs to do and not do in other writings (cfl., for example, "Rethinking the Palestinian Question," Worldview, October 1974 and "Initial Views of Invasion were Exaggerated," Subject to Change, Washington University's Quarterly Review of Politics and the Arts, December 13, 1982). They generally second Dr. Miller's contention that the impetus for a breakthrough must come from all parties to the present conflict. There are responsible Palestinian claims to justice that I am obliged to affirm morally and politically. But these observations are not directly related to the immediate question before us—the embassy move. For I strongly support judging this issue on its own merits, apart from any assessment of Israeli policies on the West Bank.

It is Dr. Miller's first point, formal recognition of Israel as first step from the Arab side, that is relevant in my judgment to our deliberations about this bill, especially so in light of the fact that neither Dr. Miller nor New Outlook can in any way by considered mere apologists for the present government in Israel. The continued refusal of our government to transfer the embassy to Israel's historic capital of Jerusalem continues to encourage in my view Arab refusal to undertake this necessary precondition for peace. There can be no State of Israel without Jerusalem and without Jewish sovereignty in Jerusalem. Let us never pretend otherwise. Let us impress upon our Arab brothers and sisters that any other position is politically suicidal pretense. This we would do by relocating our embassy.

Sometimes one needs to tell those he truly respects the painful truth. And that truth for the Arab world is that there is no hope for meangingful negotiations on the Middle East without unqualified recognition of Israel's existence and clear admission of its sovereign claims in Jerusalem. Those in our religious and political establishments who oppose this bill on the grounds that it will harm our friendship with the Arab nations may in fact not be the true friends of the Arab peoples in the last analysis. For so long as they contribute to the continued illusion that Israel may yet be wiped away, still so prevalent in parts of the Arab world, which is subtly undergrid by keeping our embassy in Tel Aviv, they may in fact be harming the long-term interests of the Palestinian people in particular and of the Arab world generally.

But let me make my position on one crucial point, the sovereignty question in Jerusalem, very clear. Never have I endorsed the view that only Israel has claims on Jerusalem. That is why I have consistently argued that some formula must be found of expressing a measure of joint sovereignty in East Jerusalem. I do not pretend for one moment that this will be an easy task. I fully concur that this cannot happen without an overall peace agreement for it would require significant trust on both sides. In this vein I would never support this bill if it intended to locate our embassy in East Jerusalem. That part of the city I still consider a question of further negotiations. Jewish claims there I regard as historic and politically legitimate, but these claims cannot be exclusive but meshed with those of its Arab citizens. I should add that I am totally opposed to my scheme for internationalization or re-division of the city. Only a physically united Jerusalem makes any sense and only government by its citizens should be retained in any further discussions of political models.

Obviously our Government cannot be totally deaf to the protests from Arab governments regarding this bill. But neither should it succumb to what amounts to a threat of blackmail. I would consider it quite proper, in fact I would consider it wise, for the U.S. Government to accompany any move of our embassy to Jerusalem with a public statement that such a transfer in no way prejudices our consistent position that the status of East Jerusalem remains unresolved politically nor in any way signals a blanket approval of all Israeli policies on the West Bank.

Let me add that apart from my main justification for the embassy move—the cessation of any further subtle American support for politically dangerous Arab illusions—it can be defended on the basis of the line of argument developed by Congressman Tom Lantos of California in the Los Angeles Times (March 21, 1984). He correctly points out that successive administrations have carried on official business with Israel in Jerusalem—so why not formally acknowledge the fact. And though the status of the city, it is true, remains undetermined in terms of a strict interpretation of international law we had no hesitation in establishing our embassy in the German Democratic Republic in a city whose status is even more complicated legally—East Berlin, and where we join France and Great Britain in maintaining allied claims even at the risk of death for our soldiers. So the argument about Jerusalem's unresolved status strikes me as wholly unconvincing in terms of opposition to the present bill. Why then is Israel the only country with whom we maintain diplomatic ties, and one of our most reliable allies at that, whose choice of capitals we refuse to honor? Prejudice or blackmail, neither acceptable answers, seem the only logical explanation.

To conclude, it is my firm belief that the Members of the House of Representatives would be performing a service, not a disservice, for the peace process by approving this bill. I strongly endorse such action. It is an excellent way of telling our Arab friends, "the time has come for you to play the inevitable lead card."●

FREE ELECTIONS IN PANAMA

HON. HENRY J. HYDE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, on Sunday, May 6, the Panamanian people, for the first time in 16 years, will go to the polls to vote in a democratic election. This is a significant and historical event not only to the people of Panama, but to all of Central America. It is a milestone to the Panamanian people becuase it is the culmination of the process of transforming their government from one of military rule to one which is democratically elected according to their Constitution. This election will also signal hope to other nations in that region that long for true democracy, peaceful coexistence between a strong military which can defend the country and a strong democratic government which can rule the country, and the kind of economic prosperity that can only come about when conflicts are resolved and all of the people of the nation can start working toward common national goals.

The people of El Salvador will also be voting on Sunday. These elections will help fulfill the aspirations of the freedom loving people of these countries and hopefully will signal a brighter future for them and their children.●

NEGOTIATIONS ON START

HON. BERKLEY BEDELL

OF IOWA

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. BEDELL. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased today to be introducing a concurrent resolution aimed at urging the Soviet Union to return to both the START (Strategic Arms Reduction Talks) and INF (Intermediate Nuclear Forces) negotiations, as well as to agree to an interim measure—until those talks can be resumed—on a mutual and verifiable moratorium on the further deployment of nuclear-armed sea-launched cruise missiles (SLCM's). I am also pleased to inform you that I am joined in this effort by Representatives LEACH and STARK here in the House and that Senators MATHIAS and DURENBERGER have introduced a similar resolution in the Senate.

Mr. Speaker, cruise missiles are not automatically destabilizing weapons systems. They are, after all, subsonic in speed and have no first strike attack potential. Nevertheless, in terms of verification, SLCM's are an arms controller's nightmare because of the inherent similarities between the nuclear armed and conventional versions of this weapons system.

The Navy Department has informed us of its intention in the years ahead to deploy some 7,000 to 8,000 launch tubes for various weapons on various types of ships within our fleet. In addition to carrying conventional loads, these tubes will also be made capable of firing both nuclear and conventional SLCM systems. Thus, from an arms control perspective, the continued deployment of SLCM's could create a Pandora's box from which future verifiable arms control agreements might not be retrievable. Arms control might indeed become a dream of the past.

Under conditions that would be created in this new environment, the Soviets could demand that every SLCM system be counted as a nuclear system, but under traditional strategic arms counting rules, it would be sheer folly for us to accept such a demand. We could be backed into a corner in which the only nuclear systems remaining in our arsenal would be SLCM's. Clearly, this does not make any sense at all.

I also think that we all must ask ourselves serious questions as to the ultimate utility of SLCM's and whether SLCM's would really contribute to the national security interests of the United States and its allies. When I look upon any map of the world, it seems to me that they do not. Most of our cities, industrial centers and population—as much as 75 percent of our population—are within easy reach of SLCM's launched from the waters that surround our Nation—on the other hand, most Soviet cities are well inland and thus, less threatened by SLCM's.

Mr. Speaker, I have mentioned the waters that surround our Nation. In the past, those waters have insulated us from our adversaries. Today, however, the Pentagon would appear willing to allow those waters to become safe havens for a full array of ships that could be equipped with SLCM's threatening the security and survival of our Nation. Thus, the potential for hundreds, even thousands, of mini-Cuban missile crises is precipitated and because of our acceptance of the laws of the freedom of the seas, we would be powerless to stop their occurrence.

Mr. Speaker, does it make any sense for us to push ahead with yet another technology in which we appear to have a temporary edge when we know full well that the Soviets will mimic us yet another time and put our security at greater risk and peril than it already is? I think not and I believe that to be the purpose of our efforts to achieve a mutual and verifiable moratorium on further SLCM deployments. This is not a question of unilateral disarmament but rather an effort to preclude a unilateral deployment which we know will only gain us a temporary and fleeting edge over the Soviet Union. I believe that the growing momentum of the nuclear arms race must be slowed. In my view, a mutual, verifiable moratorium on the further deployment of SLCM's is one step toward accomplishing this aim and, perhaps, getting the Soviet Union back to the bargaining tables at Geneva. I urge my colleagues to join with us in support of this effort.●

MISS ELIZABETH POIARKOFF—52 YEARS OF TEACHING AND STILL GOING STRONG

HON. JOE KOLTER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. KOLTER. Mr. Speaker, it is indeed my pleasure today to honor Miss Elizabeth Poiarkoff for unwavering dedication to the Aliquippa Area School District for the past 52 years, the longest term served in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. As a native Aliquippan, Miss Poiarkoff has served her community tirelessly. She began her elementary education at $50 a month in 1933 and has worked, without leave or interruption, ever since. Years of service alone, however, are not all for which Miss Poiarkoff is to be commended.

She has been an influence to her pupils as well as her community through more than academics. For over 30 years, she led a Girl Scout troop and has been active in her church's union at the Saint George Byzantine Catholic Church. She also taught Sunday school and intramural sports.

It is my honor, Mr. Speaker, to pay tribute to Miss Poiarkoff for her selfless dedication and tremendous concern for her community. Her community is richer for her commitment, and I wish her 52 more years of involvement.●

A UTILITY TWISTS IN THE WIND

HON. CARL D. PURSELL

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. PURSELL. Mr. Speaker, The following article appeared in the Livonia Michigan Observer on April 26, 1984, concerning the controversy which has developed in Michigan over the construction of a nuclear power facility.

In light of similar situations which are occurring throughout the country I would like to share this article with my colleagues.

A UTILITY TWISTS IN THE WIND

(By Tim Richard)

There's a new twist to the Consumers Power Co. story this year.

It's nothing new for professional second guessers such as Attorney General Frank Kelley and Joe Tuchinsky—the former college English teacher who became an expert on utilities the minute he got a job as the voice of the Michigan Citizens Lobby—to carp at Consumers.

The Kelleys and Tauchinskys have long held that Consumers should abandon its Midland nuclear generating plant.

The new twist is that now Wall Street and industry have turned against Consumers Power.

Already the Midland plant is nine years behind schedule, the cost overruns have been astronomical, and the plant is only 85 percent complete.

The utility can raise the $1 billion-plus in new capital funds to complete Midland in one of two ways: selling securities on Wall Street or asking the state for a rate hike sufficient to generate enough income that can be reinvested internally.

Wall Street says new securities are out of the question, given the climate in Michigan.

And a group of industrial giants under the collective name of ABATE is telling Consumers Power to forget about completing the Midland plant.

Finally, last week the company set up a traveling road show to sell "community leaders" on their plight and got told off firmly by small business types who say they could never operate the way Consumers Power has.

And in a way, it's fun to see obtuse executives get kicked around.

But more is at stake here than seeing an unpopular company twist slowly in the wind.

Even though Consumers Power sells only natural gas and not electricity in these suburbs, the company is essential for all of Michgan's economic revitalization.

When it comes to recruiting industry, politicians may pass the rezoning and get in the middle of ribbon-cutting photos, but it's the electric and gas utility which has done the lion's share of the recruiting work.

If Consumers Power can't convince outstate industrial prospects that it can generate enough power to satisfy them without buying from outside sources, then outstate Michigan has a dim chance of sharing in our economic recovery. And a lot of welfare checks go to the Jacksons, Kalamazoos, Saginaws and Bay Citys of this state, not only to Detroit.

It's impossible for the average industrialist, retailer or news reporter to grasp the enormous complexity of running a power company.

Only a railroad expert could appreciate it, and there aren't too many railroad people around any more.

An electric utility is so capital-intensive that it boggles the mind. Its biggest costs are not wages and materials but capital—interest on the bonds, dividends to cautious stockholders, depreciation of buildings and machinery.

Electric companies—not government—really invented long-range regional planning. They have to calculate customers' needs many years into the future. A simple coal plant takes eight years to bring on-line. A nuclear plant takes 10, 15 or goodness knows how many years to complete and begin operating.

So the whole thing is not as simple as telling John Selby and his several thousand stockholders to write off $5 billion as a bad investment and ask the chaplain to punch their tough luck cards.

Yes, it's fun in 1984 to see Consumers Power officials suffer and stockholders sweat. But it won't be fun in 1990 or 2000 if Michigan winds up with a knee-high economy because a utility has been brutalized.●

THE ULTIMATE CURE IS COURAGE

HON. BILL FRENZEL

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, The May 7 Forbes magazine contained a splendid editorial on the strong dollar and how to cure it.

The ultimate cure is neither monetary policy nor interventions. It is courage. That is what is needed to reduce the deficit.

For those Members who may have missed it, the editorial follows:

THE DOLLAR IS UNLIKELY TO WEAKEN SOON

Logic says that the dollar's unprecedented rise against other currencies since mid-1980 (by no less than 45 percent after inflation) must reverse sometime. The questions are: By how much, and by when?

The answers, assuming present Federal Reserve monetary policies hold through the election: (1) by much less than the 20 percent many economists expect; and (2) later than they think.

Strictly speaking, of course, the dollar is strong but not overvalued. With floating exchange rates, the dollar's value is what the market says it is. It will stay relatively strong because of the circular relationship between the federal budget deficit and the Fed's tight money policy.

A combination of factors operating at home and abroad is keeping the dollar buoyed. Economic recovery here is cutting down on U.S. investment overseas. The belief that the United States is a safe haven for monetary values, and that Paul Volcker will keep it that way by not printing more money, will continue to draw money from abroad.

These same factors have their flip side, of course. If the dollar were weaker, U.S. interest rates would have to be even higher than they are in order to attract and hold capital. Thus, strange as it may seem to the very young, some interest-rate sensitive sectors like housing have been helped a bit, albeit indirectly, by the strong dollar. But companies depending on exports are obviously suffering, as are those competing with imports. Farm products, one of the biggest U.S. exports, are obviously hurt. Two other examples:

Aerospace, a top industrial export, is affected three ways by the strong dollar: (1) U.S.-made planes are made relatively more costly; (2) finance deals in currencies other than dollars can be more attractive; and (3) airlines in weak-currency countries are postponing buying.

Chemicals-and-fibers-conglomerate Du Pont reckons that last year, because of the strong dollar, pretax earnings from exports (excluding energy operations) were more than $200 million lower than in 1980.

Put these together and you have the elements contributing to the U.S. mounting trade deficit—$69.4 billion in 1983, an estimated $100 billion or more in 1984.

Most populist nostrums for curing the dollar's ills would be of dubious usefulness, at best, and might be positively harmful.

Printing money would push the dollar down sharply and disruptively, as it did in the late 1970s, with a 10 percent decline adding about 1.5 percent to the rise in price levels. Government intervention in world money markets works, but only so long as the Treasury keeps spending billions of dollars. Protectionism helps import-fighting industries but leaves exporters vulnerable to retaliation.

The way to tame the dollar is to make serious cuts to the budget deficit. That would trim the dollar by the 20 percent to 30 percent by which most exporters think it is too strong, but slowly and without adverse side effects. But that takes political courage, which is in short supply.●

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. ROBERT G. TORRICELLI

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. TORRICELLI. Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, circumstances did not allow me to be on the floor during the vote for S. 2750, a bill to extend the current bankruptcy court system from April 30 to May 26. I take this opportunity now to express my support for this measure.

The restructuring of our Nation's bankruptcy courts is an important issue and one which deserves careful deliberation by Congress. This extension will enable us to carefully review all points of controversy still existing between the House and Senate on this issue. I am hopeful that a sensible compromise will be reached during this extension.●

WESTERGAARD: REAGAN WILL BURY MONDALE

HON. NEWT GINGRICH

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, the Presidential election of 1984 will have a tremendous impact upon the direction this Nation takes for the remainder of the decade. A clear-cut choice will be made between a conservative opportunity society offered by President Reagan and the Republicans and a return to the failed liberal welfare state programs offered by the Democrats.

Columnist Nick Poulos writes about John Westergaard, one of Wall Street's most respected and successful stock market strategists. Mr. Westergaard has made a forecast that President Reagan will be reelected in 1984 by a "1936-type margin." What makes this forecast even more impressive is the fact that it comes from a registered Democrat who has worked in the past for a Democratic Senator. Westergaard's insights are extremely interesting and accurate and I would like to present them to my colleagues.

[From the Atlantic Constitution, Apr. 24, 1984]

WESTERGAARD: REAGAN WILL BURY MONDALE

(By Nick Poulos)

John Westergaard is the kind of man who can separate his politics from his business—and do it in rather dramatic fashion.

Westergaard is one of Wall Street's most respected, and therefore successful, stock market strategists. He is president of the Westergaard Fund and editor and publisher of a market newsletter produced by his firm, Equity Research Associates Inc.

Westergaard also is, by his own admission, a registered Democrat; a political activist who twice served as campaign treasurer for his good friend, Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan of New York.

But in his recent market letter to clients, Westergaard forecast that President Reagan will win re-election this November by a "1936-type margin" great enough to establish a Republican majority in the House.

"Walter Mondale will be the Alf Landon of our time," Westergaard asserted. "Reagan will destroy him. He will lay low until the Republican convention at which point he will confront the American people with the simple proposition that if the budgetary process is not brought under control, the dollar will be worth 20 cents in five years.

REPUBLICAN CONGRESS

"To rescue the dollar, he will ask the public to return a Republican Congress and the public will comply.

"The election of a Republican Congress will thus be the great unexpected event of 1984 that will lift the psychological malaise stemming from the public's deep-seated fear over the federal deficit.

"Reagan's mandate will be so convincing as to remove this fear overnight. This will in turn touch off a raging bull market. In fact, the market will probably anticipate our scenario by starting its upswing four to six weeks before election day.

"As for the Democrats, Mondale is just what the doctor ordered if one takes the long view. He epitomizes the outdated manifestoes and obsolete coalitions from which the party must free itself. His massive defeat will serve as an intellectual house cleaning from which a rebuilding process can begin."

Westergaard added in a phone interview that it would probably take about eight years for the Democratic party to develop a new political ideology that would appeal to the electroate.

"Right now, I don't see a new leader on the horizon who can do this," said Westergaard.

POLITICAL PHILOSOPHY

"It's unfortunate that the majority party of the country in terms of registration can't develop a political philosophy that will appeal to the majority of the electorate."

Westergaard went on in his newsletter to assert that 1984 will be a watershed year in American politics, that it will be the most significant election year since 1936 when President Franklin D. Roosevelt carried all but two states.

"It is important to keep in mind that in American politics, a mandate is rarely established with the first-term election of a president," he said.

"FDR's victory in 1932, for example, was not a mandate for anything except change. There was. . .not a hint of what would subsequently become the New Deal.

"In the same manner, 1980 was a year of change—Jimmy Carter was the Democrat's Herbert Hoover, and Ronald Reagan's campaign, like Roosevelt's in 1932, was more thematic than programmatic."

Westergaard said that if Sen. Gary Hart were to become the Democratic candidate it would "obscure" the issues.

"He would also lose to Reagan, but his loss would not carry the symbolic impact of a Mondale wipeout and would thereby delay the revitalization process," he concluded.●

VOICE OF DEMOCRACY

HON. ALBERT GORE, JR.

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. GORE. Mr. Speaker, each year the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States conducts a "Voice of Democracy" contest for high school students. The students are given a theme in keeping with the ideal of American democracy and asked to submit an essay on the subject.

I am honored to share with you today the winning speech from the State of Tennessee for 1984. It was submitted by Brooks Moore of White House, Tenn., who is currently a senior at Beech Senior High School. Brooks expresses a firm commitment to our Constitution, the foundation of our Government, and a keen understanding of the importance of this document to all Americans in his essay.

I commend his words to you.

MY ROLE IN UPHOLDING OUR CONSTITUTION

(By Brooks Moore)

Probably the most important document ever written is the Constitution of the United States of America.

Written in 1789 by colonial men tired of the oppression of the monarch they lived under, the Constitution outlined a unique system of government, and introduced into the politics of the era a completely new idea—freedom!

This form of government, which allowed the people to govern themselves, so new and unheard of that no one thought it would work. But, as the world watched with growing amazement and grudging admiration, our government not only worked, it flourished! So much did it flourish, in fact, that in time other countries came to copy it—overthrowing their tyrannical rulers and selecting from among the people someone to do what the people wanted.

Today, looking around, one can see that a major portion of the world has a form of government which is based on the government of the United States, which in turn is based on ideas of freedom written down in a document composed by men who had shaken of the tyranny of a hereditary ruler.

It can be said, then, that the Constitution of the United States, by setting an example of liberty for other countries to follow, began the metamorphosis of the world, into a better place. In my opinion, that makes it the most important document ever written.

And who am I? I am a citizen of the United States. I live and flourish under that same constitution. My rights of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness are sacred, uninfringable, I am free!

The Constitution allows me to say what I want, think what I want, and do what I want, so long as I do not infringe upon the liberty of others.

Because of the Constitution I am free, and so that I may remain free, and so that it may safeguard the liberty of future generations, I uphold the Constitution with all my might.

How do I do this? By obeying and supporting the laws of my country which were passed to safeguard my rights. By using my freedom of speech and action to speak and act for reform when I see a need for it. But most importantly, by simply remaining free. I guard jealously the rights the Constitution has given me, and in so doing I guard the Constitution itself. As long as I remain free, as long as every citizen of the United States remains free, the Constitution stands; for it is the Constitution that keeps me free.

Yes, I stand upon the Constitution as my firm pedestal of freedom from which I cannot be dislodged; and in so doing, I stand behind the Constitution, supporting it, upholding it, keeping it firm.●

A SALUTE TO MR. WILLIAM L. WOOD

HON. LOUIS STOKES

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. STOKES. Mr. Speaker, next week, we will convene our annual congressional senior citizen intern program. Seniors from across the country will travel to Washington to learn more about the Federal Government and how it operates—especially in the area of legislation and programs affecting our Nation's elderly. At this time, I would like to pay special tribute to an outstanding senior who will be participating in the program and serving as my senior citizen intern for 1984.

Mr. William L. Wood was born in Guthrie, Okla., on October 8, 1908. His family moved to Cleveland in 1920 seeking better employment opportunities. He is a graduate of Central High School and is married to the former Bernice Williams.

In 1947, Mr. Wood assumed a position with the Cleveland Postal Service. He recently retired from the Postal Service after 37 years of service.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. Wood has been a positive force in the Cleveland area for many years. Despite working long hours and raising three children, Mr. Wood was a leading advocate for a number of important causes.

In the Postal Service, Mr. Wood and other black postal officials broke the racial barriers by becoming one of the first minority employees to secure routes in the business section of Cleveland. As a result of his pioneering experiences in this area, Mr. Wood became active with the postal workers union and has logged many miles traveling to postal conventions.

His commitment to the young and old in the community also has been unceasing. Mr. Speaker, he joined the Ohio Youth Commission and Big Brothers many years ago. Under these programs, disadvantaged youth were given opportunities for employment, counseling and career guidance to prepare them for the outside world.

My senior citizen intern is also a former member of the Community Club for Homes, Retirees of Branch 40, Postal Employees and holds a life membership with the NAACP. His membership with the St. John A.M.E. Church in Cleveland spans 50 years.

Mr. Wood embraces the philosophy that the elderly "must keep active and viable in order to survive." He has not only been active but has also demonstrated an uncanny sensitivity to the well-being of his fellow man. He is the source of support and guidance for the young and the old alike.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud of the many contributions Mr. Wood has made to the people of my congressional district. I am pleased that he has accepted my invitation to serve as my senior citizen intern.●

MOTHER'S DAY

HON. GERRY SIKORSKI

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. SIKORSKI. Mr. Speaker, as Mother's Day approaches, I would like to share with you something Hubert Humphrey once said:

No government program, no social service, no speech by a public official is a substitute for interest at home, inspiration at home, encouragement at home.

I worked hard to create and become appointed to the Select Committee on Children, Youth and Families because of my desire to protect the home and strengthen the family. And there is no more important key to strong families than mothers. That is what Mother's Day is all about.

Recent shifts in our society and economy have created new patterns of life for many American mothers and families. Our 6th Congressional District has the second highest percentage of two-career families in the Nation, and we know 68 percent of adult women in our district work outside the home.

I am concerned that nationally the number of children living with their mother only has risen by 68 percent since 1970. Now almost 13 million children live in households headed by their mother; nearly 3 million of these children are under the age of 6. One-third of all households headed by women live in poverty—five times the rate of all households. Today there are over 23 million children under the age of 14 whose mothers are in the workforce, yet affordable day care is scarce.

The stamina and dedication of America's mothers are demonstrated by how they are often single-handedly meeting the challenge of change with intelligence and dignity. Today's mothers are involved in every aspect of business, politics, education, sports, the arts, sciences, and government, and yet they still remain at the core of this Nation's greatest natural resource: They shape the character and dreams of our children.

That is why our observance of Mother's Day is so important. It provides us not only with an opportunity to honor our own mothers, but also to thank all of America's mothers who make our Nation stronger through their children.●

SOUTH CAROLINA TOASTMASTERS PROMOTE LEADERSHIP SKILLS

HON. CARROLL A. CAMPBELL, JR.

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, the Duke of Wellington once advised a new member of Parliament as follows: "Don't quote Latin; say what you have to say, and then sit down." Those of us who do not have a Duke to advise us often rely on toastmasters.

It was my privilege recently to participate in the winter conference of the Toastmasters of South Carolina, who epitomize the goals of the more than 100,000-member international club which is devoted to promoting effective communication and effective leadership.

Of particular importance at this time is the South Carolina Toastmasters emphasis on youth leadership/success educational programs to encourage our young people to develop better listening, thinking, and speaking skills.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to congratulate the Toastmasters of South Carolina and toastmasters everywhere on taking the initiative to acquire and share the skills demanded for a growing, prospering Nation.●

THE ENTERPRISE ZONE EMPLOYMENT AND DEVELOPMENT ACT OF 1983

HON. BEVERLY B. BYRON

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mrs. BYRON. Mr. Speaker, in recent years, Maryland has been a leader among States in the utilization of enterprise zones. Through the tax, loan, and grant incentives that these zones offer, economically depressed areas are able to attract the establishment of new businesses. Within my district alone, the cities of Hagerstown and Cumberland have designated enterprise zones which are intended to both combat high unemployment and strengthen the overall economy. However, economic development in this northwestern region of Maryland continues to lag behind the rest of the country and sorely needs the boost that Federal legislation would provide.

It is my understanding that the conference on the Senate Deficit Reduction Act of 1984—which contains the enterprise zone bill—will take place sometime next week. I am firmly convinced that, if enacted, this legislation will provide enterprise zone programs with the support they need through special tax incentives and regulatory relief on the Federal level. Businesses located in the designated enterprise zones would be eligible for investment and employment tax credits; employees of such firms could claim a nonrefundable income tax credit as well. I believe that the Nation, in its effort to recover from its recent economic depression, badly needs to see the passage of this legislation.

I am currently one of 257 House cosponsors of the Enterprise Zone Employment and Development Act of 1983. In view of the overwhelming support that this legislation had received within the House, I wish to urge the conferees to retain the Senate's enterprise zone language within the Deficit Reduction Act conference report. In doing so, I believe that the conferees will allow the majority of the House to express its will on this issue and pass this worthwhile piece of legislation.

For interested colleagues, I have included an informative article on enterprise zones which was recently published in the Baltimore Business Journal.

[From the Baltimore Business Journal, Apr. 2-8, 1984]

ENTERPRISE ZONES

(By Rebecca McReynolds)

It's been just over a year now since the state legislature decided to work a little magic and breathe life back into Maryland's dying areas by using an old Oriental trick called enterprise zones. And the jury is still out on how well this sleight of hand is working, with wide variations in the results experienced by the zones.

The detractors cry that there have been little or no significant turnabouts in the economically stricken parts of the state as a result of all the financial incentives. But leaders in the enterprise movement point proudly to the $18 million in private and public investments in these areas that is to serve as the foundation on which the 10-year program will be built.

Maryland's version of the enterprise zone is an interpretation of British economist Stuart Butler's observations from a trip to the Orient. When visiting Japan, he noticed that sections of the country denoted as 'free trade zones" enjoyed health and growing economies.

Bringing the idea back to the United Kingdom, Butler was able to persuade his country to take a shot at using special government incentives to stir the economic flames in its decaying neighborhoods.

Maryland, along with 21 other states, borrowed this idea and has put together a package of economic incentives designed to draw new enterprise into sections of the state that have been hit with high unemployment and a sinking population. These are the trademarks of dying areas.

Maryland is offering several carrots to businesses that would locate in a designated enterprise zone:

There is a special 80 percent property-tax credit based on the difference between the taxable assessment on the land before it was designated and the current assessment of any improvements on the land for no more than five consecutive taxable years.

Income-tax credits are provided to employers for wages paid to new employees in the zone. For employees who would have qualified under the Comprehensive Employment Training Act (CETA), the maximum credit is $1,500 for the first year of employment, $1,000 for the second and $500 for the third. For other employees, employers get one-time $500 tax credit.

Loan limits on the Maryland Industrial Land Act are increased to $1 million and 100 percent of market value for land acquisitions; to $2 million and 50 percent of property costs for industrial parks; to $2 million for a shell building and to $100,000 on a matching basis for acquiring land or park site options.

The Marlyland Industrial and Commercial Redevelopment Fund increased the precentage of loans or grants made available to any city or county to 50 percent from the previous 40 percent provided the extra 10 percent is restricted to enterprise zones.

When all of this bait was approved by the General Assembly in October of 1982, there were 10 contenders for the four positions opened up for enterprise zone designation. Chosen were the City of Baltimore's Park Circle, the City of Hagerstown/Washington County, the Town of Capitol Heights, and the City of Cumberland/Allegany County.

Areas that have received enterprise zone classification since then but haven't celebrated their first anniversaries yet are West Baltimore, the Town of Accident/Garrett County, Calvert County and the City of Salisbury.

According to Edward Wise, deputy director of the division of local and regional development for the Maryland Department of Economic and Community Development, these zones have spawned 330 new jobs in the state. They also have generated $12.5 million in private investment for new construction, rehabilitation, machinery and equipment.

Public investment in the areas total $5.5 million.

But unfortunately for areas such as Allegany County and Capitol Heights, these numbers don't divide up evenly among the different zones. And the effect of the state's new classification is just as varied and difficult to categorize as the locations themselves.

Probably the most successful enterprise zone in the state—in terms of capital improvements and new jobs created—is the Park Circle enterprise zone in northwest Baltimore.

"But Baltimore has BEDCO (Baltimore Economic Development Corp.)," says Richard N. Funkhouser, an economist for the division for research at DECD, who sits on the designation evaluation committee. "It is a lot easier for a Baltimore to get new business than say a Salisbury.

You have to bear in mind that areas that get enterprise zones are distressed. Nobody expects them to become poles of development in one year."

This becomes evident when studying the development of the state's three other year-old zones.

HAGERSTOWN/WASHINGTON COUNTY

With the closing of the Fairchild Industries plant in Hagerstown, Washington County's unemployment rate hit 11.1 percent in December, 1983. This is nearly double the state's rate of 6.2 percent.

Since being designated as an enterprise zone, however, the area has seen $7.5 million in rehabilitation and new construction. But Wise says most of that capital investment was completed within the zone just to take advantage of the tax assessment incentives. A total of only five new jobs have been created so far.

Wise points to an accounting firm that bought an old A&P warehouse within the enterprise zone that spent "a great deal of money" renovating it, and moved its employees there without creating one job.

But, according to the zone's first annual report to the state, all of this is expected to pay off with 75 to 80 new jobs by the end of 1984.

CITY OF CUMBERLAND/ALLEGANY COUNTY

In the 10,000-acre zone in Allegany County, there are seven companies taking advantage of the tax incentives offered in the area. More than 100 new jobs have been created there through the expansion of existing businesses within the zone, and two new businesses have opened there.

There has been more than $1.3 million in private capital investment in the area, but no public monies spent in improving the zone.

But Wise says there is still a lot that can be expected to come into the 10,000-acre zone. So far, the emphasis has been just in getting organized, "but they've got a big play pen now to concentrate on," he says.

CAPITOL HEIGHTS

The only zone in the state that hasn't seen any new jobs or businesses come in since qualifying for the tax breaks is Capitol Heights in Prince George's County. But Wise says the newly committed public funds in the area are a heartening sign of good things to come.

The town has allotted $286,000 for the reconstruction of Quire Avenue in the hopes of making it more attractive to businesses looking at moving into the area. And $108,000 has been earmarked for property acquisition that would leverage private investment in the town's enterprise zone.

EVALUATION

Now comes the hard part for the state—sitting down and evaluating the success of the zones, both quantitatively and qualitatively. And Funkhouser says his research department has just begun the monumental task of putting together a set of formulas that will plug into the varying mold of each zone.

"A great deal of the impact evaluation will be the qualitative part," Funkhouser says. "But we don't know which questions need to be asked."

The Federal Government has come up with two ratings systems because there is no real way to compare the rural areas with cities like Baltimore.

Funkhouser says he hopes to have a complete evaluating system set up by May to help direct the department in declaring new enterprise zones and grade the zones in existence.

"I would give very high grades on the program," he says.

BALTIMORE'S BOOMTOWNS STILL HAVE A LONG ROAD AHEAD

On the surface, Baltimore's Park Circle enterprise zone could stand out as a shining example of how the state's incentive program can work toward the revitalization of the city. But 34 vacant acres could tell a different tale to outsiders.

Park Circle was one of the first areas in the state to receive enterprise-zone classification from the Maryland Department of Economic and Community Development.

The stricken area had an unemployment rate of more than 18 percent—more than 25 percent for youths—and was considered one of the city's poorest neighborhoods.

Enter Mayor Schaefer and the state legislature, making the stricken area a safe harbor from business taxes; planting seeds that are to sprout new business, new jobs and new hope for Park Circle's poor.

Last year, the city spent more than $2.6 million in the area acquiring land and making improvements. Baltimore spent $650,000 buying up 23 acres of surplus land from the state. And then it pieced together more property to create a 40-acre, city-owned industrial park.

After that came $2 million worth of improvements including the widening of Druid Hill Park Drive, a new access road for the area and the clearing of the 3400 block of Reisterstown Road.

The pay-off? Sixty new companies bringing in around 250 new jobs for the area.

But all of these jobs and businesses have come in under the umbrella of the single private investment in the enterprise zone—Control Data Corp.'s Business and Technology Center.

The center works as a nurturing ground for fledgling companies. It supplies a set of shared services for tenants including computers, a secretarial staff and copying facilities for businesses that are just starting out and don't have deep enough pockets to put all this together themselves.

"It really says something about the mayor, the city and the community for a Fortune 500 company to move into an area like this," says David Paulson, administrator of the zone and project director of Park Circle for the Baltimore Economic Development Corp. [BEDCO].

The Control Data center represents a $3.5-million investment in Park Circle. The company also has constructed a shell building behind the center using a $1.5-million Maryland Industrial Land Act (MILA) loan.

Paulson says this is prime example of what the city would like to see moving into its enterprise zones. Of all of the employees hired in the facility, 65 percent of them qualified for the Comprehensive Employment Training Act (CETA) and 85 percent of them live in or around the zone.

But there is still a long way to go to fill up the rest of the industrial park, and Paulson says he has some fish on the line that could fill up the vacant lots very quickly.

According to his annual report to the state, one company on the hook is Gill Co., a distributor of commercial stainless-steel kitchen equipment.

The company now is located in Beltsville and Greenbelt, but contacted BEDCO when it heard of the enterprise zone. On behalf of the company, the city applied to the state for a $150,000 MILA loan.

Gill could create 59 jobs in Park Circle, 51 of which would be new. Paulson's report says the commitment represents a total investment of $1.5 million.

Another company looking at the area is Earth Engineering Sciences. It is proposing to develop 5,000 square feet of office space on a one-acre site. It now is renting space in Baltimore City and employs 40 people.

The move would create 10 to 20 new jobs with a total investment of $200,000. If all goes well, construction could start there this spring.

There is also hope for The Palladium, a catering facility that is the brainchild of two local minority businessmen. The facility would contain about 30,000 square feet on a six-acre site on Druid Park Drive and Liberty Heights Avenue.

The estimated price tag is $1.8 million, and the project would create 60 new jobs.

BEDCO also is in negotiations with Mellin Ice Cream Co. to locate its new 50,000-square/foot, $8-million plant in the zone. And two developers have expressed interest in building a 50,000-square-foot speculative industrial building there.

According to the annual report, "both developers feel that the availability of the zone benefits is the key to the implementation of their plans."

Paulson says that, even though there isn't much to see there now, development for the area is right on schedule.

"I think if you look at Park Circle, this is really the first season that we've had a truly marketable commodity," he says. "We've done all of our acquisitions, all of our public improvements, all of our relocating.

"When talking about a place like Park Circle, it is hard to visualize what it will look like for businesses considering moving in."

He says if these new businesses should decide to move in it would create "sizable local employment."

But now the city's attention to enterprise zones will have to be divided. In December, the 400-acre West Baltimore enterprise zone was certified. And according to Paulson, it's a completely different animal.

Where as Park Circle has the wide open space for big companies to come in with lots of construction, West Baltimore is a collection of empty store fronts and small buildings.

Paulson says that area will be developed for mixed uses creating an opportunity for developing new businesses and giving small companies a place to grow.

Even though the zone has only been around for three months and the city hasn't had a chance to really push the project, one company already has staked a claim in the zone.

The president of Nautical and Aviation Inc. called Paulson the same week the area was designated, saying he wanted a permanent home for his company and wanted to be located in an enterprise zone.

Paulson says he wasted no time in matching a site up with the company's needs. The move will create 10-to-12 new jobs for the area.

But now the biggest task before Paulson and the city is marketing these new zones—letting companies know they are there and what the city and state can do for them if they choose to locate in one of them.

The first major undertaking along these lines is a seminar being planned by BEDCO for sometime in the next two months. Businesses from all over will be invited to meet with officials from the city and state to explain just what lies ahead for these zones.●

SOUTH AFRICA SHOULD IMMEDIATELY RELEASE MARIENTAL PRISONERS

HON. WILLIAM H. GRAY III

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. GRAY. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation which condemns the recent actions of the Government of South Africa which terminated an American-sponsored court suit seeking the release of prisoners captured during the 1978 raid on the Cassinga refugee settlement located some 150 miles within the Angolan border. During that raid the South African military forces killed over 600 Namibian refugees, many of whom were women and children, and further forcibly abducted more than 100 refugees from Angola and took them to a military internment camp near Mariental, 175 miles south of Windhoek, the Namibian capital.

South Africa initially denied the existence of the detainees, but as the result of international pressure, finally conceded it was holding survivors of the raid on Cassinga. Although recently the International Committee of the Red Cross and certain relatives were allowed restricted visits, for several years no relatives or legal representatives were permitted to leave the camp.

An urgent application was filed by the Namibian law firm of Lorentz and Bone on March 5, 1984 in the Supreme Court of Namibia—South West Africa. The application, which was in the nature of a writ of habeas corpus charged the captives were "unlawfully seized by the South African Defence Forces outside the territory of South West Africa across an international frontier in the sovereign state of Angola . . . that such seizure was ultra vires the functions and powers of the South African Defence Forces . . . and contrary to international law and to the laws of Namibia."

No charges have ever been brought against the captives. There are reports that the detainees have been tortured, physically multilated and subjected to harsh conditons and hard labor.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in this appeal to the South African Government to release the Mariental detainees and further to abide by the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and the Geneva Conventions of 1949.●

MEXICO COMMEMORATING EL CINCO DE MAYO DAY

HON. RONALD D. COLEMAN

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. Mr. Speaker, today I would like to convey to our neighbors in Mexico the best wishes of this body as they prepare to commemorate an important date in their history—el Cinco de Mayo.

On May 5, 1862, the ill-equipped Mexico forces successfully held off the invading French troops, at Puebla, Mexico. This decisive battle demonstrated the courage and strength of Mexico's desire for freedom and self-determination. This quest intensified during the French occupation, and almost 5 years to the day after the victory, Mexico defeated Maximillian and expelled the French. The Mexican spirit—committed toward maintaining its national sovereignty and dignity—had triumphed. Benito Juarez, the Mexican patriot who orchestrated the French defeat, captured this spirit in the words "* * * among individuals as among nations the respect for the rights of others in peace."

Today, the city that served as Benito Juarez' headquarters during the French occupation bears his name. Many of my constituents in West Texas join their neighbors in Ciudad Juarez, Chihuahua in celebrating this holiday. I am proud to say that interwoven in the culture which bonds citizens on both sides of the border is the spirit which holds democracy and independence as a way of life for free people.●

SOUTH AFRICA'S WITHDRAWAL OF NAMIBIAN COURT'S JURISDICTION

HON. TED WEISS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, the Government of South Africa took action last Friday that flaunts the rule of law and destroys any faith that Pretoria subscribes to the concept of an independent judiciary.

South African Minister of Justice Kobie Coetsee withdrew the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of Namibia from a case brought on behalf of a group of Namibians and Angolans who have been unlawfully imprisoned by South African military forces for the past 6 years.

These prisoners are survivors of a 1978 South African military attack in which at least 600 persons were killed at the Cassinga refugee camp in Angola. These survivors have been denied access to friends and relatives and allegedly subjected to extreme hardships, physical mutilation and torture. They have never been charged with any offense nor brought to trial.

The Government of South Africa says it is acting under a security regulation that allows the detention of individuals who pose a threat to the nation's security. It says it rescinded the court's jurisdiction under a provision of its national defense law that protects the nation from terrorism.

No evidence that these refugees threatened South Africa's security has ever been presented. But in any case, they are entitled due process under the law and other internationally accepted human rights.

The Reagan administration has asserted that the rule of law is a "precious inheritance" in South Africa. But any civilized society which honors the rule of law would allow the refugees to be charged and tried in a court of law.

Namibian church leaders and friends and relatives of the detainees filed an urgent application in March 1984 in the Namibian Supreme Court charging that at least 100 survivors of the attack are still being held illegally at Mariental, 160 miles south of the Namibian capital of Windhoek.

Within the past few days, the outcry over the cancellation of court jurisdiction over the case has elicited an announcement by the Administrator General of Southwest Africa that 54 detainees will be released gradually from time to time.

I fear that this announcement is merely a means of assuaging the public outrage and may result in no action at all. The announcement raises critical questions: Are the individuals on whose behalf the application was filed among the 54 mentioned in the announcement? What will happen to the remaining detainees? Do the words "gradually" and "from time to time" imply weeks or months or even years?

In my view, the rescission of the Supreme Court's authority over this case underscores the irrationality and illegality of South African rule over Namibia and calls into question the claims that the Reagan administration's policy of "constructive engagement" is helping to achieve progress in solving the overwhelming problems of the region.

It is imperative that we continue to closely monitor this tragic situation and to exert pressure on the Government of South Africa until freedom is granted to every one of the detainees.

Today my distinguished colleague from Pennsylvania, WILLIAM GRAY, is introducing a resolution calling on South Africa to quickly release all the Mariental detainees and to comply with the U.N. Charter, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the Geneva Conventions of 1949 concerning both prisoners of war and civilians in war. Further, it calls on the United States to reaffirm and continue its policy of not recognizing South Africa's illegal occupation of Namibia. I call on my colleagues to cosponsor and support this resolution.●

PRESIDENT'S CRIME PACKAGE

HON. GEORGE W. GEKAS

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, I am today introducing two bills which represent portions of the President's Crime Package upon which the Criminal Justice Subcommittee has been conducting hearings during the past several weeks. The first bill deals with bank fraud and bribery and the second with assault against Federal officials.

My legislation addressing bank fraud and bribery is exactly the same as that passed by the Senate earlier this year as a part of S. 1762 and differs from H.R. 5405 (Conyers) in several respects with the administration feels significant. I feel that the subcommittee should have before it the two alternatives in order to facilitate the sharpest delineation of the issues.

The legislation dealing with assault against Federal officials is the same as that passed by the Senate as a part of S. 1762 with additional language which applies protection to former Presidents and their families, the lack of which is a clear anomaly from current law. This bill differs more markedly from H.R. 5150 (Conyers) than my bank bribery legislation does from H.R. 5405. For this reason, I think it essential that the subcommittee consider its approach contrasted to H.R. 5150.

For example, the legislation I am proposing to protect Federal officials does not contain the burdensome proof of a specific intent which the Conyers bill places upon prosecutors using (18 U.S.C. 111), the general obstruction provision protecting many Federal officials. The policy behind the revision of (18 U.S.C. 111) wrought by the Conyers bill appears to overrule the 7 to 2 decision of the U.S. v. Feola 420 U.S. 671 (1975), and I do not feel that this is the correct way to protect Federal officials.●

OPPOSE FURTHER STUDY OF METRIC CONVERSION

HON. DANIEL B. CRANE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. DANIEL B. CRANE. Mr. Speaker and my colleagues, I rise in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arizona, to delete the $500,000 for the study of metric conversion. The bill before us today authorizes half a million dollars to appoint a panel to study metric conversion in this country and report back to Congress 2 years from now.

This Congress is facing a $200 billion deficit and recently passed legislation to raise taxes to make a downpayment on this deficit. It is inconceivable to me that we can seriously consider throwing a half a million to study a system opposed by the vast majority of Americans.

We have had a Metric Board since 1975, when we passed the Metric Conversion Act. The policy intent of the Congress is based on the principle of voluntary participation. The Board has spent millions of dollars in taxpayers' money and done no more than confirm the fact that this whole issue is best left to the private sector.

What difference does it make if other countries use it and we don't? Are we to follow like sheep? I suggest to you that both our science and health communities know how to convert and have been doing it for years. No additional study is going to change this. Furthermore, this country leads the world in buying and selling products in international trade. This does not indicate to me that we are at a disadvantage because of our system of measurement. I find the argument that our trade suffers because of our system totally without support. It appears clear to me that if it is in the interest of a particular business to convert, that business will do so.

In 1978, the General Accounting Office completed a thorough objective study and found that very little benefit would be achieved at a cost of billions of dollars. What has changed that now requires us to spend half a million tax dollars on another study? I believe we should strike the funding for this study and leave the decision whether to convert or not, to the private sector where it belongs. I cannot justify to my constituents the expenditure of an additional half a million of their tax dollars to further study conversion to a system which was always intended to be purely voluntary. Therefore, I urge my colleagues to support the amendment of the gentleman from Arizona.●

WELCOME TO WASHINGTON DURFEE HIGH SCHOOL BAND

HON. BARNEY FRANK

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, I am proud today to bring to the attention of my colleagues the performance in Washington of the Durfee High School marching band. The 150 students who traveled from Fall River, Mass. played a wide variety of musicial compositions for the crowd of guests and passersby who gathered on the east front steps of the Capitol. It was a pleasurable performance in keeping with Durfee High's long tradition of excellence and long history of contributing their talents for the benefit of the community in Fall River, and in Washington as well.

Mr. Speaker, I commend the Durfee High School marching band for their excellent show on the Capitol steps today. The band represents the exemplary tradition of high school marching bands that contribute their musical talents and bring enjoyment to us all when they play.

I look forward to Durfee High School's ongoing contribution to the Fall River community. We can be proud of their accomplishments and their contributions today.●

FOOD AID TO AFRICA

HON. GUY V. MOLINARI

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. MOLINARI. Mr. Speaker, in early March, the House of Representatives overwhelmingly approved a $150 million supplemental appropriation for emergency food aid in response to the drought in Africa. Unfortunately, that legislation was later stalled in the Senate, but we were able to pass a $90 million supplemental which was attached to another piece of legislation.

That supplemental was passed by the House and Senate on March 27, 1984. In a little more than a month, I am pleased to report that $63 million of aid has already been approved, amounting to 177,000 tons of food aid. I would like to share with my colleagues where these funds will be used in the days ahead:

	Amount
Senegal	$13,200,000
Zimbabwe	10,967,000
Upper Volta	9,500,000
Somalia	7,300,000
Mali	7,300,000
Gambia	4,000,000
Guinea-Bissau	3,400,000
Zambia	3,300,000
Chad	2,700,000
Benin	850,000
Madagascar	300,000
Mozambique	200,000

In addition, it is expected that the remaining funds will be approved by the end of this month, allowing for fiscal year 1985 processing to begin shortly thereafter, as scheduled.

I believe that the expediency of AID in approving this amount of aid demonstrates once again the commitment of the United States in answering the call for help which has arisen from the continent of Africa. It also confirms the urgency of the situation and the fact that this Congress took the right and necessary action in approving the $90 million of emergency food aid.●

GROUND THE MX

HON. MEL LEVINE

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. LEVINE of California. Mr. Speaker, I wish to share with my colleagues the following editorial, recently published by the Los Angeles Times, urging that production of the MX missile be halted.

GROUND THE MX

The Congressional Budget Office estimates that a U.S.-Soviet agreement on the Reagan Administration's "build-down" proposal for strategic arms reduction would save American taxpayers $30 billion between now and the end of this century. Congress could save $14 billion over the next five years merely by refusing to vote funds for further production of the MX missile.

These numbers should be kept in mind as the people's elected representatives wrestle with the problem of how to reduce the massive federal budget deficit—an enterprise that is essential to the nation's economic health.

President Reagan's budget for fiscal 1985, beginning next Oct. 1, called for $305 billion in defense spending authority—an increase of about 13% in inflation-adjusted dollars over the military budget for the current year. President has since said that he would accept a cut of $57 billion spread over three years, a concession that would still allow a 7% increase after inflation in defense spending next year. Many members of Congress in both parties assume that the final figure will be less.

The question, then, is not whether the defense budget will be cut but how.

The temptation, as usual, is to take a big bite out of funds for training, maintenance and the building of adequate inventories of ammunition and spare parts instead of making the hard decisions to reduce or eliminate entire weapons systems. That is folly.

As a ranking admiral said the other day, "If I have to, I can make do with fewer ships. But it is imperative that the forces I have be combat-ready."

The Army, Navy and Air Force each has weapons systems whose cost-effectiveness is open to challenge. But it would be difficult to find a better candidate for elimination than the MX missile.

As things stand, the Administration plans to deploy 100 MXs—big missiles that would carry 10 warheads each—beginning in late 1986. Congress last year approved production of 21 MXs; flight-testing of prototypes has already begun. The Pentagon wants to buy 40 more in fiscal 1985 and the remainder the following year.

At the same time, however, the Administration has officially embraced the "build-down" approach to strategic missile negotiations in response to pressures from Capitol Hill. This approach calls for retiring two old land-based strategic warheads for each new warhead deployed. The ratio would be 3-to-2 for warheads mounted on submarine-launched missiles and 1-to-1 for single-warhead missiles.

The very sensible idea is to discourage dependence by either side on multiple-warhead missiles and encourage a transition to less vulnerable—but also less threatening—single-warhead missiles.

Simple arithmetic tells you that the MX is inconsistent with the build-down negotiating proposal. If this country actually deploys 100 MXs, that will use up 1,000 warheads of whatever ceiling is ultimately negotiated. Those same warheads, mounted on the single-warhead Midgetman missile that is now under development, would make far less vulnerable—and therefore less tempting—targets for a surprise Soviet attack.

Indications are that congressional critics, as of now, are inclined toward freezing the MX production rate at 21 per year instead of halting the project altogether. That would be a mistake for both budgetary and military reasons.

The Midgetman itself is an expensive project, but that is all the more reason not to spend money unnecessarily on the MX. Congress should kill the MX and move forward with the development and deployment of the Midgetman.●

WHY A CIVILIAN SPACE PROGRAM?

HON. BOB TRAXLER

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. TRAXLER. Mr. Speaker, the Space Shuttle is a Federal program of which we all can be proud. The Shuttle is living up to its expectations and we now have a routine, dependable transportation system to carry people and payloads into orbit. As the development portion of the Space Shuttle program winds down, it becomes appropriate to consider what this country's next step in space should be.

NASA believes that the next step should be a permanently manned space station, a place, if you will, to shuttle to. President Reagan has endorsed NASA's view and the House of Representatives, in passing the fiscal year 1985 NASA authorization bill, has approved the authorization of a down payment for the space station endeavor.

As a member of the Appropriations Subcommittee that provides funding for NASA programs, I intend to examine the space station proposal carefully, for such a project clearly sets a course for this Nation to follow in the arena of space.

The success of the Space Shuttle and the advent of a permanently manned space station focus our attention upon a basic question: why do we have a civil space program? Why do we concern ourselves with rockets and satellites? My own view is that we have a space program not because of the excitement the program engenders and certainly not because the Russians have one. You have a space program because there are things you can do in space that you can't do on the ground or that you can do far better in space than on the ground. What things? Astronomy, materials research, navigation and communications, and earth observations are all activities that lend themselves to space, and there are others. Space has become simply a place where we do useful things.

Today, we are dependent upon our activities in space for many things. I suspect that in the future, we will become even more so.●

JEWISH IMMIGRATION

HON. RICHARD L. OTTINGER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. OTTINGER. Mr. Speaker, with Soviet Jewish emigration at an all time low and new leadership taking hold in the Soviet Union, it is imperative that we in Congress make clear our continued commitment to Soviet Jews.

The resolution introduced by my colleagues from New York, Ms. FERRARO and Mr. GILMAN reasserts our belief in human freedom, freedom to keep families together and the freedom to practice one's religion without persecution. It is crucial that we send this message to the Soviet leadership, to the people of the Soviet Union, and to the people of this country who have been so supportive of efforts to reverse the tide of Soviet emigration which has fallen dramatically in the last 5 years.

But more disturbing even than the statistics is the anti-Semitic campaign being waged in the Soviet Union. Under an official sanctioned Anti-Zionist Committee, the Soviets have mounted a deliberate campaign to discredit the practice of Judaism, linking zionism with Naziism and telling the world that no more Soviet Jews wish to emigrate. What is more, religious classes have been broken up, ceremonies disrupted and families threatened if they spoke out.

Anatoly Shcharansky, for whom the House unanimously passed my resolution of support last year, still languishes in prison for this efforts on behalf of Soviet Jews. His mother, who has seen him most recently, says he will not live to see the end of his sentence. Mr. Shcharansky is not alone, refuseniks like him who have the courage to stand up for their rights are given harsh sentences on trumped-up charges and made to live in squallid and unsanitary prisons, or perform hard labor far from their families.

Solidarity Sunday for Soviet Jewry is a day of protest and a message of hope from the people of this country to the oppressed Jews of the Soviet Union. On that day with one voice we reaffirm our resolve to see an end to religious persecution. I urge very Member of Congress to vote for this resolution expressing support for the greater New York Conference on Soviet Jewry whose unflagging commitment to the plight of Soviet Jews has done so much for so many families. Let us join them in protesting the drop in Soviet Jewish emigration from 51,320 in 1979 to just 1,314 this year and the systematic denial of religious rights which other faiths in the Soviet Union enjoy. Let us take this opportunity to show the 300,000 Soviet Jews who have applied for emigration that we will not stop fighting for their freedom. I commend this initiative and strongly urge its unanimous passage.●

GORDON SCANLON

HON. JOSEPH G. MINISH

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. MINISH. Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to honor, Mr. Gordon Scanlon, upon his retirement as the deputy police chief of the Montclair, N.J. Police Department.

Gordon joined the Montclair Police Department 38 years ago. Since then, he has worked in all areas of the department and has always served the force with distinction. Throughout his tenure, Gordon provided Montclair with leadership, ability, and integrity on their police force.

Officer Scanlon has served on patrol and traffic, radio, and motorcycle patrol, in the juvenile and detective bureaus and in the administrative office of the department. He is presently in command of the uniform and traffic divisions and in the absence of the chief, has assumed command of the department on occasion since 1965.

Montclairites also remember Gordon as the star center of the 1939 Immaculate Conception High School basketball team. This championship team played in the National Catholic Invitational Tournament in Chicago.

Born and raised in Montclair, Gordon, and his lovely wife, Anne, also raised their three children there. Now Gordon and Anne are looking forward to starting a new life in Florida and I am pleased to send them my best wishes. Gordon's ability and professionalism in his job has set a standard for future police officers to attain.●

DALTON CHESS TEAM PLACES SECOND IN NATIONAL TOURNAMENT

HON. BILL GREEN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues the outstanding achievement of the Dalton School chess team, representing the Dalton School—a private school within the district I represent. In the recent national primary school chess championship tournament, held in Syracuse, N.Y., the Dalton team missed winning first place by only half a point.

This in itself is an extraordinary victory, and is made especially worthy of our attention by the fact that the Dalton chess team has been playing for only 6 months; this year's participation in the national tournament is the team's first.

Under the direction of Coach Svetozar Jovanovic, 8 of the 10 students who competed placed in the top 40 of all those who played. I think the names and rankings of those who played are worthy of mention: Naomi Spiro (3), Josh Powe (18), Nicky Silvers (20), Spencer Rascoff (21), David Arnett (24), Morgan Pehme (31), Jyoti Lall (32), and Paul Kaplan (40); Giorgio Handman and Gordana Spiro also participated in these games.

In this Chamber, where our debates are often long and dry, and where our moves rarely appear as elegant and deliberate as those moves made by a chess player, it is a pleasure for me to devote these few minutes to the victories of those on the Dalton chess team.●

ECONOMIC CONTRIBUTIONS IN MISSISSIPPI

HON. WEBB FRANKLIN

OF MISSISSIPPI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. FRANKLIN. Mr. Speaker, every year, the Mississippi Department of Economic Development recognizes and honors the economic contributions of one industry in each of Mississippi's five congressional districts. This year's award winner in my district is Delta Catfish Processors, Inc. of Indianola, Miss., and I think few industries could have had such a tremendous impact on an area's economy in such a short time.

Delta Catfish Processors, Inc. is a relatively new business. It opened in 1981, employed 200 people after only 1 year of operation, and added over 100 more workers by the end of 1982. In 1983, the plant added an additional 275 new jobs and $7 million in new capital.

I think there are several lessons that can be learned from this economic success story.

First and foremost, this illustrates what private enterprise can do when given a healthy and recovering economy. These represent permanent jobs. They are not dependent upon Government funding, and they are not going to go away. Delta Processors is one of numerous Mississippi companies which has been allowed to prosper now that we have reasonable interest rates, and now that the level of inflation has been brought under control.

Second, this points out the phenomenal growth of the farm-raised catfish industry. The farming of catfish is relatively new, but there are tremendous growth opportunities for the catfish industry. Farmers in my district produce over 200 million pounds each year, and the demand is growing each year.

Finally, Delta Catfish is a prime example of what can be accomplished when the entire process from growing to marketing takes place in Mississippi. For years, Mississippi farmers have produced agricultural commodites which are second to none, and we are seeing a growing recognition of the economic benefits that can result when those commodities are processed inside the State. Mississippi has no shortage of honest, hard-working citizens, and I am pleased that this industry had done so much to help put our people to work.

Delta Catfish was conceived, founded, and is owned by Mississippians. Sam Hinote and his colleagues there have reason to be proud of what they have accomplished.●

POLISH CONSTITUTION DAY

HON. WILLIAM O. LIPINSKI

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. LIPINSKI. Mr. Speaker, It gives me great pleasure to join in celebrating the 193d anniversary of the signing of the May 3 Polish Constitution. It is an occasion when the people of Poland, and those of Polish heritage, can renew and reflect upon the principles of freedom, justice, equality, and liberty.

This day commemorates the special moment in history when Poland established itself as a free and sovereign nation. The May 3 Constitution, modeled after the Constitution of the United States, serves as an important reminder that freedom and liberty served as a founding principal for the Polish people. The authors of the Polish Constitution were greatly influenced by the American document, and the similarities abound. It appears remarkable that the two nations, different in so many ways, could have such similar important documents. However, it is clear that our nations share so much in the areas of desire for freedom, liberty, justice, and equality.

The history of Poland, and its people, has shown tremendous personal courage under the most adverse of situations. This courage remains strong today, despite the present tyranny inflicted upon its people by the Communist government. There remains an indelible determination to fight for the principles established in the May 3 Constitution. This determination was again shown by Nobel Prize winner Lech Walesa, while risking personal safety, participated in a May Day march that was to exclude such freedom fighters. I have no doubts that through nearly two centuries, the ideals embodies in the May 3 Constitution remain strong with the people of Poland.

Polish Americans have an important obligation this May 3, to speak out in support of a free and independent Poland. Our voices must be heard since the brothers and sisters of Poland have their words muffled under the repressive Communist regime. Many people of the Fifth Congressional District join me in rememberance of the May 3 Polish Constitution that sought freedom and hope for the people of Poland. I believe that one day soon the realization of that goal can occur and pledge to continue efforts toward achieving that goal.●

HONORING THE VIETNAM UNKNOWN SOLDIER

HON. WILLIAM F. GOODLING

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 3, 1984

● Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, this morning, the House took action which in my belief has been long overdue and which I fully support: I am speaking of the passage of H.R. 5515 to authorize the President to award the Medal of Honor to that unknown American soldier who died in the Vietnam conflict and is to be interred at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier at Arlington National Cemetery, and also of the passage of House Concurrent Resolution 296 to allow that same unknown soldier to lie in state in the Capitol rotunda. These two bills passed under unanimous consent this morning to the great honor of this legislative body. The interment of an unknown soldier from the Vietnam conflict is something that I have long fought for, and am now pleased to witness.

Almost 4 years ago, one of my constituents, Mike Wherley, a former Green Beret and Vietnam vet, brought to my attention that fact that there was nothing to commemorate an unknown soldier from the Vietnam conflict at the Tomb of the Unknown at Arlington National Cemetery. There was nothing at the tomb to indicate that an Unknown from the Vietnam conflict would ever be interred, or that Congress had enacted Public Law 93-43 to allow for the interment of an unknown from Vietnam. In the amphitheatre at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier there was, however, a plaque honoring all those Americans who had served in Southeast Asia during the Vietnam conflict, which my dear colleague HENRY HYDE of Illinois worked to get installed. But this was the only evidence of our involvement in Vietnam, and as Mike Wherley pointed out to me, whenever there is a ceremony, such as the changing of the guard at the Tomb or the laying of a wreath, everyone is facing the Tomb with their backs to the amphitheatre and the plaque honoring veterans of the Vietnam conflict.

At Mike's instigation, I began to agitate for the interment of a Vietnam Unknown Soldier. There were many obstacles along the way, and many meetings with DOD officials both in the Pentagon and in my office. Verbal promises and assurances were bandied about and I even introduced two concurrent resolutions to help the effort along. Last year, we met with some measure of success when the Department of Defense installed two outside plaques at the Tomb, commemorating those who served in Vietnam and explaining that Public Law 93-43 authorized the interment of an Unknown from Vietnam. Now the provisions of Public Law 93-43 will at last be fulfilled.

Veterans of the Vietnam conflict have long suffered injustices; recognition of their brave and heroic efforts was long in coming. The interment of an Unknown Soldier from this conflict recognizes the sacrifices that our Nation's fine young men made in Southeast Asia. This recognition is fully merited and long overdue. And while this interment will honor all those who served in Vietnam, we must not think that it represents the end of that era: there are still far too many unaccounted for. We must not forget, and must not rest in our efforts to get a full accounting for those who are still missing because until such a time the Vietnam conflict will not be truly ended.●

(Legislative day of Monday, April 30, 1984)

The Senate met at 9:30 and 3 seconds a.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the President pro tempore (Mr. THURMOND).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will stand in recess until the hour of 10 a.m. on Tuesday next.

RECESS UNTIL 10 A.M., TUESDAY, MAY 8, 1984

Thereupon, at 9:30 and 10 seconds a.m., the Senate recessed, under the order of Thursday, May 3, 1984, until Tuesday, May 8, 1984, at 10 a.m.

● This "bullet" symbol identifies statements or insertions which are not spoken by the Member on the floor.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Monday, May 7, 1984

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The SPEAKER. Today we have a guest chaplain, the former Chaplain of the House so beloved by all of us, former Chaplain, Rev. Dr. Edward G. Latch.

Rev. Edward G. Latch, D.D., former Chaplain of the House of Representatives, offered the following prayer:

Teach us to do Thy will, for Thou art our God: Thy spirit is good; lead us into the land of uprightness.—Psalm 143: 10.

O God, our Father, in whose presence our spirits are renewed, our minds restored to clear thinking, and our hearts receive the warmth of Thy love at the beginning of a new day we pause in silence before Thee. Incline our souls to seek wisdom and truth and mercy at Thy hands. Reveal to us the way we should go, the decisions we should make, the plans we should follow and may all our work be based upon intelligent conviction and dynamic faith.

Bless our President, our Speaker, these Representatives of our people and all who work with them and for them under the dome of this glorious Capitol. Make this building a center of good will and may a passion for the right and the true keep us dedicated to our beloved land. Bless the former Members of this body who are with us this day. May their presence warm our hearts. Lead us all in the ways of unity and good will. For Thy name's sake. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

COMMUNICATION FROM THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the Clerk of the House of Representatives:

WASHINGTON, DC, May 4, 1984.

Hon. THOMAS P. O'NEILL, Jr.,
The Speaker, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: Pursuant to the permission granted in Clause 5, Rule III of the Rules of the U.S. House of Representatives, the Clerk received at 10:30 a.m. on Friday, May 4, 1984, the following messages from the Secretary of the Senate:

(1) That the Senate passed H.R. 4176;

(2) That the Senate passed H.J. Res. 537; and

(3) That the Senate agreed to the conference report to the bill S. 64.

With kind regards, I am,

Sincerely,

BENJAMIN J. GUTHRIE,
Clerk, House of Representatives.

RECESS

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the order of the House of Representatives of April 26, 1984, the House will stand in recess subject to the call of the Chair to receive the former Members of Congress.

Accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 4 minutes p.m.), the House stood in recess subject to the the call of the Chair.

RECEPTION OF FORMER MEMBERS OF CONGRESS

The Speaker of the House presided.

The SPEAKER. On behalf of the Chair and the Chamber, I consider it a high honor and distinct personal privilege to have the opportunity of welcoming so many of our former Members and colleagues as may be present here on this occasion. We all pause to welcome them.

This is a bipartisan affair, and in that spirit the Chair is going to recognize the floor leaders of both parties.

The Clerk will now call the roll of the former Members of Congress.

The Clerk called the roll of former Members of the Congress, and the following former Members answered to their names:

The SPEAKER. A quorum having been established, the House at this time will recognize the majority leader, the gentleman from Texas, Mr. JIM WRIGHT.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I thank you for saying on behalf of all of us, to our former colleagues and our always friends, a very hearty welcome back to this Chamber. Here in this Hall we have shared many common experiences, we have thrilled to many common successes. Sometimes those among us here today have been on opposite sides, but here we have learned as in no other forum that one can disagree without being disagreeable.

We have enjoyed those things that unite us far beyond that artificial boundary that separates our two parties. The camaraderie that has developed here in this Chamber, the traditions of civility, or courtesy, or mutuality, or respect, are traditions that I think have been the glue and the cement which have held together the Union.

So as I look out among you, I am always impressed, and whenever I meet any one of you, impressed with how relaxed you appear to be, and almost envious.

We welcome you back. We are delighted to renew old acquaintances. I see among you people who have been my mentors and my inspiration, chairmen of committees on which I have served, people who have been to us great leaders, and we are just simply enjoying more than we can properly express to you the opportunity to say hello to all of you again.

Keep coming back. Some of us will be joining you in this association.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the Republican whip, the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. TRENT LOTT.

Mr. LOTT. I thank the Speaker.

I hope my colleagues will not mind my speaking from this microphone, but there are very good reasons for it. First, the whip emeritus has the other microphone that I might speak from. We are glad to see the gentleman from Illinois here again. And it is a great honor and privilege for us to yield our position in the well to the distinguished gentleman from New York, Mr. Javits. So with your permission, I will speak from this position.

Mr. Speaker, this is the second year in a row I have had the honor of standing in for our distinguished Republican leader, BOB MICHEL, as we honor former Members.

I guess this makes me the first official designated greeter in the history of the House.

But I am glad to once more have this chance to greet good friends and former colleagues.

It occurs to me that this distinction between current and former Members is an artificial one.

After all, what is a current Member, but a former Member waiting to happen?

Thinking of things in that way helps to put matters in proper perspective.

I know I speak for all our Members when I say yours is a praiseworthy and admirable group. Belonging to it must be quite an honor.

But in this election year, I am reminded of the prayer of the young man who was troubled by temptations of the flesh.

"Lord," he prayed, "make me good—but not just right now."

And that, I guess is our prayer as present sitting Members of the House: make me a Member of this illustrious group—but not this year, please.

In preparing for these remarks, I read what I had said last year. And I noted I had mentioned our friend and former colleague, Walter Flowers. His untimely death since then leaves us all with a feeling of sadness.

His passing reminds us of the richness of experience, the vast resources of knowledge, the unparalleled collection of legislative skills your group represents.

It is sad to lose any of these.

So it is good for the Congress and good for the country that you are willing to share all of this with us. It is good to know that once a year we renew our acquaintances, remember old times and, most important, refresh our institutional memory.

Speaking for myself, each time I meet with you, I get a clearer picture of the continuity and sense of tradition that characterizes this House.

As I suggested, there are no dividing lines around here—present and former Members all belong to the same legislative family.

We all revere Members who did so much for America before we came here.

And we all look forward to helping our country, whether we are a present or former Member. There is no statute of limitations on patriotism—or ability.

And so, whether we look backward in nostalgia or forward in hope, present and former Members are united in loving this country.

Partisanship fades away when the essential things are at stake. It is good to see so many of our legislative family here, united by love of country instead of divided by party labels. We can all learn something from this.

So, once again, it is an honor for this "designated greeter" to say: Welcome back—it is good to be together at this annual family reunion.

The SPEAKER. The other evening I by chance ran into Tom Kleppe, a former Member of the Congress, and Tom said, "I remember the day I walked up to you, TIP, and introduced myself. I said, 'I am Tom Kleppe of Dakota. I am a Republican.' We mutually shook hands and you said, 'In the House, in Congress, there are two groups, the good fellows and the other fellows. Tom, that is the way we divide them. We don't divide them by a middle aisle.' "

I just came back from visiting five countries in Europe and Africa, and it is very interesting that as you meet the leaders, the majority will be in one section of the room and the minority in the other section, and they hardly speak to each other. They do not understand how SIL CONTE and his wife can be so friendly with Millie and me even though we are on opposite sides of the aisle, or, when we are out traveling, how BOB MICHEL and I can play a game of golf on Saturday, or with Jerry Ford in the past, how we can be so friendly and yet have so many tough political debates along the line.

One of my closest and dearest friends in my 30-odd years in the Congress of the United States is a gentleman who came in with me. We had many an argument and many a great debate. We were always the closest of friends, and still are. For many years he had his eye on my seat.

Well, the interesting fact is that I have to go to a press conference now, and I would be delighted if that gentleman would step forward and be the acting Speaker while I go to the press conference.

John Rhodes, will you please come up here and take the gavel?

After having his eye on this seat for so many years, he now has the opportunity to place something else on it.

Mr. RHODES (presiding). The Chair now recognizes the great former Senator from the State of Utah, Frank Moss.

Mr. MOSS. Mr. Speaker, you seem to fit the Chair very well. I am delighted, of course, to be here with all of our Members and prospective Members of the Former Members of Congress.

Mr. Speaker, it is a moving experience for all of us to be back in the Capitol where we have spent so much time and where so much of importance to our Nation's history, and the welfare of our people, has occurred. We are deeply honored that you and all the Members who are on the floor this morning are sharing this occasion with us. We are grateful to you and Congressman MICHEL, the minority leader, for making this visit possible, to make our annual report to Congress as required by our Federal charter. As you well know, Mr. Speaker, the U.S. Association of Former Members of Congress is a bipartisan, nonprofit, educational, research, and social organization. Called together 14 years ago by our foresighted cofounders, Dr. Walter H. Judd, who is here with us today, and the late Brooks Hays, we have grown to a membership of some 600 strong. Each of us has served in either the U.S. Senate or the House of Representatives, and some have served in both.

When Congress granted a Federal charter to the association it officially approved our purpose which is:

To promote the cause of representative government by improving understanding of the Congress as an institution and of democracy as a system of public life.

Mindful of its responsibilities, the association is impeccably bipartisan, selecting one-half of our board of directors from our Republican members and one-half from our Democratic members. We also balance our officers between the approximately 500 former House Members and the 100 former Senators who form the association.

Our backgrounds are as varied as those of the present Members of Congress. We come from the far-flung places across the country which we represented. Many of us are now active in business, professional, or other pursuits of life, but we continue to have one interest in common: The pursuits of ways to be of service to the working and the spirit of the institutions of a free society. We have discovered that, by working together, we provide a human resource of our Nation that can build on the successes of previous years of service and contribute to the future of our country in a growing number of meaningful ways.

VISITOR HOSTS

For example, I am very happy to announce that, with your encouragement and that of Foreign Policy Committee leaders in the Congress, we are about to expand our association activities to include a liaison service in this country for the members of foreign parliaments and other foreign dignitaries who visit the United States. This service of our association, as combined protocol and surrogate host, is being funded by a 2-year grant of $135,250 from the Ford Foundation. Our association agrees to assure an adequate welcome and appropriate introduction to Congressmen and to executive branch leaders, whom these important visitors wish to see. We intend it also to be a genuine service to the U.S. Congress in assuring that its Members have access to those visitors who are of particular interest to them, whether because of country of origin, subject expertise, or for any other reason.

FELLOWS PROGRAM

I am pleased to report, and I know the Congress will be happy to learn, that our congressional fellows program is growing in scope and content. This program makes available congressional alumni to visit college and university campuses throughout the Nation. Initiated over 6 years ago, the program is being enthusiastically received by students and faculty alike, as evidenced by the reviews that come back to us.

The congressional fellow is selected by each college or university from a register of nearly 300 volunteers of former Members of Congress. Our only restriction—to insure maximum objectivity—is that a fellow will not be sent to a campus in the same State he or she represented in the Congress.

Each fellow spends 3 to 5 days on a campus, talking to students about representative government and how the Congress actually functions.

In most instances he or she is housed on campus and thus is totally identified with the students. Given our reservoir of practical experience and expertise, former members are especially well-qualified to interpret the Congress as an institution. And, freed from the burden of office, we can address issues with detachment and with the advantages of both insight and hindsight.

Former Congresswoman Martha Keys, a colleague from Kansas and a former Assistant Secretary of Education, is the able director of the program. Visits have now been completed to 157 campuses in 48 States, under continuing support from foundations such as the Charles Stewart Mott Foundation. Moreover, with a planning grant from the Carnegie Corp. of New York, we are undertaking a pilot project of having related visits of four different congressional fellows integrated into a single academic course next fall at the Atlanta University Center, five-college consortium. If successful as an academic innovation, this pattern may later be extended to other areas.

INTERNATIONAL FELLOWS

Last year our then president, Charles E. Chamberlain, told you of our initiating an international campus fellows program with a grant from the Ford Foundation which brought two former Parliamentarians—Alan Lee Williams of the United Kingdom and Georg Kahn-Ackermann of the Federal Republic of Germany—to participate in seminars at 11 of our colleges from coast-to-coast.

Since then, former Minister Alastair Gillespie of Canada and Dr. Jacques Soustelle of France have visited nine campuses in our country. During the coming academic year, with support from the Rockefeller Foundation, we will be programing an additional four Parliamentarians from other democracies to meet with American college students, faculty, and townspeople.

Obviously, such distinguished visitors provide a resource heretofore unknown on many of our smaller campuses and contribute to a greater understanding among students, faculty, and local communities of the political, economic, and cultural realities of other countries.

Mr. Speaker, I have here a list of the colleges and universities visited by our U.S. congressional fellows together with the names of the former Members who were fellows at these campuses. I believe it would be of great interest to the Members of Congress, many of whose States and districts are reflected in this list. I ask your kind permission to have it printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks, and to include also some of the comments we have received from these campuses as well as list of the sponsors whose donations have made all of our work possible.

STUDY OF FOREIGN POLICY

Another area of activity in which we are engaged is a study of a subject of great and continuing importance to the safety of our country. It was initiated by our colleague and active association member, former President and former Congressman, Gerald R. Ford, out of his experience at both ends of Pennsylvania Avenue, and it is directed to the subject: "The Presidency, the Executive Branch and the Congress in Foreign Policy." Under the joint sponsorship of our association and the Atlantic Council, 11 leading authorities are now completing papers or chapters on different aspects of the subject which are being critiqued by distinguished leaders of both the executive and legislative branches of our Federal Government, which includes several of the members of our association. We look forward to publication of these papers in a book to be made available at the beginning of 1985.

Also, work has begun on another book, plans for which were reported here last year. This is the comparative study of the functioning of the Bundestag and of the Congress, being conducted under the direction of Dr. R. Gerald Livingston. We hope to publish it in the languages of both countries, as we did with our comparative study of the Japanese Diet and the U.S. Congress. Copies of the Japanese study were made available to the Members of Congress, and so will be the German book. The Bundestag-Congress study is being supported by funding from a variety of sources, including a grant of 98,000 deutschemarks from the German Ministry of Research and Technology as well as support from the U.S. National Endowment for the Humanities.

FOREIGN EXCHANGE VISITS

The calls upon us for international activity are increasing very rapidly, as we receive requests from both governmental and private institutions here and abroad to conduct or help facilitate exchanges. Many of these are in relation to the successor generation legislators and government leaders. The association is becoming a major instrument of transmission of knowledge and democratic values, not only to young people on campuses and elsewhere in our own country, but also to younger legislators and other political leaders around the world.

We are very happy and highly honored to have in the Chamber on this occasion a number of colleagues who have been Members of the Italian Parliament. Also, we have with us a representative of our counterpart association in the Federal Republic of Germany. The number of counterpart associations like ours is growing and the interaction with them is developing very fruitfully. The Italian and German associations are now part of a network of seven such associations in Western Europe, including Austria, Belgium, France, Switzerland, and the United Kingdom. Following visits to Brazil during this past year by Bob Griffin of Michigan, Bill Mailliard of California, Gale McGee of Wyoming, and myself, a Brazilian former parliamentarians association has been formed with several hundred members and is beginning its work from offices in their national congress building. And a resurgent association is now becoming active again in the new Argentine democracy, opens the possibility of an early formation of a Latin-American network of such associations.

Each of our sister associations is developing its program in accordance with its members' perceptions of the needs and opportunities in their own country. However, all are finding, as we have found, that they can have a successful and creative role in establishing links between sitting legislators and other active leaders in the democratic world. We, for example, are hosting, this month, our second major conference in Salzburg, Austria, between a bipartisan delegation of younger Members of the Congress of the United States and a multipartisan delegation of younger members of the German Bundestag. This year's important topic is: "German and American Perceptions of the Soviet Union." Scheduled for the Memorial day weekend, this conference is being supported by the German Marshall Fund of the United States, among others: and will include the participation not only of distinguished sitting Members of the Congress and Bundestag, but also of leading academic, military, and administration experts from both countries.

STUDY TOURS

This week, a study tour by some of our own associstion members, to the United Kingdom will include participation in the dedication of new Grosvenor Gates across from the American Embassy in London erected to commemorate the bicentennial of the Treaty of Paris. We will then attend a meeting in Westminster Hall with members of the British-American Parliamentary group and participate in the first international meeting of the new British association of former members of Parliament. Previous study tours of our association have been made to Australia and New Zealand, to China, to the Middle East and to Western Europe. And plans are now underway for a second study tour to the Soviet Union. All of these study tours are made at the personal expense of the members who go on the tour.

JAPANESE STUDIES

Additionally, we are continuing our programs with our counterparts in Japan. Following a series of successful seminars at the East-West Center in Hawaii, we are preparing for a bilateral conference next February to assess how the United States and Japan are meeting the problems of demographic and social changes associated with what has been called our graying society. Experts in both countries have begun to focus on the implications of ever larger proportions of senior citizens in the industrial countries, and to weigh the social problems inherent in this fact. If we are to handle these problems humanely and constructively, it is important that we share each other's experience and insights. Thanks to the financial support of the Carnegie Corp. Aging Society Project and the Japan-United States Friendship Commission, this process of communication has begun.

TRIBUTE TO DEPARTED MEMBERS

Mr. Speaker, at this moment of celebration of the growths and vigor of our representative institutions and of the continuing role being played by former Members of Congress, it is fitting that we pay tribute to our colleagues who have passed away since our last meeting in this Chamber. They served their country, they enriched the lives of all of us, they will be sorely missed. I sadly call the role:

Lindley Beckworth, Texas;
Reva Beck Bosone, Utah;
John A. Carroll, Colorado;
Frank Church, Idaho;
Joe L. Evins, Tennessee;
Walter Flowers, Alabama;
Aaron Ford, Mississippi;
James P. Geelan, Connecticut;
Robert K. Goodwin, Iowa;
Walter B. Huber, Iowa;
J. Oliva Huot, New Hampshire;
Len B. Jordan, Idaho;
William E. Miller, New York;
Will Rogers, Oklahoma;
Don L. Short, North Dakota;
Anthony F. Tauriello, New York; and Herbert B. Warburton, Delaware.

I know you would like to have a moment of reflection.

Mr. RHODES. May we rise for a moment of silence in memory of our departed colleagues.

(The Members rose for a moment of silence.)

Mr. MOSS. I thank you.

Now I want to talk about distinguished service. I am sure that our departed colleagues would take equal pleasure with us in what is now my happy task of making a very special presentation. Each year our board of directors selects a person who best exemplified the spirit of the Congress and honors that person because he or she has honored our country by distinguished legislative service. We alternate these awards between the parties, and it is testimony to the vitality and genius of our system that each of our parties provides many outstanding persons who have made great contributions to the legislative process.

The selection is often difficult because many are worthy. This year's honoree stands out.

I am personally delighted and we are all honored that the recipient of this year's Distinguished Service Award is with us today. He served in the House of Representatives from 1947 to December 1954, and in the Senate from 1957 to 1981 where I had the opportunity and occasion to admire his patriotism, selflessness, and creativity in the national interest. A brilliant mind, total integrity of purpose, and tenacity of commitment marked the service of Senator Jacob K. Javits of New York in the Congress of the United States. His efforts inspire all of us who know him and are a beacon to those who will follow us.

His devotion to the well-being and safety of his countrymen consumed his energies in the swiftly passing legislative years. His service brought honor to our country.

Today, despite physical limitations, he continues to make a contribution to our national life.

It gives me great honor and pleasure to present our 1984 Distinguished Legislative Service Award to Senator Javits. [Applause.]

I also might explain I have two looseleaf books full of letters to Senator Javits that have been written by his colleagues from the House and from the Senate, and I know he will enjoy reading those. It is going to take you several evenings, Jake. There are quite a few of them there.

I asked Senator Javits if he could not respond briefly from his chair, and I think he will do that.

Mr. RHODES. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York.

Mr. JAVITS. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much, president of the association to which I belong, Ted Moss. My thanks to the Speaker, my thanks to the majority and minority leaders of the House and to the whip on the Republican side who stood in for BOB MICHEL. I think it is a great privilege to sit here.

Thirty years ago was my last appearance in this body, and if veteran status rates awards, I certainly have it, having spent, as Ted has said, 8 years here and 24 in the Senate.

I am very grateful to the association. It brings tears to my eyes to hear the rollcall which is so solemn because so many names are recorded and will be recorded in the history of our country, and then to hear the roll of those that are passed away, some names very surprising to me, with whom I have been associated in my legislative life, and there must be to all of you.

If I may, and I will not be long. In the spirit of this award which I deeply treasure, and my children will, and their children after them, I express great pleasure, satisfaction for my family and myself to the president, Ted Moss, to Glenn Beall, the vice president, and to my dear friend, fellow New Yorker, John Lindsay, who first apprised me of this honor. And I have heard a record of extraordinarily gifted work being done by the association, as is properly called for by the dedication its members have shown to the public service, and by its own desire, as members who are determined, as I am, notwithstanding difficulties, to persevere in their service to what our country still represents to the world in its status as the only nation as yet truly dedicated to freedom and justice, notwithstanding its mistakes.

I have been inspired throughout my career by the accomplishments, the traditions, and the sacrifice represented by what I understand to be something over 10,000 men and women who served our country in this body.

I have always been inspired by three precepts. Lincoln's dictum that a government should do for the people only what they cannot do at all or as well for themselves; and in the division between the Federal Government and the States Nelson Rockefeller's dictum that States rights also means States responsibilities; and my own principle that the Federal Government makes every person a citizen of that Government with rights and responsibilities, and that also it protects the citizen in the exercise of his rights and the discharge of his responsibilities as a citizen of a State.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I have experienced in my own career here what it meant and what were its high points, and it may be helpful to those who now exercise these great responsibilities and of interest to the former Members like yourselves to let me enumerate them very briefly.

In my own career I had two collegiate duties and two legislative successes of significance. Collegiately, I have always been loyal and proud to sustain the authority and to advance the prestige of the House in which I served. I was a man of the House in this Chamber, and I was a Senator, a Senate man for years and years in the Senate. And so I tried to forge, formulize, what were not only solutions for issues in which I was involved but which also served my Senate colleagues in their effort to solve issues in which they were involved.

Second, and very importantly, I was very jealous and very vigilant that the conduct of our Members and their interpretations of their public responsibility brought honor, not disgrace, to the Senate or the House, as the case may be. And I was deeply gratified that JAKE GARN of Utah and MAC MATHIAS of Maryland and PAUL SARBANES of Maryland came to join us this morning.

Finally, of the major legislation in which I was involved, two stood out which I hope will be pursued by those who will follow us. One is the Employees' Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 which protects the private pensions of 60 million American workers. Those pension funds now have resources of $900 billion and it is expected by 1999 and into the next century that those funds will control 50 percent of the voting power in American private business. And thus we may be approaching not only the success of our political democracy, but perhaps of a new economic democracy as well.

And the other piece of legislation which is a sacred trust in the hands of the Congress is the War Powers Resolution of 1973. This for the first time in 200 years legislates the sharing of the awesome power to use force as an instrument of policy between the Congess and the President.

My colleagues, unless the Congress stands up and fights for this power, peace is far more imperiled than it otherwise would be.

This law is a method by which the twilight zone that has allowed Presidents to put us into war may be pierced with some light. We have all served here. Presidents are no greater geniuses than we are. And this power is so awesome that it must be shared. And I hope that the Members of Congress who are there now will not be intimidated by the Presidents who think they know better or know more.

Having served here for 32 years, I can tell you that is baloney. We know as much as they do, or if we do not we can easily find out if we want to work at it. And let us remember that we in the Congress represented and those who are here now represent the people who die and the people who pay.

So let us not be bashful about asserting an equal authority as the Constitution intended.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, my gratitude for this gift, this award, which epitomizes my services, which is very deep to the Nation, equaled only by my gratitude to the people of the State of New York who gave me for so long the opportunity to serve here.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [Applause.]

Mr. RHODES. The gentleman from Utah.

Mr. MOSS. Mr. Speaker, we have witnessed today a demonstration of courage and determination exemplified by our colleague, Jake Javits, and we have partaken again of some of the brilliance of that mind and that tongue that spoke so eloquently in this Chamber and the Chamber on the other side of the Capitol over those years.

We admire you and love you, Jake. Thank you. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, one final pleasure will conclude this 1984 report to the Congress by the U.S. Association of Former Members of Congress. And that is to announce the passing of the mantle of leadership of our association, as is our practice every year. Our president-elect and I served together in the Senate of the United States in friendship and mutual respect despite what I may call our occasional partisan difference.

Senator Glenn Beall of Maryland, who served in both Houses of the Congress will officially take office in July and be our leader for the next 12 months. I can assure him—as he must already know—that he will have the support of all the members of our association, such as John Lindsay, where he sits right now. John Lindsay of New York is chairman of our finance committee and we salute him.

He also, the new incoming president, will have the services of a skilled and devoted staff, including our executive director, Jed Johnson, himself a former Member of Congress. And our faithful secretary manager, Dorothy Bageant.

When it becomes Senator Beall's turn next year to announce the name of the successor to this office, I hope and trust that he will be able to do it with the same affection and confidence with which I now turn to him.

Senator Beall, would you rise? [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, this concludes our annual report to the Congress. We thank you and every Member of both bodies. The welfare of our country and, in a large degree, of the world, is in your hands. We support you in the faithful discharge of your responsibilities.

Mr. Speaker, I yield the floor.

SAMPLE COMMENTS ON 1983 CONGRESSIONAL FELLOWS PROGRAM

"Faculty and students in both the Political Science Department and the Graduate School of Public Policy appreciated his (Henry Reuss) willingness to spend several days participating in our programs, and found his insights and views on current political and economic issues quite interesting. . . . Most of his time was spent speaking to students in public policy or political science classes, ranging from a graduate seminar to various undergraduate classes including a large freshman lecture course. He also met with several advanced doctoral students currently writing dissertations on such topics as bank deregulation and the federal budget process. . . . In sum, the three day visit of a former member of Congress was quite full and very informative for all participants."—Beverly Russell, Associate Dean, Graduate School of Public Policy, University of California, Berkeley, California, March 3, 1983.

"Just a note to say thank you again, and to tell you that Frank Evans' visit to our campus was thoroughly successful. Indeed, it is the best experience our department has ever had with a guest speaker. . . . He was candid, cooperative, accessible, and a very good sport. He did everything we asked of him, and with style and grace."—Carroll R. McKibbin, Department of Political Science, California Polytechnic State University, San Luis Obispo, California, March 9, 1983.

"We have just concluded with our visit from Mr. (Gilbert) Gude and I wanted to report that it all went superbly. . . . Mr. Gude got on quite well with our students and they thoroughly enjoyed meeting him both in and outside of class. . . . It was just a wonderful week. . . . We are glad to have been part of this excellent program."—Robert Thompson, Assistant Professor of Political, Science, Luther College, Decorah, Iowa, March, 21, 1983.

"There was a resoundingly positive reaction on the part of both students and faculty who met with Senator (Frank) Moss. . . . Students found Senator Moss' classroom visits interesting, informative and a valuable experience that enhanced the course subject matter. . . . Faculty members that I have spoken to informally uniformly praised Senator Moss' campus visit. They found him to be not only insightful but also quite gregarious and approachable. I would state that Siena's experience with the program was an unqualified success and we are greatly appreciative of having had the opportunity to participate in it."—Leon Halpert, Department of Political Science, Siena College, Loudonville, New York, April 15, 1983.

"Otis Pike did a wonderful job for us here. I'm afraid we overscheduled him a bit, but he was charming throughout. We all learned a great deal from him, and we thank you very much for the opportunity. I hope we may continue this program in the future."—Loch K. Johnson, Associate Professor, Department of Political Science, The University of Georgia, Athens, Georgia, April 20, 1983.

"An excellent visiting scholar and a wonderful person. Mrs. Bedell is a walking human encyclopedia (respectfully). She has so much knowledge to impart and does a very good job of leading group discussions. Her approach in the seminar induced thought and analysis. . . . To see a teacher-scholar-person in action is quite special. . . . There is no substitute for "seeing" the American political system at its best "in person."—J. Clayton Feavor, Director, Scholar-Leadership, Enrichment Program, The University of Oklahoma, March 28, 1984.

Mr. RHODES (presiding). On behalf of the Members, I would like to thank the distinguished former Senator from Utah for his usually fine job and thank him for the report which he has made.

I personally want to thank the Speaker for doing me the honor of allowing me to occupy this chair on this occasion, when a former colleague for whom I have the greatest personal affection and admiration was honored. And during this time when I see so many faces out here who are dear to me in the past and whose memory I will also cherish.

I particularly want to thank TIP, but I also want to say to him that if he had given me a little more practice when I was a Member of this body I might have been a little more at ease in this chair than I was. He does not do that.

The program is ended. The next item on the program, of course, is luncheon, and I think you all know where and when. The Chair, on behalf of the Speaker, now announces that the House will continue in recess until approximately 1:15 p.m.

Accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 7 minutes p.m.), the House continued in recess until 1 o'clock and 15 minutes p.m.

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker at 1 o'clock and 19 minutes p.m.

CONSENT CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. This is the day for the call of the Consent Calendar. The Clerk will call the first bill on the Consent Calendar.

AMENDING THE CHARTER OF AMVETS

The Clerk called the bill (H.R. 4212) to amend the charter of AMVETS by extending eligibility for membership to individuals who qualify on or after May 8, 1975.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

H.R. 4212

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) section 6 of the Act entitled "An Act to incorporate the AMVETS, American Veterans of World War II", approved July 23, 1947 (36 U.S.C. 67c), is amended by striking out "and before May 8, 1975," and inserting in lieu thereof "and before the membership eligibility termination date,".

(b) Section 6 of such Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "For purposes of this section, the term 'membership eligibility termination date' means whichever of the following dates is the latest:

"(1) the date of the formal termination of World War II between the United States and Germany by a peace treaty between such countries,

"(2) the date of the cessation of the Korean conflict,

"(3) the date of the cessation of the Vietnam conflict, or

"(4) the date of the cessation of any subsequent armed conflict in which Armed Forces of the United States of America are engaged.

The dates under paragraphs (2), (3), and (4) shall be such dates as determined by the Government of the United States."

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That section 6 of the Act entitled "An Act to incorporate the AMVETS, American Veterans of World War II", approved July 23, 1947 (36 U.S.C. 67e), is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 6. Eligibility for membership in AMVETS and the rights and privileges of members shall, except as provided in this Act, be as provided in the constitution and bylaws of the organization, and terms of membership and requirements for holding office within the organization shall not be discriminatory on the basis of race, color, religion, sex or national origin.".

● Mr. SAM B. HALL, JR. Mr. Speaker, the bill amends the Federal charter of AMVETS allowing the organization to establish its membership criteria in its constitution and bylaws. The purpose and intent of the bill is to allow AMVETS to open its ranks of membership to those who have served in military service since May 7, 1975. The bill brings the eligibility requirements language in conformity with standard charter language previously approved by the House and negates the need for future congressional action in establishing AMVETS' membership requirements. In addition, it requires the terms of membership and requirements for holding office in the organization to be nondiscriminatory.

As has been evidenced by recent events involving the U.S. Armed Forces, the traditional distinction between wartime and peacetime military service has been substantially obliterated, entitling many honorably discharged service members to be recognized as members of AMVETS. However, due to the current membership limitations (36 U.S.C. 67e), those veterans are not eligible to join and participate in AMVETS.

The Committee on the Judiciary has concluded that the legislative relief contained in the amended bill is clearly merited. As with all recently granted Federal charters, the organization itself should have the ability to set its membership criteria in its constitution and bylaws. Accordingly, it is recommended that the amended bill be considered favorably.●

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. SAM B. HALL, JR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the Senate bill (S. 2079) to amend the charter of AMVETS by extending eligibility for membership to individuals who qualify on or after May 8, 1975.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

S. 2079

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) section 6 of the Act entitled "An Act to incorporate the AMVETS, American Veterans of World War II", approved July 23, 1947 (36 U.S.C. 67e), is amended by striking out "and before May 8, 1975," and inserting in lieu thereof "and before the membership eligibility termination date,".

(b) Section 6 of such Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "For purposes of this section, the term 'membership eligibility termination date' means whichever of the following dates is the latest:

"(1) the date of the formal termination of World War II between the United States and Germany by a peace treaty between such countries,

"(2) the date of the cessation of the Korean conflict,

"(3) the date of the cessation of the Vietnam conflict, or

"(4) the date of the cessation of any subsequent armed conflict in which Armed Forces of the United States of America are engaged.

The dates under paragraphs (2), (3), and (4) shall be such dates as determined by the Government of the United States.".

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. SAM B. HALL, JR.

Mr. SAM B. HALL, JR. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SAM B. HALL, JR. moves to strike all after the enacting clause of the Senate bill, S. 2079, and to insert in lieu thereof the provisions of H.R. 4212, as passed by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H.R. 4212) was laid on the table.

AUDIT REQUIREMENTS OF THE DISABLED AMERICAN VETERANS

The Clerk called the bill (H.R. 3115) to relieve the General Accounting Office of duplicative audit requirements with respect to the Disabled American Veterans.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

H.R. 3115

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 9 of the Act entitled "An Act to incorporate the Disabled American Veterans of the World War", approved June 17, 1932 (36 U.S.C. 90i), is amended—

(1) by striking out "(a)", and

(2) by striking out subsection (b).

● Mr. SAM B. HALL, JR. Mr. Speaker, the bill (H.R. 3115) would relieve the General Accounting Office of the responsibility to perform a second annual audit of the Disabled American Veterans' financial accounts, which are also audited annually by independent public accountants.

In 1967, Congress amended the Disabled American Veterans' Federal charter mandating that the General Accounting Office conduct an annual audit of the Disabled American Veterans' financial records. The Disabled American Veterans requested the amendment in order to comply with and meet a series of divergent State and municipal statutes and regulations which impacted upon its nationwide fundraising efforts. Since 1967, in addition to the GAO audit, the Disabled American Veterans' accounts have been audited annually by independent public accountants.

The bill is supported by the Disabled American Veterans and the General Accounting Office.

H.R. 3115 is consistent with the GAO recommendation in a report to Congress, dated October 15, 1981. GAO will continue to perform oversight each year by reviewing the Disabled American Veterans' financial statements and auditor's report as it does for all federally chartered organizations.

The committee favorably recommends H.R. 3115 to the House for its consideration.●

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. SAM B. HALL, JR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the Senate bill (S. 1188) to relieve the General Accounting Office of duplicative audit requirements with respect to the Disabled American Veterans.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

S. 1188

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 9 of the Act entitled "An Act to incorporate the Disabled American Veterans of the World War", approved June 17, 1932 (36 U.S.C. 90i), is amended—

(1) by striking out "(a)"; and

(2) by striking out subsection (b).

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H.R. 3115) was laid on the table.

RECOGNIZING THE ARMY AND NAVY UNION OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

The Clerk called the bill (H.R. 2464) to recognize the Army and Navy Union of the United States of America.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

H.R. 2464

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

CHARTER

SECTION 1. The Army and Navy Union of the United States of America, organized and incorporated under the laws of the State of Ohio, is hereby recognized as such and is granted a charter.

POWERS

SEC. 2. The Army and Navy Union of the United States of America (hereinafter referred to as the "corporation") shall have only those powers granted to it through its bylaws and articles of incorporation filed in the State or States in which it is incorporated and subject to the laws of such State or States.

OBJECTS AND PURPOSES OF CORPORATION

SEC. 3. The objects and purposes of the corporation are those provided in its articles of incorporation and shall also be—

(a) to hold true allegiance to the Government of the United States of America and fidelity to its Constitution, laws, and institutions;

(b) to serve our Nation under God in peace as well as in war by fostering the ideals of faith and patriotism, loyalty, justice, and liberty; by inculcating in the hearts of young and old, through precept and practice, the spirit of true Americanism; by participating in civic activities for the good of our country and our community;

(c) to unite in fraternal fellowship those who have served honorably and those who are now serving honorably in the Armed Forces of the United States of America; to protect and advance their civic, social, and economic welfare; to aid them in sickness and distress; to assist in the burial and commemoration of their dead; and to provide help for their widows and orphans; and

(d) to perpetuate the memory of patriotic deeds performed by the defenders of our country.

SERVICE OF PROCESS

SEC. 4. With repect to service of process, the corporation shall comply with the laws of the States in which it is incorporated and those States in which it carries on its activities in furtherance of its corporate purposes.

MEMBERSHIP

SEC. 5. Eligibility for membership in the corporation and the rights and privileges of members shall be as provided in the bylaws of the corporation.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS; COMPOSITION; RESPONSIBILITIES

SEC. 6. The board of directors of the corporation and the responsibilities thereof shall be as provided in the articles of incorporation of the corporation and in conformity with the laws of the State or States in which it is incorporated.

OFFICERS OF CORPORATION

SEC. 7. The officers of the corporation, and the election of such officers shall be as is provided in the articles of incorporation of the corporation and in conformity with the laws of the State or States wherein it is incorporated.

RESTRICTIONS

SEC. 8. (a) No part of the income or assets of the corporation shall insure to any member, officer, or director of the corporation or be distributed to any such person during the life of this charter. Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to prevent the payment of reasonable compensation to the officers of the corporation or reimbursement for actual necessary expenses in amounts approved by the board of directors.

(b) The corporation shall not make any loan to any officer, director, or employee of the corporation.

(c) The corporation and any officer and director of the corporation, acting as such officer or director, shall not contribute to, support or otherwise participate in any political activity or in any manner attempt to influence legislation.

(d) The corporation shall have no power to issue any shares of stock nor to declare or pay any dividends.

(e) The corporation shall not claim congressional approval or Federal Government authority for any of its activities.

(f) The corporation shall retain and maintain its status as a corporation organized and incorporated under the laws of the State of Ohio.

LIABILITY

SEC. 9. The corporation shall be liable for the acts of its officers and agents when acting within the scope of their authority.

BOOKS AND RECORDS; INSPECTION

SEC. 10. The corporation shall keep correct and complete books and records of account and shall keep minutes of any proceeding of the corporation involving any of its members, the board of directors, or any committee having authority under the board of directors. The corporation shall keep at its principal office a record of the names and addresses of all members having the right to vote. All books and records of such corporation may be inspected by any member having the right to vote, or by any agent or attorney of such member, for any proper purpose, at any reasonable time. Nothing in this section shall be construed to contravene any applicable State law.

AUDIT OF FINANCIAL TRANSACTIONS

SEC. 11. The first section of the Act entitled "An Act to provide for audit of accounts of private corporations established under Federal law", approved August 30, 1964 (36 U.S.C. 1101) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(Fifty-eight) Army and Navy Union of the United States of America"

ANNUAL REPORT

SEC. 12. The corporation shall report annually to the Congress concerning the activities of the corporation during the preceding fiscal year. Such annual report shall be submitted at the same time as is the report of the audit required by section 11 of this Act. The report shall not be printed as a public document.

RESERVATION OF RIGHT TO AMEND OR REPEAL CHARTER

SEC. 13. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this Act is expressly reserved to the Congress.

DEFINITION OF "STATE"

SEC. 14. For purposes of this Act, the term "State" includes the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and the territories and possessions of the United States.

TAX-EXEMPT STATUS

SEC. 15. The corporation shall maintain its status as an organization exempt from taxation as provided in the Internal Revenue Code. If the corporation fails to maintain such status, the charter granted hereby shall expire.

TERMINATION

SEC. 16. If the corporation shall fail to comply with any of the restrictions or provisions of this Act the charter granted hereby shall expire.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 6, line 7: Strike "(58)" and insert in lieu thereof "(62)".

The committee amendment was agreed to.

● Mr. SAM B. HALL, JR. Mr. Speaker, this bill, H.R. 2464, will grant a Federal charter to the Army and Navy Union of the United States. The Army and Navy Union is the oldest veterans' organization of its type in the United States. It was founded in 1886. Membership in this organization is not restricted to any specific form, date, branch, place, or nature of military service. The Army and Navy Union has been chartered in the State of Ohio since 1888.

The Army and Navy Union has 8,400 members in 10 States. The union is organized on the State and local level with national officers elected at an annual meeting. The Army and Navy Union is a service organization. Members volunteer to help veterans and their families by assisting with benefit applications, serving in Veterans' Administration hospitals, forming honor guards at funerals, and providing transportation and other assistance to widows and orphans of veterans. The Army and Navy Union has long worked for the establishment of equitable benefits for veterans. It remains a fraternal organization intent on the promotion of patriotism in our society.

This charter is identical in form to charters enacted by the House for other organizations during this Congress.

This charter will not interfere with the operation of State law governing this corporation. It will give the organization no legal standing beyond that which it already has pursuant to the Ohio charter, and specifically requires it to maintain its Ohio charter. This charter further prohibits the Army and Navy Union from claiming the approval of the Federal Government or Congress for any of its activities, and prohibits any lobbying or political activities. The bill subjects the corporation to strict accounting and reporting requirements, prohibits certain corporate practices, and requires that it maintain its tax-exempt status under the Internal Revenue Code.

I urge my colleagues to support this bill to recognize the longstanding service of the Army and Navy Union of the United States.●

● Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I am delighted that the House will today approve H.R. 2464, legislation I introduced to grant a Federal charter to the Army and Navy Union. I want to take this opportunity to express my personal thanks to Administrative Law Subcommittee chairman, SAM HALL, for the expeditious handling of the bill before his subcommittee, and to my chairman, PETER RODINO, for accepting the bill in full committee.

Mr. Speaker, founded in 1886, the Army and Navy Union is the oldest veterans' organization of its type in the United States. It is the only veterans' organization in which membership is not limited to any specific form, date, branch, place, or nature of the military service performed.

Incorporated in Ohio in 1888, the Army and Navy Union is dedicated to the preservation of a free and independent United States, and to providing assistance to veterans and their dependents. Since its earliest days, the Army and Navy Union has worked for the enactment of equitable laws to provide pensions, medical care, and other benefits to veterans.

The Army and Navy Union is headed by a national commander and his staff. The national corps is administered by officers elected at an annual convention. Any member in good standing is eligible to hold any office in the Army and Navy Union. Each member State has its own State department, which administers the operations of the local posts, known as garrisons. Each State department has an annual encampment. Garrisons meet once a month, and garrison members elect their own officers and their delegates to the national encampment and the department encampment.

The Army and Navy Union currently has 8,400 members, with posts in 10 States, including Ohio, New York, Georgia, Indiana, and the District of Columbia. New posts will soon be founded in Pennsylvania and Florida.

Members of the union work on a volunteer basis performing services for veterans and their families. Members of the union serve as burial escorts and ceremonial honor guards at veterans' funerals. They perform charitable work at Veterans' Administration hospitals. Members also assist the families of deceased veterans in adjusting to their loss, by, for example, escorting widows to social security or VA offices and assisting them in obtaining any benefits to which they may be entitled.

The Army and Navy Union has a long and illustrious record of service to veterans and their dependents. Forty-one recipients of the Congressional Medal of Honor, including Eddie Rickenbacker and Douglas MacArthur, have held membership in the Army and Navy Union. Other members include President William McKinley, Supreme Court Justice Harold Burton, and Senator Charles Dick of Ohio.

Mr. Speaker, a Federal charter of the Army and Navy Union will provide this worthy organization with the recognition it deserves, and I am delighted it will be approved today.●

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. This concludes the call of the Consent Calendar.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. SAM B. HALL, JR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the bills just passed on the Consent Calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

PRINTING OF PROCEEDINGS HAD DURING RECESS AND GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. SAM B. HALL, JR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the proceedings had during the recess be printed in the RECORD, and that all Members and former Members who spoke during the recess have the privilege of revising their remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

COMMUNICATION FROM THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the Clerk of the House of Representatives:

WASHINGTON, DC,
May 4, 1984.

Hon. THOMAS P. O'NEILL, Jr.,
The Speaker, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: Pursuant to the permission granted in Clause 5, Rule III of the Rules of the U.S. House of Representatives, I have the honor to transmit sealed envelopes received from The White House at 3:00 p.m. on Friday, May 4, 1984 as follows:

(1) Said to contain a message from the President whereby he transmits the 1983 Annual Report of the Federal Council on the Aging; and

(2) Said to contain a message from the President whereby he transmits a further extension of the fishery agreement between the U.S.A. and Poland.

With kind regards, I am,
Sincerely,

BENJAMIN J. GUTHRIE,
Clerk, House of Representatives.

EXTENSION OF FISHERY AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND POLAND—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 98-215)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

In accordance with the Magnuson Fishery Conservation and Management Act of 1976 (Public Law 94-265; 16 USC 1801), I transmit herewith an exchange of Diplomatic Notes, together with the present agreement, extending the Governing International Fishery Agreement between the United States and Poland, signed at Washington on August 2, 1976, until December 31, 1985. The exchange of notes together with the present agreement constitute a Governing International Fishery Agreement within the requirements of Section 201(c) of the Act.

Several U.S. fishing interests have urged prompt consideration of this agreement. In view of the July 1 expiration date of the current agreement, I urge that the Congress give favorable consideration to this extention at an early date.

RONALD REAGAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 4, 1984.

ANNUAL REPORT FOR 1983 OF FEDERAL COUNCIL ON THE AGING—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The Speaker laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Education and Labor:

To the Congress of the United States:

In accordance with Section 204(f) of the Older Americans Act of 1965, as amended, I hereby transmit the Annual Report for 1983 of the Federal Council on the Aging. The report reflects the Council's views in its role of examining programs serving older Americans.

RONALD REAGAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 4, 1984.

FOOD IRRADIATION

(Mr. MORRISON of Washington asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MORRISON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, today, along with 20 other Members of the Congress, I am introducing a new bill aimed at promoting commercial development and consumer acceptance of food irradiation.

We have a hearing scheduled before one of the subcommittees of the House Committee on Agriculture this Wednesday looking at this new technology as a potential substitute for the use of ethylene dibromide. This new bill builds upon a prior measure introduced last November and new Food and Drug Administration proposed regulations which were published in February.

Food irradiation is an exciting and innovative technique for preserving food commodities that can substitute for fumigants like EDG. It kills insects for quarantine treatment; it extends shelf life of all foods; it kills undesirable organisms like trichinosis in pork; it can facilitate development of new export markets; it could help mitigate world hunger; and it cannot make food radioactive.

My new bill defines radiation as a process, not an additive, but still applies FDA regulations to insure safety. It allows for leasing of source material to the private sector for a charge, with profits coming back to the U.S. Treasury. It also establishes a Joint Operating Commission for Food Irradiation which would coordinate and manage all research and development.

Mr. Speaker, this is an effort to find an appropriate balance, finding the least restrictive environment for developing a new technology while still providing every necessary element of consumer protection.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to clause 5 of rule I, the Chair announces that he will postpone further proceedings today on each motion to suspend the rules on which a recorded vote or the yeas and nays are ordered, or on which the vote is objected to under clause 4 of rule XV.

Such rollcall votes, if postponed, will be taken after the legislative business of Tuesday, May 8, 1984.

FEDERAL RESERVE BANK DIRECTORS ACT OF 1984

Mr. FAUNTROY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 5278) to amend the Federal Reserve Act to increase the number of class C directors of Federal Reserve banks.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

H.R. 5278

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Federal Reserve Bank Directors Act of 1984".

ADDITIONAL DIRECTORS

SEC. 2. (a) The ninth undesignated paragraph of section 4 of the Federal Reserve Act (12 U.S.C. 302 (first undesignated paragraph)) is amended by striking out "nine members" and inserting in lieu thereof "eleven members".

(b) The twelfth undesignated paragraph of section 4 of the Federal Reserve Act (12 U.S.C. 302 (fourth undesignated paragraph)) is amended to read as follows:

"Class C shall consist of five members who shall be designated by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System. They shall be selected to represent the public, without discrimination on the basis of race, creed, color, sex, or national origin. Such directors shall be selected with due but not exclusive consideration for the interests of agriculture, commerce, industry, services, labor, consumers, finance, and thrifts.".

(c) The fifteenth undesignated paragraph of section 4 of the Federal Reserve Act (12 U.S.C. 303 (third undesignated paragraph)) is amended to read as follows:

"No director of class C shall be an officer, director, employee, or stockholder of any member bank. Not more than two directors of class C shall be officers or directors (or the holder of any other similar position), employees, or stockholders of any depository institution (as defined in section 19 of this Act) which is not a member of the Federal Reserve System.".

(d) The twentieth paragraph of section 4 of the Federal Reserve Act (12 U.S.C. 305) is amended—

(1) in the third sentence, by inserting after "experience" the following: ", but shall not be an officer or director (or the holder of any other similar position), employee, or stockholder of any depository institution (as defined in section 19 of this Act),";

(2) in the sixth sentence, by inserting after "class C" the following: "who is not an officer or director (or the holder of any other similar position), employee, or stockholder of any depository institution (as defined in section 19 of this Act)"; and

(3) in the seventh sentence, by striking out "the third class C director" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "the class C director with the longest tenure on the board who is not an officer or director (or the holder of any other similar position), employee, or stockholder of any depository institution (as defined in section 19 of this Act)".

(e) At the first meeting of the full board of directors of each Federal Reserve bank after the date of the enactment of this Act, each such board of directors—

(1) shall designate one of the new class C members authorized pursuant to the amendments made by this Act to a term of office which shall expire two years after the first of January nearest to the date of such meeting; and

(2) shall designate the other class C director authorized pursuant to the amendments made by this Act to a term of office which shall expire three years after such first of January.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SAM B. HALL, JR.). Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from the District of Columbia (Mr. FAUNTROY) will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. PARRIS) will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from the District of Columbia (Mr. FAUNTROY).

Mr. FAUNTROY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise in support of H.R. 5278, the Federal Reserve Directors Act of 1984. This is a simple, noncontroversial bill which enjoys full bipartisan support and which was reported by a voice vote of the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs on April 10, 1984. It is, additionally, supported by the Federal Reserve and the various trade associations which represent institutions affected by the bill.

Simply stated, H.R. 5278 would increase the number of Federal Reserve district bank directors by two additional persons. Specifically, the boards of directors at each of the 12 Federal Reserve banks would increase from 9 to 11 members with an expansion of the current class C membership from 3 to 5. The bill would make no change in the numbers, terms, or responsibilities of the current class A or class B members. The class C category of members, which would be affected by this bill, are appointed by the Board of Governors in Washington to represent the public and specifically, the interest of industry, commerce, agriculture, services, labor, and consumers. The chairmen and deputy chairmen of the reserve banks are also chosen from this class.

The need for this legislation has arisen out of the fact that passage of the Monetary Control Act of 1980 brought savings and loans, savings banks, credit unions, and non-member commercial banks within the purview of the Federal Reserve System through the adoption of universal reserve requirements and the direct provision to them of Federal Reserve services such as check clearing, wire transfers, currency and coin, and access to the discount window. All of these are administered by the reserve banks under the direction of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System in Washington. Without an expansion in the size of the class C directors, there would be few opportunities for these nonmember depository institutions to have any voice in the operations of the Federal Reserve System which now directly affect them. It is expected that the Federal Reserve would normally undertake to appoint at least one class C director at each Federal Reserve bank who would represent nonmember depository institutions.

The bill would also enable the Federal Reserve to fulfill the mandate of the Public Law 95-188, adopted in 1977, which stipulated that members of the boards of directors of the reserve banks should be selected without discrimination on the basis of race, creed, color, sex, or national origin. The intention was to assure greater and more proportionate representation of women and minority groups on the boards of these banks. However, since no changes were made in the number of directors, efforts to broaden representation have been hampered by the limited number of positions available. The second seat created by the bill could therefore go to any person representing the interests of the public as already set forth in the law, that is: agriculture, commerce, industry, services, labor, and consumers, including small business and housing. It is expected that this second seat would generally be used to broaden the social and economic representativeness of the boards. In that connection, your committee also anticipates that increased efforts will be undertaken to appoint women and minorities.

Finally, I would simply note that in keeping with the existing law, persons selected to serve as the chairman or deputy chairman of the Federal Reserve district bank would continue to be barred from holding any interest in a depository institution.

The bill has no cost impact. Total additional exenditures which might be required under this bill by the Federal Reserve System are expected to total less than $100,000. Much of this expenditure would be recovered through the prices charged depository institutions by the Federal Reserve for services such as check clearing, currency and coin transportation, and wire transfers.

Mr. PARRIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the Republican members of the House Committee on Banking, Finance, and Urban Affairs support passage of H.R. 5278, a bill which was reported out of our committee on April 10 of this year with overwhelming bipartisan approval.

We endorse this legislation primarily because its enactment would enhance the opportunities for the appointment to the Federal Reserve district bank boards of additional directors with experience and ties to the thrift industry and other financial institutions that are presently not members of the Federal Reserve System and not represented on these boards. We feel that such representation is appropriate because these thrift and other nonmember financial institutions—particularly State-chartered commercial banks—have become subject to Federal Reserve regulation and reserve requirements under the Monetary Control Act of 1980. It is only reasonable, therefore, to afford them a measure of representation on these Federal district bank boards. I should add that it is most likely that the Federal Reserve System as a whole and its Board of Governors will benefit from the insights and suggestions of these additional directors on the governing bodies of district banks.

We Republicans see still another reason for endorsing the proposed legislation. Public Law 95-188, enacted in 1977, called for selection of bank directors on a nondiscriminatory basis. The addition of the two positions among the class C directors of each of the 12 district banks will speed up the process of including qualified directors drawn from the ranks of women and minorities. The enactment of this legislation, therefore, would further the clear intent of the Congress.

Finally, the bill has the support of those most involved—the thrift industry, commercial bankers, credit unions, and the Federal Reserve. We are not aware of significant reservations by other groups that might be affected by the legislation.

Accordingly, Republicans on the House Banking Committee urge favorable consideration by the full House of this proposed amendment to the Federal Reserve Act.

We have no further requests for time on this measure, Mr. Speaker, and I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FAUNTROY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Texas (Mr. PATMAN), a member of the committee.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, while I join my colleagues on the Banking Committee in supporting H.R. 5278, the Federal Reserve Bank Directors Act of 1984, I still have concerns about the structure of the Federal Reserve Board. The bill has a valuable purpose in increasing the number and adding additionally qualified people as class C directors at each of the 12 Federal Reserve Banks. Regrettably, this Congress is not making much progress in making the Fed accountable in its overall operations.

An article on the front page of the Wall Street Journal today highlights the problem: "What's the Fed Up To? It's Still a Secret." I am worried that the Fed is now planning the next recession for the American people. According to testimony before the Banking Committee, the last recession that the Fed caused cost our country $1 trillion. We need to look at the way the Fed exercises the enormous powers they have and curtail those powers that are being abused. I would hope that we could pass more meaningful legislation than this very, very small step in the right direction.

Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the gentleman from Texas, Mr. RON PAUL, expressed his misgivings about this bill in his dissenting views contained in the committee report. Since he is not present today, I offer them for the RECORD at this point for inclusion with my remarks, as follows:

DISSENTING VIEWS OF HON. RON PAUL

The Federal Reserve District Banks were originally conceived, in 1913, as regional clearinghouses. The Federal Reserve Act was supposed to be a compromise, promoted by the administration of Woodrow Wilson, to reduce the power of New York City banks over the financial system of the United States. The Nation was not going to have one government-run central bank but rather as many as 12, coordinated and regulated in the national interest by a Board of Governors in Washington.

Of course, exactly the opposite was achieved. Some have argued that the whole Federal Reserve plan was a gimmick to create a "bankers' bank" in New York to prevent any recurrence of the panic of 1907, which for about 6 months seriously affected the fortunes of some financial houses in New York. The disaster that followed the crash of the stock market in 1929, and affected the entire Nation for over a decade, should prove to anyone that the Federal Reserve Act was a huge historical error.

What function do the 12 District Banks serve today? If you believe the Federal Reserve System is somehow like a "representative government" in the financial sector of our economy, then you might advocate having a nice mixture of delegates—a few bankers, a few industrialists, a few retailers, some labor unions, and of course the fashionable, illiberal idea that the sex or race or religion of someone should be taken into account as a qualification for public office.

I cannot support this bill for the same reason I would not support a bill requiring the Capitol gardens to give equal representation to every variety of tulip. The gardens are nice, but they have nothing to do with representatives government—and the Federal Reserve District Banks have nothing to do with "financial government" in our monetary system. For all practical purposes, the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board in Washington is an autocrat whom everyone fears.

It is tragic we have such an autocracy dominating a system of free-market capitalism, because it continually causes great economic turbulence. How many billions of dollars in the capital assets of our workers' pension funds were destroyed in the past 10 years by the Federal Reserve's inflationary and shifting policies? The costs we suffer from this experiment in "financial government" are staggering. Yet, rather than offering us the repeal of the Federal Reserve Act, the committee here offers a bill to plant more varieties of tulips in the gardens.

The meetings of the Directors of the Federal Reserve District Banks may be valuable, private seminars in applied economics for those who sit on them. The Directors surely work very hard, on a volunteer basis, and seriously debate important questions about economic conditions in their respective areas of the country; but are they not merely decorative, like the tulips?

The various District Banks have different economic models and by studying and debating the course of our economy, both nationally and regionally, they may add something to the similar work that is carried on in the Departments of Commerce, Treasury, and Labor; the President's Council of Economic Advisers and Office of Management and Budget; and, of course, the Congressional Budget Office and the Joint Economic Committee. There are several hundred graduate schools of economics in the United States. Economic forecasting services are available by the dozens, and some are almost as expensive as the Federal Reserve's. It is indeed a puzzle why, with so much serious effort devoted to studying and forecasting the behavior of our economy, the free market continues to fool them so often.

I regret that a section of this bill that would have abolished the anachronism requiring member banks to invest in District Bank shares, and to elect various classes of Directors, was deleted at the request of the Chairman of the Federal Reserve. It is certainly an interesting comment upon his autocratic power that a mere suggestion like that would lead to a complete rewrite of legislation making such a small change.

His argument, however, is interesting: The symbolic detail of private ownership of District banks, and independently elected Boards of Directors, tends to broaden public support for the Federal Reserve System. In other words, the autocrat Chairman of the Fed has more freedom of action if it looks like he is merely a minor figure among many who participate in debating and deciding upon policy.

This crafty use of symbols to hide real political power is a very old—and dangerous—trick. From Augustus Caesar to Machiavelli, to Bismarck and 20th century pseudo-democracies, leaders who wield unchecked, discretionary power have found it most wise to hide their mailed fists under the velvet gloves of "participatory democracy." This legislation is nothing more than an example of that ancient ruse—in this case, to mollify thrift industry executives so they won't pose a political threat to the power of the Federal Reserve Board, which since 1980 has been imposing the "reserve tax" upon them.

Mr. PARRIS. Mr. Speaker, we have no further requests for time, and I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FAUNTROY. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from the District of Columbia (Mr. FAUNTROY) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 5278.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. FAUNTROY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from the District of Columbia?

There was no objection.

AUTHORIZING SUBPENA POWER FOR PRESIDENT'S COMMISSION ON ORGANIZED CRIME

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 548) authorizing the President's Commission on Organized Crime to compel the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of information, and for other purposes, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.J. RES. 548

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

TAKING OF TESTIMONY AND RECEIPT OF EVIDENCE

SECTION 1. The Commission established by the President by Executive Order 12435, dated July 28, 1983 (hereinafter in this joint resolution referred to as the "Commission") may hold hearings. The Commission, or a member of the Commission or member of the staff of the Commission designated by the Commission for such purpose, may administer oaths and affirmations, examine witnesses, and receive documentary or other information in evidence.

SUBPENA POWER

SEC. 2. (a) The Commission shall have the power to issue subpenas, under the signature of the Chairman of the Commission or, if authorized by the Commission, under the signature of another member or the staff director of the Commission, requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses before the Commission, or before a member of the Commission or a member of the Staff of the Commission designated by the Commission for such purpose, and the production of information relating to a matter under investigation by the Commission. A subpena may require the person to whom it is directed to produce such information at any time before such person is to testify.

(b) In case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpena issued to a person under this section, a court of the United States within the jurisdiction of which the person is directed to appear or produce information, or within the jurisdiction of which the person is found, resides, or transacts business, may upon application by the Commission after the Commission notifies the Attorney General, issue to such person an order requiring such person to appear before the Commission, or before a member of the Commission or a member of the staff of the Commission designated by the Commission for such purpose, there to give testimony or produce information relating to the matter under investigation, as required by the subpena. Any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by the court as a contempt thereof.

(c) Process of a court to which application may be made under this section may be served in a judicial district wherein the person required to be served is found, resides, or transacts business.

TESTIMONY OF PERSONS IN CUSTODY

SEC. 3. A court of the United States within the jurisdiction in which testimony of a person held in custody is sought by the Commission or within the jurisdiction of which such person is held in custody, may, upon application by the Commission after the Commission notifies the Attorney General, issue a writ of habeas corpus ad testificandum requiring the custodian to produce such person before the Commission, or before a member of the Commission or a member of the staff of the Commission designated by the Commission for such purpose.

IMMUNITY

SEC. 4. The Commission is an agency of the United States for the purpose of part V of title 18 of the United States Code.

SERVICE OF PROCESS; WITNESS FEES

SEC. 5. (a) Process and papers issued by the Commission, or by a member of the Commission or a member of the staff of the Commission designated by the Commission for such purpose, may be served in person, by registered or certified mail, by telegraph, or by leaving a copy thereof at the residence or principal office or place of business of the person required to be served. When service is by registered or certified mail or by telegraph, the return post office receipt or telegraph receipt therefor shall be proof of service. Otherwise, the verified return by the individual making service, setting forth the manner of such service, shall be proof of service.

(b) A witness summoned before the Commission, or before a member of the Commission or a member of the staff of the Commission, shall be paid the same fees and mileage as are paid witness in the courts of the United States, and a witness whose deposition is taken and the person taking the same shall severally be entitled to the same fees as are paid for like services in the courts of the United States.

ACCESS TO OTHER RECORDS AND INFORMATION

SEC. 6. (a)(1) The investigative activities of the Commission are civil or criminal law enforcement activities for the purposes of section 552a(b)(7) of title 5, United States Code.

(2) The Commission is a Government authority, and an investigation conducted by the Commission is a law enforcement inquiry, for the purposes of the Right to Financial Privacy Act of 1978 (12 U.S.C. 3401 et seq.).

(b) For the purposes of section 2517 of title 18, United States Code, and as limited by subsection (c), the members and members of the staff of the Commission are investigative or law enforcement officers, except that in the case of a disclosure to or by any member or member of the staff of the Commission of any of the contents of a communication intercepted under section 2516(1) of such title, such disclosure may be made only after the Attorney General or the Attorney General's designee has had an opportunity to determine that such disclosure may jeopardize Federal law enforcement interests and has not made that determination, and in the case of a disclosure to or by any member or member of the staff of the Commission of any of the contents of a communication intercepted under section 2516(2) of such title, such disclosure may be made only after the appropriate State official has had an opportunity to make a determination that such disclosure may jeopardize State law enforcement interests and has not made that determination.

(c)(1) A person to whom disclosure of information is made under this section shall use such information solely in the performance of such person's duties for the Commission and shall make no disclosure of such information except as provided for by this joint resolution, or as otherwise authorized by law.

(2) A disclosure or use by a member or a member of the staff of the Commission of the contents of a communication intercepted under chapter 119 of title 18 of the United States Code may be made solely in the course of carrying out the functions of the Commission as such functions were established by Executive Order 12435, dated July 28, 1983.

FEDERAL PROTECTION FOR MEMBERS AND STAFF OF THE COMMISSION

SEC. 7. Conduct, which if directed against a United States attorney would violate section 111 or 1114 of title 18, United States Code, shall, if directed against a member of the Commission or a member of the staff of the Commission, be subject to the same punishments as are provided by such sections for such conduct.

CLOSURE OF MEETINGS

SEC. 8. The functions of the President under section 10(d) of the Federal Advisory Committee Act (5 U.S.C. App. 10(d)) shall be performed by the Chairman of the Commission.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PATMAN). Is a second demanded?

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HUGHES) will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Florida (Mr. SHAW) will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HUGHES).

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the Committee on the Judiciary favorably reports House Joint Resolution 548 as amended and recommends that the joint resolution do pass. This resolution gives the President's Commission on Organized Crime, established last summer, the authority necessary to subpena witnesses, to compel their testimony if necessary, and to obtain information from law enforcement and other agencies and from financial institutions to carry out its mission. The Commission on Organized Crime has been established to make a full and complete national and region-by-region analysis of organized crime; to define the nature of traditional and emerging organized crime groups; to identify the sources, amounts, and uses of the income of organized crime; and to evaluate the Federal laws we are now using to combat organized crime.

To carry out this responsibility will take a great deal of hard work. It is only possible if the Commission is able to obtain up-to-date and sensitive law enforcement intelligence. The Commission must be able to interview witnesses and examine documents under circumstances that assure their reliability. This resolution gives the Commission the powers to carry out its mission.

The President has appointed a very able and distinguished Commission. The chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, the gentleman from New Jersey, is one of the best known members. The chairman of the Judiciary Committee in the other body is also one of the outstanding members, as well as retired Associate Justice of the Supreme Court, Potter Stewart. The Chairman of the Commission is Judge Irving R. Kaufman, of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit. Judge Kaufman has had over 35 years of notable service on the Federal bench.

The resolution before us today is balanced. It has been carefully drafted to give the Commission the necessary tools to carry out its job and at the same time maintains without compromise the necessary protections of privacy and civil liberties when establishing an investigative authority whose work product will not be tested immediately in a criminal prosecution.

I urge the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, on July 28, 1983, the President created the Commission on Organized Crime by Executive order. The Commission is chaired by Judge Irving Kaufman and is made up of 20 distinguished members including Chairman PETER RODINO, Chairman STROM THURMOND, and retired Associate Justice Potter Stewart.

The Organized Crime Commission has the awesome task of collecting meaningful data on the impact of organized crime in the United States. This important Commission will benefit the American people and our Federal law enforcement community by making a full and complete national and region-by-region analysis of organized crime. This information, along with the Commission's assessment of Federal law in light of its findings, will provide us with pertinent information regarding the unacceptable organized crime phenomenon in the United States.

The purpose of the legislation before us today is to provide the necessary tools to the Commission which are essential in its ability to complete this important task. The Commission's ability to collect data from certain individuals is directly tied to it's ability to issue subpoenas and grant immunity. This resolution sets forth the circumstances in which such processes can be relied upon by the Commission. The Department of Justice has one concern which rests with the Commission's ability to represent itself in court under House Joint Resolution 548, rather than rely on the services of Department of Justice attorneys as is traditionally done. I am certain we can reach accommodation on this issue as we progress with this legislation.

For these reasons, I find House Joint Resolution 548 to be an important measure. This resolution provides the Commission with the additional authority necessary to accomplish its mission.

I urge the passage of House Joint Resolution 548.

At this time I would like to insert in the RECORD the statement of the ranking minority member of the Judiciary Committee, HAMILTON FISH, Jr.

I yield back the balance of my time.

● Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection, and in fact support the general purpose of House Joint Resolution 548, which is to authorize subpena power for the President's Commission on Organized Crime. However, I am concerned about those provisions of House Joint Resolution 548, which would authorize the Commission to conduct its own litigation in the courts.

As a general matter, I believe that the litigation of the United States should be under the control of the Attorney General. This helps to insure not only that the Government's position is conducted in a coordinated and effective manner, but that it is conducted with uniformity and consistency, so that the law is enforced equally and fairly. It is even more important to have litigation which may arise from House Joint Resolution 548 conducted by the Attorney General. The mandate of the Commission is a broad directive to make a full and complete national and region-by-region analysis of organized crime. By the very nature of this mandate, this implicates ongoing Federal and local law enforcement efforts. To avoid any inadvertent disruptions which could result, as well as safeguarding sensitive constitutional and privacy concerns, any litigation resulting from House Joint Resolution 548 should be conducted by the chief law enforcement officer of the United States—the Attorney General.

While I do not object to House passage of House Joint Resolution 548, I believe that prior to enactment the legislation should be amended to provide that any resulting litigation be conducted by the Attorney General. At this time, I include in the RECORD a letter of the Department of Justice, which sets forth their position on this matter:

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF LEGISLATIVE AND INTERGOVERNMENTAL AFFAIRS,
Washington, DC, May 1, 1984.

Hon. PETER W. RODINO, Jr.,
Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: This letter presents the views of the Department of Justice on sections 2(b) and 3 of H.J. Res. 490, a resolution "authorizing the President's Commission on Organized Crime to compel the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of information," as reported by the Subcommittee on Crime on April 11, 1984. Because we believe the adoption of these sections has the potential for undermining the law enforcement efforts of the Department of Justice, we strongly oppose their inclusion.

Section 2(a) of H.J. Res. 490 authorizes the President's Commission on Organized Crime, which was established by Executive Order No. 12435, to issue subpoenas compelling the testimony of individuals before the Commission, a member of the Commission, or the Commission's staff. Subpoena authority compelling the production of information is also included in section 2(a). We fully support this authority as a necessary instrument for the Commission to fulfill its mandate. Section 2(b), however, provides that the Commission, after notification to the Attorney General, may request an appropriate court to enforce a subpoena of the Commission. Additionally, section 3 of H.J. Res. 490 would authorize the Commission, after notification to the Attorney General, to seek a court order issuing a writ of habeas corpus to the custodian of an individual and requiring the custodian to produce the individual to the Commission. In our view, this assignment of litigation authority for the enforcement of Commission subpoenas is inconsistent with sound principles reflected in existing law and could seriously undercut the Department's on-going law enforcement activities.

As you know, the Attorney General has historically exercised plenary responsibility over the conduct of legal affairs of the United States. See 28 U.S.C. §§ 516 and 519. See also United States v. San Jacinto Tin Co., 125 U.S. 273, 279 (1888); Confiscation Cases, 7 Wall, (74 U.S.) 454, 457-58 (1868). This centralized control facilitates the presentation of uniform positions in court on important legal issues, provides for greater objectivity in the handling and filing of cases by attorneys who are not themselves affected litigants, and helps to ensure that the law is enforced equally and fairly. In light of these considerations, both Congress and the Executive branch have traditionally resisted the delegation of government litigating authority to persons outside the control or supervision of the Attorney General.

Sections 2(b) and 3 of H.J. Res. 490 seek to bestow litigating authority on the Commission and therefore amend, in effect 28 U.S.C. § 516. This is inconsistent with the salutory function of the Attorney General and, if carried to an extreme, would permit each agency of the government to make its position the government's position of the day. As the Fifth Circuit has indicated in I.C.C. v. Southern Railway Co., 543, F.2d 543, 535 (5th Cir. 1976), such a result is not in the interest of the government, nor would it be well received in the courts. The litigation of the United States is unique from that involving solely private parties. Its impact extends beyond those individuals connected with a particular lawsuit. Its precedential value is significant. To ensure that the law is enforced equally and fairly, the government's litigation must be conducted with uniformity and consistency. Only the Attorney General is in a position to perform such a task.

Moreover, we believe the unusual mandate of the Commission raises special and compelling reasons for not providing an exception to the Attorney General's general jurisdiction. As set forth in Executive Order No. 12435, § 2(a), the Commission is to "make a full and complete national and region-by-region analysis of organized crime; define the nature of traditional organized crime as well as emerging organized crime groups, the sources and amounts of organized crime income, and the uses to which organized crime puts its income; develop in-depth information on the participants in organized crime networks; and evaluate Federal laws pertinent to the efforts to combat organized crime."

Under this directive, almost any area relating to organized crime which is currently the subject of on-going Departmental law enforcement efforts could possibly fall under the Commission's scrutiny. For this reason, granting the Commission power to subpoena documents and witnesses raises the possibility that ongoing Department law enforcement investigations and prosecutions could be inadvertently but seriously prejudiced by the actions of the Commission. Thus, while we fully support and welcome the broad scope of the Commission's activities, we believe it is crucial that the Attorney General, as the chief law enforcement officer of the United States, have the authority to disapprove attempts by the Commission to enforce the subpoenas.

There is an additional factor counselling in favor of review by this Department of the Commission's efforts to obtain documents and the testimony of witnesses. In seeking to obtain a fresh perspective on the problem of organized crime, the President has named to the Commission distinguished individuals from a wide variety of backgrounds in public and private life, none of whom are officers of the Executive branch and only a few of whom are full-time federal government employees. While we believe this independent viewpoint is a valuable asset to the Commission's undertaking, it also suggests that the Attorney General should be responsible for the exercise by the Commission of any coercive authority. Any attempt by the Commission to enforce subpoenas ordering citizens to testify or produce documents may raise sensitive constitutional and privacy concerns. In our view, it is inadvisable that these questions should be resolved by the Commission alone, without approval by the chief law enforcement officer of the United States, the Attorney General.

The Department of Justice endorses the purpose of H.J. Res. 490 in providing authority to issue subpoenas and to seek writs of habeas corpus for the Commission to accomplish the mandate established by Executive Order No. 12435. However, to authorize the Commission to conduct its own litigation would depart from sound policies underlying present law, and potentially undermine the law enforcement efforts of this Department. Accordingly, we strongly urge that H.J. Res. 490 be amended to provide that any litigation involving the Commission be conducted by the Attorney General.

The Office of Management and Budget has advised this Department that there is no objection to the submission of this report from the standpoint of the Administration's position.

Sincerely,

ROBERT A. MCCONNELL,
Assistant Attorney General.
By: C. MARSHALL CAIN,
Acting Assistant Attorney General.●

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the joint resolution under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HUGHES) that the House suspend the rules and pass the joint resolution, House Joint Resolution 548, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the joint resolution, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SOIL CONSERVATION ACT OF 1984

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 493 and rule XXIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 3457.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 3457) to prohibit the payment of certain agriculture incentives to persons who produce certain agricultural commodities on highly erodible land; to allow farmers who plant perennial grasses and legumes as a means of building soil quality, rotating crops, or protecting land from wind and water erosion, to enter a certified voluntary set-aside program; and to allow the Secretary of Agriculture to enter into long-term contracts with farmers to remove certain erosion-prone lands from cultivation, with Mr. SAM B. HALL, JR., in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the first reading of the bill is dispensed with.

Under the rule, the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. JONES) will be recognized for 30 minutes and the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. COLEMAN) will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. JONES).

Mr. JONES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of H.R. 3457, as reported by the Committee on Agriculture. As the introducing sponsor of this legislation, I commend my colleagues on the committee for producing what I believe is a bold new approach to combating the national problems of soil erosion and water quality.

The Soil Conservation Act of 1984 is part of the committee's continuing and serious concern over the erosion of the Nation's resource base. All evidence available to the committee indicates that our topsoil is being eroded at an unsustainable rate.

The average erosion rate on our Nation's cropland is more than 14 tons of topsoil per acre each year, and an acre is less than 5,000 square yards of cropland. Conservation experts tell us that most cropland regenerates less than 5 tons of organic matter annually, so you can easily see what an overwhelming net loss we will continue to face each year that passes unless we begin to act now.

As I said, the committee has maintained a long-term concern and interest, and H.R. 3457 is simply the next logical step. In 1977, the Congress passed the Soil and Water Resources Conservation Act which has provided us with much needed data, monitoring and analysis of our resources. Out of the first cycle of reporting data we developed numerous conservation initiatives which were enacted in the 1981 farm bill. Unfortunately, the administration has failed to implement any of the meaningful provisions contained in that act.

However, I am glad to report that at least some elements of H.R. 3457 are supported by the administration, and a bill has already passed the Senate which is similar to one major provision of this bill. Therefore, I am hopeful of prompt House passage and eventual enactment of this legislation.

At this point, I believe it would be useful to mention some of the many organizations which have expressed support for this bill. They include:

The National Farmers Union;
The National Farmers Organization;
The Independent Bankers Association of America;
The National Association of Conservation Districts;
The Soil Conservation Society of America;
The American Farmland Trust;
The National Association of Counties;
The Natural Resources Defense Council;
The Land Improvement Contractors of America;
The National Audubon Society;
The Center for Rural Affairs;
The Sierra Club;
Bread for the World;
The Wildlife Society;
The Tennessee Valley Authority; and The National Governor's Association.

Title II of this legislation has been commonly referred to as the "sodbuster" provison. It would deny eligibility to most Agriculture Department farm programs to farmers who put highly erodible land into production which has been in production since 1973. However, nothing in this bill prohibits such sodbusting. It in no way dictates to farmers what they can or cannot do with their land. This bill simply would deny subsidies to farmers who engage in this practice unless they adopt approved conservation systems on the fragile land.

Title III of this bill requires the Secretary of Agriculture to provide the Congress with information we will need during consideration of the general farm bill in 1985. Some of us feel that good conservation farmers who routinely devote some of their land to conservation uses are being inadvertently penalized during annual set-aside programs. The cropland base protection study required in this bill will help determine the extent of the problem and suggest solutions if appropriate.

The conservation reserve program established in title IV is in my opinion the most important element of this bill, and—unfortunately—the one most opposed by the administration. Keep in mind that sodbuster is aimed at potentially eroding land which is not in production—thus not eroding at this time.

Conversely, the conservation reserve is targeted at erosion-prone land which is now in production and eroding at heavy rates. The program would assist in converting this land to more conserving but probably less profitable uses such as pasture, hay, seed, or timber production. It addresses a here and now problem which is a clear and present threat to our long-term ability to produce.

The program would establish 7 to 15 year contracts with individual farmers, providing them with annual rental and cost sharing assistance to convert eligible cropland to more conserving uses. Rental payments would be determined on a bid basis so that we get as much conservation for each tax dollars as possible. In my personal opinion, this program should be funded at $1 to $2 billion a year, and that would be a bargain in the long term. However, the funding authorized by H.R. 3457 is only a fraction of that amount—$225 million over a 3-year period.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, let me point out that the committee has been careful to consider the rights of private landowners in this legislation. H.R. 3457 requires that the USDA establish an appeals process under which any person may seek a review of any adverse determination made against him under the programs created in this bill. In addition, we have included a provision requiring the Secretary to complete soil surveys as soon as possible on private lands where such surveys have not yet been completed.

However, I do not personally believe this problem to be as severe as some may think. In fact, a recent report by the Department of Agriculture indicates that more than 75 percent of all non-Federal lands have already been mapped and classified.

At this point I would like to have printed in the RECORD a table which demonstrates the extent to which soil surveys have been completed throughout the United States.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I might consume.

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 3457, the Soil Conservation Act of 1984, which the chairman of the Conservation Subcommittee, Mr. JONES of Tennessee, and I introduced last year truly is a conservation bill. Each of its three substantive titles is aimed at conserving America's most precious resource, soil, and assisting in keeping our water resources clean and useful.

The bill consists of five titles, the first of which defines our terms. I should be clear from the outset that H.R. 3457 deals with farmland generally marginally suitable or unsuitable for row crop production without applied conservation practices. However, I would be remiss if I did not point out that when we debate amendments to this legislation in a few days, one of those contentious items will be the definition of "highly erodible" and "erosion-prone" land.

Title II is the so-called sodbuster provision. Here, the committee attempts to end the Federal subsidization of breaking new land that is not generally suitable for cropping. The bill does allow for certain exemptions—for instance, it does not apply retroactively and land classified as highly erodible may be cropped if the land has an appoved conservation plan in effect.

Title III requires the Secretary of Agriculture to study the issue of protecting the crop bases of conservation-minded farmers. A farmer participates in Federal programs according to this cropland base. Farm policy and economic survival on the farm has meant fence-row-to-fence-row cultivation, but many farmers throughout the country practice conservation by not cropping their marginal lands or following a crop rotation system that calls for fields to be devoted to conserving uses on a regular basis. Simply stated, the farmer who cleared fence rows, cut down timber along waterways and plowed up every acre of his farm is rewarded when USDA decides to implement a stabilization program to reduce production. That farmer—and he does it generally for pure economic survival—who has contributed to our surpluses and created a need for crop reductions benefits when those reductions are implemented. I do not think that is sound Federal policy, and I would hope USDA will agree when it has completed its study of this issue.

Title IV is the conservation reserve, and I believe it is most important to our conservation effort. It requires the Secretary of Agriculture to contract with producers and landowners to retire farmland from row crop production. This program is needed; it is wanted by farmers in the Midwest whose resource base is suffering depletion. Under this title farmland will be retired for 7 to 15 years and planted to grasses and trees. I should point out here that the conservation subcommittee originally contemplated authorizing $300 million a year in an open-ended program. In full committee markup, the Members accepted my amendment to have a 3-year signup with $50 million authorized the first year, $75 million the second, and $100 million in the final year of signup. With this commitment 7 million acres of land can be saved. While I am as concerned as any Member about the budgetary impact of all our programs, this is needed—and it is by no means a budget buster.

Title V establishes the procedure for implementation of the substantive titles and also writes an appeal procedure for any determination made under the bill.

Now, let me outline the reasons why this legislation is needed:

Agricultural circumstances of the mid-1970's called for increased production, fence-row-to-fence-row production; and farm economics of the latter part of the 1970's and into the 1980's continued this practice even though it has been harmful to our future production capabilities.

While this bill will affect each agricultural area of the country in some way, I want to speak today about its effect on the Midwest, my State of Missouri and, specifically, the 27 counties of north Missouri that comprise the Sixth Congressional District, an important farming region which I represent.

This area is called the northern Missouri River tributaries basin and it drains parts of southern Iowa and northern Missouri. In Missouri, this basin makes up 20 percent of the State's geographical area. These counties which have some of the most productive soils in the world, according to the Soil Conservation Service, also can claim to be some of the worst areas in the United States as far as soil erosion is concerned. The deep loss hills and heavy till plain soils account for approximately 40 percent of Missouri's corn production, 30 percent of the State's annual soybean harvest, and 15 percent of the wheat and grain sorghum production; 140 years ago when this land first was cultivated the top soil measured 16 inches; today, our farmers are plowing up lands with about half that amount of topsoil. We simply cannot sustain that kind of soil loss over time.

The SCS claims that more than 100 million tons of soil are washed off the fields in north Missouri annually. This erosion causes depletion of the soil resource, pollution of water, and deposition of sediment in our streams, rivers, and lakes. In terms of economics, in opportunity costs, the total is difficult to determine, but in terms of dredging rivers to get rid of sediment and of building new water impoundments to replace those filled up by soil erosion, the direct costs run into hundreds of millions of dollars annually.

According to a 1982 USDA report on the Missouri portion of the northern Missouri River tributaries basin, More than half of the 2.052 million acres of cropland in this area is farmed without conservation methods. In other words, this land is farmed in straight rows using conventional tilling methods. SCS estimates sheet and rill erosion on this land at an average annual rate of 31 tons per acre.

It is not accurate to say Missouri farmers do not care about conservation. They do, and they have been turning to conservation practices as they have found that the economics of farming have allowed it. Not only do these farmers use the traditional methods such as contour farming, terracing, and strip cropping, they also have begun minimum and no-till practices that cut soil erosion markedly.

But, there also is another problem, and that is much of the land now being cropped should never have been plowed in the first place and a great deal of this hill land, traditionally in hay and pasture for livestock production, should not be farmed regardless of what kind of conservation practice is used. There simply is no cost-effective conservation measure that would make this land productive over the long term as row cropland. As grain farming became more of a moneymaker in the 1970's and the raising of cattle less so, many of these hills, composed of the loess soils of the river plains, were plowed. These hills should be returned to grasslands.

So, how do we get these lands back in grass and trees as they were once a decade or so ago? I firmly believe the first step is contained in title IV of this bill, the conservation reserve program which I have outlined. This kind of program is supported by my farmers in north Missouri, and by those taxpayers who understand that soil erosion is dangerous to the general welfare of our Nation.

Certainly, the U.S. Department of Agriculture and Secretary of Agriculture John Block have supported the long-term budgetary commitment to retire erosion-prone farmland from row crop production.

Late last fall, the Secretary announced his own conservation reserve program, and on April 20, 1984, he declared it a successful new initiative that retired more than a quarter of a million acres. This land retirement program took highly erodible land out of production. This is land eroding at least twice the tolerance level—which is generally thought to be around 5 tons per acre annually. I might add that of the 12 States with the largest acreages enrolled, Missouri farmers had far and away the most acres retired at 32,769. The next State, Iowa, enrolled 20,700 acres.

To further point to the USDA's commitment to this kind of conservation program, I quote from the recently released report from the Office of Rural Development Policy, entitled "Rural Communities and the American Farm: A Partnership for Progress":

> Soil erosion has brought extensive damage and danger to rural roads, bridges, and buildings. It reduces the productive capacity of American agriculture. And it represents a major water pollution problem for the Nation. Siltation from such erosion has reduced the water storage capacity of reservoirs and the flood control capacity of community water removal systems, and it has endangered the health of fish and wildlife.
> To help improve the management and protection of rural natural resources, the Department of Agriculture will spend a greater share of its conservation budget on erosion control, flood protection, and water conservation.

I believe one way the Department can attain this is by retiring erosion prone cropland from production. As I have stated previously today, some farmland in crop production will be destroyed even with traditional conservation practices in place. This land must be put back to grass and trees.

Conservation in mid-America's farming communities is supported widely. My State of Missouri has increased funds at the State level through bond initiatives—and will place on the ballot this summer a sales tax proposal—to supplement Federal dollars devoted to soil and water conservation. The job is a big one, and no matter where Americans may live, they must understand they have a stake in conserving our natural resources that produce food and fiber for this country.

Let me take a moment to describe just how much work there is to be done. In the four States of Missouri, Iowa, Nebraska, and Kansas, there is an 80-county area that includes 27.8 million acres, about half of which is cropland. This area—northwest Missouri, southwest Iowa, southeast Nebraska, and northeast Kansas—needs a great deal of soil and water conservation, and this special areas proposal, as authorized by the 1981 farm act, calls for a 20-year program spending about $3 billion. Such a program is a massive undertaking, and one that budgetary constraints probably will not allow. But that is no reason why the Federal Government in cooperation with the States should not continue the task of getting these highly erosive croplands out of production. Title IV of H.R. 3457 is a good step in that direction.

My final remarks concern title II, the sodbuster title. Again, this language reacts to the fact that Federal farm policy encourages the plowing out of thousands of acres of land that is not suitable for cropping. Generally, the problem and the potential for disaster may be more likely in the arid and semiarid Western States where rangeland—fragile even for that purpose—is being turned over and planted to a cash crop. Most everyone agrees some Federal action must be taken because it is Federal policy that encourages it. There is disagreement as to how much cross-compliance is too much Federal interference. On the other hand, the Federal Government is not telling an individual what to do with his land, only that the Federal Government will no longer support that kind of activity.

The Department of Agriculture and the American Farm Bureau Federation both have expressed legitimate concerns as to the effect of title II as the full Committee on Agriculture passed it last month. The Secretary of Agriculture maintains that there is sufficient disincentive to plowout marginal lands in language that comprises S. 663, and that H.R. 3457 goes far beyond the original concepts of the sodbuster proposal. As the Farm Bureau notes:

> A farmer could plow up 10 acres of highly erodible land, plant it to corn and thus find himself ineligible for any Federal farm benefits on any other land that he may cultivate that year.

We will hear a great deal during this debate about this legislation setting the precedent for Federal land controls, and the intervention of the Federal Government into private ownership rights. Admittedly, any kind of cross-compliance strikes at most farmers' attitudes that the Federal Government has no right to intervene in the uses of privately held land.

Let me point out so that none of my colleagues misunderstand: The administration opposes several aspects of this legislation. The administration seeks a less restrictive sodbuster title, and apparently believes funds devoted to land retirement are not wisely spent.

Finally, I believe this legislation is needed now—not next year in the farm bill because there it will be lost in other, bigger issues, and frankly, I think this is a big issue that has been put for too long. I urge passage of H.R. 3457.

Mr. JONES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I want to take this opportunity to thank my colleague, the ranking member of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. COLEMAN), for a very fine explanation of the entire bill and also for his wonderful cooperation that he has offered in putting this bill together.

Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. BEDELL), a member of the subcommittee.

Mr. BEDELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this bill to promote soil conservation in the United States.

At the outset I want to commend the chairman of the subcommittee, Mr. JONES, for his tireless efforts to promote soil conservation, and Mr. COLEMAN from Missouri, which we all know is one of the most important responsibilities of this Government.

My district in Iowa is farmland. Farmers there grow grain and produce cattle and hogs. I have heard from many, many people about their concern for conserving soil and preventing erosion.

They express two major concerns. First, they say they need help if they are to continue to conserve their soils. They say that many farmers are careful stewards of the land. But some of their neighbors are not conservation farmers. Yet the careful stewards and the other farmers both have access to the Federal agricultural programs. They tell me this should not be so.

I know that the soil erosion problem is a threat to American agriculture, which is the most important industry in our Nation. Almost daily the extent of the erosion problem is documented. We see the soil erosion problem in news articles, on radio, on television documentaries, in magazine, and in books.

There was dramatic evidence of wind erosion in April of this year when people in Ohio saw and felt soil from the Southwest during a strong windstorm. I hear from my constituents about their concerns for the soil. I hear this not only from farmers but from the people in the towns and cities.

I believe our Nation is blessed with the best agricultural land in the world. And we in Iowa may be the fortunate ones to have some of the best of the best. In Iowa over 90 percent of all our land is in agricultural uses. Three out of every four acres are used for crops. From this you can see that soil erosion is indeed a major issue to Iowans. They tell me that much erosion could be prevented with better land management.

And it is right that Iowans are concerned. For along with being blessed with some of the world's best soils, we have the burden that these same soils wash away at an astonishing rate. For every acre of Iowa land that is cropped we lose, on the average, 12 tons of soil a year. That is three dump trucks of soil from every acre of erodible land that grows our corn and soybeans and other crops. Erosion depletes the land that feeds people in our country. Erosion depletes the land that produces grain for export and the land that produces feed for livestock.

Mr. Chairman, not only does this erosion take away the soil that grows the food. The eroded soil does further damage to water and other land. The soil that washes from the 30 million acres of Iowa farmland fills harbors, rivers, streams, reservoirs, and ponds. It damages roads and maybe even a neighbor's farm. It costs uncounted dollars to repair or clean up after this damage.

I know that the Corps of Engineers estimates $2 a cubic yard to dredge sediment from a river or a harbor. And that is after the dredging operation is all set up. It costs even more for cleaning up the results of erosion when this is not a continuous cleanup operation.

I believe that we must take further actions than those we have taken so far to stop erosion and to keep our farmland productive. For this reason I speak in support of H.R. 3457, a bill to promote soil conservation in the United States.

Since coming to the Congress I have continuously supported soil conservation programs. I am proud that I had a part in strengthening this bill.

This bill is important because it would help to assure that our soil conservation efforts and Federal farm programs no longer work at odds with one another, as they sometimes do today. As you know, H.R. 3457 would deny farm price supports to those who put fragile lands into row crop production, and would recognize those who currently put erosion-prone acres into grass and legumes.

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 3457 takes three new approaches to soil conservation. It corrects the continuing problem of our farm programs working at cross-purposes with soil conservation programs. The bill also asks for a study of voluntary set-aside methods. And it calls for long-term contracts for landowners to retire their erosion-prone land into a conservation reserve.

Farming on highly erodible land requires special attention if soil productivity is to be maintained. The special attention is farming according to an approved conservation system. Many farmers already follow conservation systems, but not all farmers do.

Under the first provision of this bill, if in the future a person begins to farm highly erodible land and does not follow an approved conservation system, then that person will be ineligible for some Federal farm benefits. These programs are price support or similar payments, crop insurance, disaster payments and some types of loans.

I mentioned earlier that I had helped to strengthen this bill. The change was to this provision which now applies to all crops on all of the person's land. If we are serious about preventing erosion, Mr. Chairman, and we must be serious about this, then I feel that the Federal Government should not benefit the person who brings highly erodible land into cultivation. This is the first of the three approaches for soil conservation that are included in this bill.

For some time now farm organizations and conservation groups have been proposing programs where people would voluntarily set aside cropland that is erodible. This land would be planted in grass or legumes instead of crops in order to build the soil's productivity or to conserve the soil. In the legislation before us, the Congress asks the Secretary of Agriculture to study proposals such as these. The study would look at designating these set-aside lands for inclusion in a normal cropland acreage base, or conservation-use acreage, and at the effects on water quality of set-aside programs.

In the earlier version of this bill a voluntary set-aside program is included. This provision was watered down so that it now calls for a study. It is a disappointment that the program had to be put off to a later year. The study I have just described is the second new approach to soil conservation in H.R. 3457.

Mr. Chairman, the third approach is the conservation reserve program. In this program the owner or operator of erosion-prone cropland enters into a contract with the Secretary of Agriculture to plan to convert this cropland to less intensive use. In return the Secretary will provide technical assistance, share the cost of the conservation measures and pay an annual land rental fee for the period of the contract. Or the owner could alternatively choose to permanently retire the cropland base and allotment history for such land.

The importance of this is that land not presently needed for food production may be retired for a specified time period, conserving the land while at the same time bringing crop production into balance with demand. If land in the conservation reserve is needed at a later date for food production, the contract can be modified to allow this.

These three new approaches are consistent with each other. They also assure that taxpayer dollars spent for agricultural programs do not undercut the conservation being accomplished under other programs. Time for conserving our soil is running out. We need to deal more aggressively with this problem. With this legislation we have begun to implement more effective conservation programs.

Mr. Chairman, I commend the chairman, the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. JONES) for what he has done with this bill. In my opinion it is only a first step in what needs to be done for our total soil erosion problems, but at least this committee has now moved forward, stepped forward, to say that we are not going to sit by and let this continue.

I am proud to be a part of the committee that has taken this step and I am very pleased that I have been able to have a part in what is being done here. I commend the chairman, the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. JONES) as well as our colleagues on the committee for their action.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. GUNDERSON).

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I cannot help but begin by observing that if Samuel Clemens were alive today, I am sure that his commentary on the erosion problems facing our country would be that soil conservation is second only to the weather in problems that we all talk about, but do nothing to remedy. The bill before us today goes far to alter that oversight and strengthen our national commitment to effective soil conservation. That is why I rise in support of H.R. 3457.

Now, I know that there are going to be a lot of facts, figures, and statistics thrown around today and one does not have to have a crystal ball to predict that, by the time we have finished, most Members will not want to hear about this subject again for a long, long time.

Yet, there is no issue more vital to our country's future strength and stability—and here is why.

American prominence and leadership in agriculture is no accident—we have had the edge on production from the beginning because there is more high quality land available for agriculture in the United States than in any other country in the world.

On the other hand, we will maintain that edge only so long as our greatest natural resource—our soil—remains intact. And, the way things are going right now, that will not last long.

The General Accounting Office tells us that we are losing 6.5 billion tons of topsoil annually to erosion and that somewhere around 70 percent of our cropland and rangeland is in need of positive conservation methods. And the problem is getting worse, not better.

Now, we throw the word "billion" around so much in this Chamber that I sometimes feel we have become numb to it. Accordingly, allow me to translate that last statistic into more tangible numbers. Simply stated, it means that we lose over 2 bushels of topsoil for every bushel of corn we produce each year.

If that erosion rate is not minimized, the cost of producing food in the United States will double in the next 50 years. I am sure that there is not anyone here today or listening to these proceedings on their televisions who is not concerned about that fact.

In the very long run, this uncontrolled erosion may not only increase the cost of producing food but ultimately threaten our very ability to produce that food. The day that occurs, it will be the beginning of the end for our country—for if history teaches us one thing, it is that a government remains strong only so long as it can feed its people.

Mr. Chairman, I have an uncle who teaches Greek at one of the colleges in our country. You might say, "What does a professor of the Greek department have to do with something dealing with agriculture?" He suggested that a study of world history will show that a country has remained the leading country of the world only as long as it had a policy to serve food to its people. If we are not concerned about soil conservation and active productive land in this country, we may jeopardize not only our ability to serve our people but, more importantly, our ability and potential as a world leader. That is why the bill before us today is so important.

H.R. 3457 addresses the serious soil erosion problem our country faces by creating two new conservation programs and ordering a study of an existing program to see if greater accommodation can be made for those who wish to participate in acreage-reduction programs yet practice an important conservation technique—crop rotation.

First, title II of the bill discourages future cultivation of highly erodible lands—Soil Conservation Service classifications IVe, VIe, VII, and VIII. This is a significant policy change from current Federal commodity programs that often encourage production on highly erodible land when target prices exceed market prices.

This is especially troublesome in a time of surplus production such as that we presently face. For example, approximately one-fifth of the rural land in my home State of Wisconsin is highly erodible—some 6.6 million acres. Now, despite the fact that we have a significant surplus in virtually every feed grain area, 20 percent of this highly erodible land is currently cultivated—1.3 million acres.

Given this surplus, one fact is obvious—we certainly do not need more highly erodible land cultivated at this time. And title II of H.R. 3457 would discourage such activity by denying eligibility for Federal commodity price support programs to producers who place newly cultivated highly erodible land into production.

Now, it is important to point out that the sodbuster title will not remedy the current erosion problems we face. However, it will prevent those problems from getting worse in the future.

Title IV of the bill, on the other hand, attacks the current erosion problems head on by creating a paid conservation reserve program in which USDA would contract with producers to take "erosion-prone" lands out of production for between 7 and 15 years. Erosion-prone lands include all highly erodible classifications plus SCS classification IIIe.

From a Wisconsin perspective, 3.2 million acres—some 30.7 percent—of our 10.5 million acres of erosion-prone land is currently under cultivation. Such a long-term paid diversion would provide additional incentives for producers to take this most erodible land out of production and, thus, so far toward solving the overall erosion problems we face.

Now, I realize that the $225 million authorized for this program is a lot of money in a time when we are facing $180 billion Federal deficits. At the same time, I am reminded of the television commercials for oil filters where the mechanic says, "you can pay me now, or pay me later." Clearly, that is the situation we face in the soil conservation area, for what we save in outlays today we will pay ten, twenty, and even one hundred-fold in consumer food subsidies in the future.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, title III of the bill provides for a USDA study of the feasibility of permitting producers who engage in crop rotation to participate in future acreage diversion and payment-in-kind programs. Presently, it is virtually impossible for these producers to establish the commodity base necessary for participation.

Crop rotation is quite possibly the most commonly used soil conservation method in Wisconsin and it is not only unfair to bar producers who rotate crops from the benefits of payment-in-kind programs but such a prohibition also discourages the future use of this conservation technique. As such, I look forward to receiving the positive recommendations of this study and implementing them in the 1985 farm bill.

In conclusion, then, Mr. Chairman, let me reiterate my support for the legislation before us today. It is indeed the ounce of prevention that will be worth a pound of cure in future years. I urge my colleagues to vote for H.R. 3457.

● Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Chairman, it gives me great pleasure to join in support of H.R. 3457, the Soil Conservation Act of 1984.

H.R. 3457 contains several interrelated provisions that make an important contribution toward soil conservation on our more highly erodible land. The first portion of the bill, commonly known as sodbuster legislation, would provide incentives to keep highly erodible land not now in production from being used to cultivate crops. The other major portion of the bill, the conservation reserve program, would provide authority for assistance to be made available to farmers and ranchers who convert erosion-prone land, which currently is in production, to less intensive uses that conserve and improve soil and water resources.

H.R. 3457 was introduced by Mr. ED JONES of Tennessee, chairman of the Subcommittee on Conservation, Credit, and Rural Development, and jointly sponsored by Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri, ranking minority member of the subcommittee, Mr. HARKIN, Mr. JEFFORDS, and many other Members of the House. In all, it is sponsored by 35 Members. It enjoys broad support on both sides of the aisle and was reported by the committee by a recorded vote of 38 ayes to 1 nay.

Before I proceed further, I wish to pay tribute to ED JONES. The bill is before the House in large part because of his dedication and tireless efforts. Mr. JONES has been in the forefront of the conservation movement and has largely been responsible for much of the conservation legislation enacted into law since he became chairman of the subcommittee in 1977. In addition, through the oversight activities of his subcommittee, he has done much to focus national attention on the need for improved methods of soil conservation and to prod the administration to take seriously its obligations to this end.

At this time I would like to describe in detail the provisions of H.R. 3457.

Title II, the sodbuster provisions, would deny benefits on agricultural programs to persons who, after the date of enactment of the bill, bring highly erodible land into cultivation on a field in which the predominant class of land is highly erodible, as defined in this act. Each such person would be ineligible, as to any agricultural commodity he produces during that crop year, for any type of Federal price support, any type of Federal income assistance or production adjustment payment, any farm storage facility loan, any Federal crop insurance, any disaster payments, or any new loan from the Farmers Home Administration if the Secretary of Agriculture determines that the loan will contribute to excessive erosion on highly erodible land.

The bill provides several exemptions from these requirements. There is an exemption for those producers whose commodities produced on highly erodible land were produced under an approved conservation system. This exemption is in recognition of the fact that these landowners will not be contributing to excessive erosion on fragile lands. The bill provides additional exemptions to avoid imposing any retroactive restrictions on agricultural producers who made farming decisions prior to the implementation of this new program. Thus, the bill makes it clear that the provisions would not apply to a producer if all the crops he produced on highly erodible land were produced during the 1973 through 1984 crop years, or were planted before enactment of the bill or during a crop year beginning before the date of enactment. Finally, the committee bill also would not apply to any agricultural loan made before enactment of the bill.

I want to make clear to the Members that nothing in this bill imposes demands on any farmer or rancher concerning what may or may not be done with his or her land. What the bill does do is simply state that the Federal Government will no longer subsidize producers who choose to cultivate highly erodible land using farming practices that are not in conformity with an approved conservation system.

The committee believes that efforts, such as those contained in title II, to prevent excessive amounts of additional soil erosion make sense in terms of the national economy and the environment.

Soil erosion is a serious national problem which has resulted in the loss of valuable topsoil in many agricultural areas. The most reliable estimates of soil erosion in the United States obtained in 1977, the latest date for which such data are available from the Department of Agriculture, showed that 38 million acres of cropland—11 percent of the total cropland in the United States—was eroding in excess of 15 tons per acre annually. In any key wheat-producing areas the soil loss averages about 30 tons per acre, reaching as much as 100 tons per acre in some areas under extreme conditions. In 1982, the acres of highly erodible land already under cultivation amounted to about 45 million acres. There is the potential of another 247 million acres of highly erodible land not now in cultivation that could be brought into production unless checked.

When fragile lands are converted into cropland without the installation of a conservation system, the Nation pays the costs of this conversion in several ways. First, the Government often subsidizes the production from these erodible lands through various farm support programs and subsidized irrigation water. In addition, many individuals, farms, industries, and fish and wildlife resources located downstream of the converted land end up paying the most significant costs. For instance, the sediment resulting from erosion is costing the Nation hundreds of millions of dollars a year as it fills up valuable reservoirs, increases the frequency and seriousness of floods, clogs navigation facilities and canals, interferes with industrial hydraulic equipment, increases the cost of treating drinking water supplies, destroys valuable aquatic wildlife, and substantially diminishes the recreational potential of downstream waters. The nutrients, pesticides, and other contaminants carried into waterways with the eroded soil exacerbate all of these problems and create still others.

Title II of H.R. 3457 will not stop erosion, and in fact it will not correct the problems which already exist. However, this initiative is clearly a reasonable and much needed step in the direction of slowing down the rate at which future conversions of fragile lands add to these problems.

H.R. 3457 requires the Secretary to establish, by regulation, an appeal procedure under which a person who is adversely affected by any determination made under the bill may seek review of the determination. This provision was included to protect producers against arbitrary decisions made by the Department. It would assure that producers are provided an opportunity to obtain review of determinations of land classification that trigger the application of the program ineligibility provisions as well as a review of determinations as to specific denials of program benefits. The committee recognizes that legitimate differences of opinion may occur on these issues. It should be noted that H.R. 3457 does not make determinations of the Secretary final, and thus any person that is aggrieved by administrative determinations, after conclusion of the appeal process may seek judicial review in accordance with the provisions of the Administrative Procedure Act.

Title III of the bill would require the Secretary before February 16, 1985, to submit to the congressional agricultural committees a report on various voluntary set-aside programs. It is primarily addressed to an issue which many persons claim results in unfairly penalizing farmers who divert land to conservation uses under those programs. To assist in handling this issue in future farm legislation, the report is required to include an analysis of a program under which persons who set aside cropland to perennial grasses or legumes as part of a crop rotation pattern may qualify under future commodity programs to have the lands designated: First, as cropland in rotation for the purpose of establishing a normal acreage base for the farm; or, second, as set-aside or conserving-use acreage under those programs.

For several years conservationists have contended that Federal Government farm price support and production control programs unfairly reward farmers who have overutilized their marginal lands through row crop production, while penalizing farmers who have kept marginal lands in conserving uses or practiced a conservation-oriented crop rotation program. The committee hopes that the study and recommendations resulting from title III will suggest solutions to this problem that could be included in the 1985 farm bill if legislation is needed.

Title IV of H.R. 3457, as reported by the committee, establishes a program under which farmers would agree to carry out conservation measures on erosion-prone lands under contracts with the Department of Agriculture for periods of 7 to 15 years.

In the conservation reserve contract with USDA, the farmer would agree to take specified erosion-prone land out of annual row crop production and put it in a more conserving but productive pursuit such as pasture, hay, or timber. The farmer would be paid an annual rental to compensate him for the transition to a less profitable but more soil-conserving use. Farmers could also be assisted with cost sharing for installing conservation practices, establishing grasses, or planting trees.

At present the annual production adjustment programs have some serious shortcomings with respect to achieving conservation. First, the programs operate on a year-to-year basis, making it virtually impossible for farmers to incorporate a long-term conservation system into short-term program requirements. Also, no attempt is now made to selectively enroll erosion-prone cropland into the current set-aside programs.

The program would allow farmers to reap commercial benefits from land entered in the conservation reserve. Some commercial uses which would be considered include grazing or the use of the land for hay, seed, or timber production. The rental rate paid to the farmer for entering the program is based on bids offered by the farmers. The committee is of the view that coupling a commercial use with the bid procedure will result in the lowest cost to the Government and smooth a permanent transition to conservation uses.

Under the bill, payments to producers would not exceed $50 million for contracts entered into during fiscal year 1985, $75 million for contracts entered into during fiscal year 1986, and $100 million for contracts entered into during the fiscal year 1987. The committee recognizes that this level of funding is insufficient to meet the overall national need. At a rental rate of $30 per acre annually for a contract term of 10 years, the authorized funding of $225 million over 3 years would divert 750,000 acres to more conserving uses.

Without question, the program will vary greatly in its utility, cost per acre, and effectiveness from one region to another. However, H.R. 3457 provides a prudent and cautious start which the committee is anxious to have initiated.

In summary, H.R. 3457 provides an integrated approach to protection of our Nation's soil resources—it deserves the support of the Members.●

● Mr. FAUNTROY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 3457, the Soil Conservation Act. This legislation, which would prohibit the payment of certain agriculture incentives to persons who produce certain agricultural commodities on highly erodible land, is very much needed. It is of importance to all Americans—rural, suburban, and urban—with a stake in our Nation's ability to retain its agricultural resource base and productivity.

The drought last summer combined with the PIK program have diminished our crop surpluses and the resulting increase in prices has provided economic incentives to farmers to bring into production previously uncultivated lands that are susceptible to erosion. The Department of Agriculture has estimated that of the approximately 421 million acres of land under current production, more than 40 million are erosion prone. It is estimated that another 250 million acres of marginal and fragile land could be converted to production to meet the economic incentives that are presently operating. Today, we face an erosion problem, which some are comparing to the dust situation which plagued our Nation in the 1930's.

This measure would set up counter-incentives by denying access to several types of Federal farm assistance programs to those farmers who choose to convert fragile land to production. Under this legislation, access to Federal price supports, crop loans, farm facility loans of Commodity Credit Corporation, disaster payments, and new loans from the Farmers Home Administration to farmers who choose not to cooperate in soil conservation. Erodible land would be defined under this legislation utilizing the Soil Conservation Service classifications, or as any land which has an erosion rate equal to or greater than the average erosion rate in the State for the same type of soil. Farmers would be able to request judicial review of a finding that land brought under cultivation is highly erodible.

Additionally, this measure would establish a soil conservation reserve program which would direct the Department of Agriculture to enter into 7- to 15-year contracts with farmers to remove erosion prone crop land from production, shifting it to use as pasture land, or soil conserving planting, utilizing trees or grasses.

Finally, H.R. 3457 would establish through the Department of Agriculture a study to evaluate voluntary set-aside programs that seek to enhance soil conservation.

Mr. Chairman, this legislation is very important to urban Americans, who depend for their food supply upon a productive and conserving agricultural sector. The protection and enhancement of our natural resources and our soil is of the utmost importance to the constituency I represent and indeed to all Americans and the world.

As cosponsor of this legislation, I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 3457.●

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. Chairman, it is my understanding that we will complete debate on this bill on another legislative day. Is that correct?

I would ask the subcommittee chairman if he would respond.

Mr. JONES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, that is the plan. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri that I plan to reserve the balance of the time on this side because there are a number of members of the subcommittee who are not here today who would like to have time.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. JONES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. JONES of Tennessee) having assumed the chair, Mr. SAM B. HALL, Jr., Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 3457) to prohibit the payment of certain agriculture incentive to persons who produce certain agricultural commodities on highly erodible land; to allow farmers who plant perennial grasses and legumes as a means of building soil quality, rotating crops, or protecting land from wind and water erosion, to enter a certified voluntary set-aside program; and to allow the Secretary of Agriculture to enter into long-term contracts with farmers to remove certain erosion-prone lands from cultivation, had come to no resolution thereon.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. JONES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill, H.R. 3457.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SAM B. HALL, Jr.). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. WHITEHURST. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed with my special order prior to the special order of the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. COLEMAN).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

MARXIST SANDINISTA REGIME IN NICARAGUA IS ATTEMPTING TO MANIPULATE THE CONGRESS AND AMERICAN PUBLIC OPINION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WHITEHURST) is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. WHITEHURST. Mr. Speaker, in recent months I have heard many of my colleagues, as well as the press, refer to "poverty-stricken" Nicaragua. The implications have been that it is a small, helpless nation beset by outside forces under the aegis of the United States—that it is somehow a David to our Goliath through no fault of its own. This is a measure of the success of the well-financed propaganda campaign being carried out by the Sandinistas.

Indeed, the Marxist Sandinista regime of Nicaragua is not only exporting its violent revolution to neighboring free states, it is exporting its Marxist propaganda to the United States. The Sandinistas are working hard to manipulate U.S. public opinion and to lobby the Congress. In fact, they even have an assistant to the President from the Carter administration among those doing their bidding. The Nicaraguans have spent, and are spending, a great deal of money for political propaganda activites in the United States.

Powell, Goldstein, Frazer & Murphy, a major Washington law firm, has engaged in political propaganda and lobbying activities for the Sandinista regime. From September 1983 to February 1984 alone, the firm handled nearly $100,000 in services and expenses for the Sandinista regime.

What have the Sandinistas bought from this important Washington firm in the last few years?

According to the records of the Criminal Division of the Department of Justice, the law firm has been acting as a foreign agent for the Nicaraguans. The following items from the records of the Internal Security Section of the Criminal Division indicate the nature of the law firm's activities for the Sandinistas:

Preparing or disseminating political propaganda by advertising campaigns, magazine or newspaper articles, press releases, pamphlets or other publications, letters or telegrams, and lectures or speeches.

Disseminating political propaganda to public officials, legislators, Government agencies, newspapers, editors, civic groups or associations, libraries, and educational institutions.

Representing Nicaragua in connection with legislation that may affect the interests of Nicaragua, including contacts with Members of Congress.

Efforts to pressure the U.S. Government in criminal law enforcement activities against Nicaraguan exiles living in the United States.

The records of the Criminal Division of the Justice Department detail the intensive effort made by the Sandinista surrogates to lobby Members of Congress. Indeed, one could say that the Sandinistas are intervening in the internal affairs of the United States, but the diplomatic principle of nonintervention in domestic policies is, at best, a matter of diplomatic niceties anyway.

In addition to their Washington law firm, the Sandinistas have engaged a New York public relations firm, Agendas International.

Again according to the records of the Criminal Division of the Department of Justice, this firm has acted as a foreign agent for the Sandinista government's Embassy and U.S. mission to the United Nations. Let me quote from their contract, which calls for the following services to be performed:

Agendas International will perform public affairs/public relations services for the various missions of Nicaragua in the United States for a period of six months, which term of service shall begin on this date [September 20, 1983]. These services shall consist of the following:

A. INFORMATION, MONITORING AND ANALYSIS

1. A minimum of biweekly briefing papers and sessions with Embassy personnel on U.S. public opinion of the critical military, political, moral, social and economic issues regarding international relations with Nicaragua.

2. A monthly summary in abstract form of news articles in the press and leading magazines on computer print-outs.

3. A weekly custom-edited videocassette tape of the more than 50 hours of major network television news and public affairs programs during each seven days, and will include a one-hour edited tape of the news program segments on Nicaragua and fully taped specials or news interviews on Nicaragua or with Nicaraguan personalities.

4. The monitoring and retrieval of important documents, reports and special publications with direct bearing on Nicaragua's interests from sources throughout the U.S. and abroad to be presented to the Commission as they are received.

5. A bi-monthly analysis of U.S. federal and states' legislation that may have a positive or negative impact on Nicaragua, with and emphasize this strategy planning and recommendations as necessary.

B. COMMUNICATIONS AND PUBLIC INFORMATION

1. Design and maintenance of a mailing list of an estimated 5,000–7,000 names drawn from U.S. Government, business, financial community, church and news media with subcategories.

2. Edited quarterly updates on developments in Nicaragua, including the economy, foreign policy and other news of interest to U.S. readers to be mailed to Congress, the media and other special segments of the above mailing list.

3. A minimum of two mailings of reprints of news media materials on Nicaragua, speeches, reports and statements of importance concerning Nicaragua.

4. And again emphasis, the placement of Nicaraguan officials on U.S. radio/TV news and public affairs programs, maintaining constant contacts with the media, strategy and recommendations for press releases and press conferences, the promotion of op-ed pieces and other articles in major publications and in sectors of the United States other than the East Coast.

5. Maintaining contact with key staff aides and Members of Congress to organize briefings, respond to requests for special information, arrange meetings between officials of Nicaragua and Members of Congress both in the United States and in Nicaragua, and make recommendations for lobbying specific issues.

C. STRATEGY PLANNING AND COUNSELING

1. Weekly meetings with Embassy and mission personnel in the U.S. to review developments, discuss specific issues, obtain guidance and approval on various aspects of the program and insure proper channeling of information on plans and policies relating to public affairs issues. At least one Senior Consultant will be available in Washington for these meetings three days each week.

2. Monthly meetings in Managua with the Foreign Ministry officials and others to review events, issues, strategy and programming. Both Senior Consultants will be available for three days each month for these meetings and to develop further aspects of the program.

In summary, then, since September 1983, this New York public relations firm has been under contract to the Sandinista regime's embassy to the United States to engage in overt intelligence collection and processing; the design and maintenance of a mailing list for propaganda mailings; the placement of Sandinista regime officials on U.S. radio and TV news and public affairs programs, the promotion of op-ed pieces and other articles in major publications, and the maintenance of constant contact with the media; and the maintenance of contact with key staff aids and Members of Congress to organize briefings, respond to requests for special information, and arrange meetings between Sandinista officials and Members of Congress both in the United States and in Nicaragua. For this purpose, the Sandinistas' Embassy established a special $250,000 bank account in the United States to insure completion of the public relations project.

Former senior U.S. Government officials, amazingly enough, are engaged in work for the Marxist Sandinista regime. Stuart E. Eizenstat, an assistant to the President on President Carter's White House staff, is a registered foreign agent for the Sandinista regime. He is involved in the Powell, Goldstein law firm's activities on behalf of Nicaragua, which are anticipated to include contacts with the Congress.

Mr. Speaker, I have by no means presented an exhaustive list of Nicaraguan agents active in the United States. I have tried only to highlight examples of the extent to which the Marxist Sandinistas are trying to influence the Congress and the American people through agents in the United States. Of course, I have said nothing at all concerning any clandestine activities in which the Sandinistas might be engaged in the Unites States.

Mr. Speaker, it would be disingenuous at best to claim that the information which we receive concerning Nicaragua through the media is unbiased; much of it has been produced by a highly effective public relations campaign. I hope that Members of Congress and the American people will keep in mind the extent to which the Sandinistas are trying to influence us through political propaganda and lobbying. Let us not hand the Marxist Sandinistas a victory by force of propaganda in the United States which will lead to Sandinista victory by force of arms over their neighbors in Central America.

THE SALVADORAN LEFT: POLITICAL ASSASSINATIONS AND TERRORIST ACTS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. COLEMAN) is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I have asked to take this time for a special order to detail the atrocities of the Salvadoran left, the political assassinations and terrorist acts which have been perpetrated by the leftwing in El Salvador because many of these go unreported in the press or we do not take very much note of them in the press and they may have been in a small article.

I might say that all of the information that will be presented today in the special order has been obtained from press accounts in this country or press accounts in El Salvador, and we have documented in all instances where we got the information.

Certainly in the controversy surrounding U.S. policy in Central America, much of this Congress debate has tended to focus on El Salvador and its Government. Ongoing concern for the irresponsible actions of the rightwing death squads has served as the focal point of much of Congress attention on this issue, and rightfully so. Universal approbation and opposition to these politically motivated murders has never wavered, whether it be in Congress or in the administration. Furthermore, congressional opposition to these actions has been reflected in the multitude of conditions that we have imposed in this House on the aid which is sent to El Salvador, most of which is designed to end these rightwing killings.

However, the level of concern for the equally reprehensible killings by the leftist elements in El Salvador has gone largely unreported and unnoticed in the United States. Congress, particularly our more liberal Members of this body, has almost completely ignored this issue, thus skewing our debate in this House to a one-sided consideration of the problems in Central America.

Today in this special order we hope to document from a variety of sources exactly why the U.S. support for democratic institutions in El Salvador is so important. Our aid, particularly our military aid, performs two functions: One, it limits the activity of the rightwing elements, and two, equally important—and this is something we do not remember and we ought to pause and consider today—it is instrumental in protecting those people in El Salvador who have a love for democracy and want a life free from the unrestrained violence not only of the right but of the left.

As this special order will indicate, the leftist guerrillas in El Salvador have waged a continuing campaign of terror, economic sabotage, political assassination, and simple murder, all for the purpose of terrifying and intimidating the people of El Salvador into accepting their revolutionary rhetoric.

This list of murders, political assassinations, bombings, and other terrorist acts speaks for itself:

On April 1, 1984, a former member of the Central Election Council and conservative journalist was murdered. His name was Rafael Hasbun. He was 56. He was shot seven times as he entered his office. The responsibility for this murder was claimed by the Revoluntary Workers Party, as documented by the New York Times on April 2, 1984, page 11.

On March 15, 1984, a retired army colonel was shot and killed, and his 4-year-old daughter was wounded. His name was Tito Adalberto Rosa, an official of the Salvadoran Authentic Institutional Party. And this was reported in the Washington Post on March 16, 1984.

A day earlier, March 14, 1984, a National Assembly deputy was killed. He was serving a member of their Congress, I suppose. Hector Flores Larin of the conservative National Conciliation Party was shot after he stepped out of his car in front of a law school where he was to take an examination. How ironic that a member of the General Assembly going to a law school examination, one who believes in the rule of law, would be shot dead in his tracks on his way to that examination by leftist Marxist Communists. He was not shot just once, he was shot seven times in the face just to make sure he was dead. Responsibility was claimed by the Clara Elizabeth Ramirez Front, or the Workers Revolutionary Movement. This was reported in the Washington Post on March 15, 1984.

On March 10, 1984, a Constituent Assembly deputy was killed—another one. Roberto Ismael Ayala, who was 47 years old, was shot at a point-blank range as he walked from his house to his car to drive his daughter to school. This was reported in the Washington Post.

On March 1, 1984, a judge was killed. He was Jose Montenegro, an Arena sympathizer, who had presided over the trials of hundreds of leftist guerrillas as a military judge. And this was reported in La Prensa Grafica in San Salvador on March 2.

Earlier in the year, on February 27, 10 civilians and 8 soldiers were killed. One of the dead was an 8-year-old child, and another was 14. Leftwing guerrillas attacked two trains near San Antonio Grande, 25 miles north of San Salvador. This was reported in the Washington Post on February 29.

On January 27, an Arena legislator was killed. He was Ricardo Arnoldo Pohl, 35 years old, who was elected in March 1982 to the National Constituent Assembly. Gunmen halted his car in El Salvador. Responsibility was claimed by the Clara Elizabeth Ramirez Front. This was reported by the New York Times on January 30.

In December 1983, a former National Confederation of Workers director was assassinated. Salvador "Bobby" Jimenez Molina was assassinated by the Popular Liberation Front. And again, how ironic that it should be called the Popular Liberation Front when apparently the results of this weekend's elections indicate that there is absolutely no popularity for the leftwing in El Salvador.

The Department of State Country Human Rights Reports for 1983—February 19, 1984—reported and documented this assassination.

On July 9, 1983, 13 members of the civil defense force and 2 civilians were killed in Nueva Granada by rebel forces, as reported by the New York Times on July 11.

On July 13, 1983, the Rio Lempa Executive Commission powerplant was attacked, and this was reported in El Mundo, a newspaper in San Salvador.

On June 9, 1983, seven persons were killed during a guerrilla attack on a military base in San Vincente and a bread factory in San Salvador. This was reported in Panama City on June 9.

Mr. Speaker, at this time, I yield to a Member who has spoken up on the floor of the House before on the atrocities of the left in El Salvador and in Central America, the gentleman from California (Mr. LUNGREN).

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Speaker, following through on what the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. COLEMAN) has said, throughout 1983, the leftist guerrillas in El Salvador continued their murderous action, killing, among numerous others, an American. In addition to these assassinations, the guerrillas tried to destroy the economic infrastructure of El Salvador by targeting factories, power stations, roads, and bridges.

Before I begin to delineate these things, I think it is important for us to realize what happened this past weekend in El Salvador where elections took place again within a very short period of time. And this was in contrast, of course, to what is happening in Nicaragua. In addition, it is a tremendous compliment to the El Salvadoran people and their heartfelt wants and needs in the area of true democracy that they would vote in the tremendous numbers they did this past weekend, despite the fact of direct death threats from these guerrillas who claim that all they want to do is speak for the people.

Mr. Speaker, in June 1983, the Arena deputy and former labor leader was assassinated. Rene Barrios, one of the founders of the National Federation of Workers, was assassinated, not by the right but by the Popular Liberation Front.

The citation for this is the Department of State Country Human Rights Reports for 1983—February 19, 1984.

Leftists attacked the Oromantique coffee processing plant on May 26, 1983. That was reported in El Mundo, May 26, 1983, edition in San Salvador.

That same day, the U.S. military adviser was assassinated; Navy Lt. Comdr. Albert A. Schaufelberger, who was attached to the American Embassy, was shot three times in the head while he sat waiting in his car for his girl friend. Responsibility for that was claimed by Clara Elizabeth Ramirez Front. That was reported in the Washington Post on May 27, 1983, as well as the Washington Post on June 1, 1983.

Forty-two government soldiers were executed by rebels after they had surrendered to those same rebels. This was reported in the Washington Post on June 4, 1983. The incident occurred on March 25, 1983.

On March 10 of that same year, guerrillas placed several bombs at the Montealegre coffee processing plant in Chinameca, San Miguel, destroying the plant completely.

On May 8, 1983, 16 civil defense fighters were executed by guerrillas. Civilians were also executed at that time, including Mr. Avalos, 61 years of age. All had, according to the article that appeared in the Los Angeles Times and the Washington Post, all had surrendered to the guerrillas prior to their execution. That was reported in the Los Angeles Times on May 12, 1983, and the Washington Post on June 1, 1983.

Guerrillas paralyzed all traffic along the railway between San Diego and San Vicente, and from El Coyolito to Valle San Juan. This was reported in El Mundo in San Salvador on May 2, 1983, as having occurred on the previous day.

Carolos Hernandez Hernandez was shot to death in his home in Cara Sucia Canton, San Francisco. This was reported on April 11, 1983.

Vincente Rivas Gonzalez was killed in San Diequito, El Paisnal, in San Salvador, after being robbed of 3,000 colones and a .38-caliber revolver. This was reported on April 11, 1983.

Then on April 29, 1983, the Liberation Front destroyed the El Delirio electricity substation and dynamited the bridge at the entrance of Santa Rosa de Lima. This was reported in La Prensa, San Salvador, on that date, on pages 4 and 31.

Now, obviously, Mr. Speaker, this is not an exhaustive list of all the instances of killings and assassinations and destruction of economic infrastructure throughout El Salvador during that period of time. No, Mr. Speaker, it is merely a recitation of some of the events to try and bring some balance into the comments that are often made on the floor and sometimes unfortunately what appears in the news media as to what is ailing the El Salvadoran society.

We often hear of these atrocities, and there are atrocities committed by the right, but we seldom hear of the atrocities committed by the left. We seldom see that the atrocities of the left are very political in nature, with an attempt to try to blackmail a whole population against the exercise of their democratic processes. No one on this floor would suggest that El Salvador has blossomed into full democracy and has the full fruits of the democratic tree, but nonetheless, it seems to all of us that if we are going to look at what happened in El Salvador we must recognize that there is brutality taking place and that now much of that brutality is directed against the first emergence of democracy in action down there.

Mr. Speaker, I would just like to thank the gentleman from Missouri for taking this special order and allowing us to bring this to the attention of our colleagues and the American people.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Well, I thank the gentleman for his contribution and his leadership. In fact, I know that he might have even further detailed accounts later on in this special order to bring to our attention.

The hope was to present these left-wing atrocities in a chronological order, but because of demands made upon the time of the various Members who want to participate, they may be taken out of sequence today, but all of them are detailed accounts, accurate accounts of things that happened.

Mr. Speaker, I yield now to the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. LIVINGSTON), because I know the gentleman is quite concerned about this.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman from Missouri for calling this special order and commend him for trying to illustrate what a serious problem we have down in El Salvador and throughout Central America. So many times we see the focus of this House of Representatives and the other body and the U.S. media calling attention to the atrocities which go on certainly on behalf of the right in El Salvador and in other places, but they just simply do not focus on what is happening at the behest of those who are deliberately trying to bring force and violence throughout Central America, and take it over on behalf of the people that run the Soviet Union, Cuba, and Nicaragua.

I think it is important that we focus on some of the atrocities of the left. We cannot overlook those wrongs that are committed by the extreme right, absolutely not. They are wrong, and we have to admit them freely, and we have to deal with them. We have to try to suppress them. The U.S. Government is working around the clock to try to bring them under control. This administration has pushed the Government in El Salvador to change those errors. We accept that all is not well with the Government in El Salvador over the last few years, but we are working to change those wrongs. If the Government of El Salvador does not clean up its act, there is no doubt that our colleagues in the U.S. Congress will attempt to cut them off and pull the purse strings and not fund them; but that is not in the best interests of the people of El Salvador.

I think to illustrate that fact, simply look at what happened in the province of Morazan. As a part of the activities of the "liberating army," the group foisted by the Marxist movement that is trying to impose its will by force throughout Central America, that liberating army decided to poison the water supply of the people of Morazan, cut off its electricity, and blow up all the bridges to make escape impossible.

Now, just imagine how glad the people of Morazan were for this brave and enlightened act by people who aspire to be their leaders, not by election, but through the force of violence and intimidation.

In keeping with the theme set forth by the gentleman from Missouri, let me also illustrate a number of other incidents that happened in the year 1981 throughout El Salvador.

March 25, 1981, the U.S. Embassy was attacked for the third time in 3 weeks; terrorists opened fire with bazookas and grenades; two persons traveling in a bus were injured. The People's Liberation Forces claimed the credit for that act. Now, those are people who want to rule El Salvador. That all is from Acan, which is the newspaper in Panama City, dated March 25, 1981, and Latin in Buenos Aires, on the same date.

On March 21 of 1981, there was an attempted killing of Interior Minister Ovidio Hernandez while he was driving through the center of San Salvador. There was an explosive projectile thrown at the car's windows. That is from the French Press Agency in Paris on that same date.

On March 18, 1981, subversives poisoned the potable water supply sources in Jocoaitique, in Morazan Province, and cut telephone and telegraph lines. They toppled electric towers, blew up supports and bridges with dynamite, and they left the area entirely cut off and without vital supplies. That is according to El Diario de Hoy in San Salvador of that same date.

On March 6, 1981, the residents were executed when extremists occupied the village of San Lorenzo. They were accused of collaborating with the armed forces, so they were killed. That is according to El Mundo, San Salvador, March 6, 1981.

On March 5, 1981, the day before, a local commander was executed when Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front guerrillas occupied the town of El Jipijal, Santa Ana, and that is according to Radio Venceremos, March 7, 1981.

March 4, again the day before that, Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front forces blew up the bridge over the San Salvador-Chalatenango highway at the Limon detour. That is according to the French Press Agency in Paris, March 4, 1981.

On February 24, 1981, 20 people were killed in an ambush of a truck by the leftists near Suchitoto, according to the French Press Agency again in Paris, February 26, 1981.

On February 23, 1981, eight civilians were killed near Santa Ana by leftists for apparently not paying a war tax, extortion, according to the LATIN, Buenos Aires, February 23, 1981.

On February 12, 1981, 100 guerrillas took over the towns of El Casco de la Hacienda and La Ceiba, and burned 25 peasant homes, nice activities by the people that would take over that country by force, and who do not particularly care to participate in the free and open elections that have just taken place in El Salvador. That is according to ACAN, Panama City, dated February 12, 1981.

Finally, on February 9, 1981, 18 people were killed and 24 were wounded when guerrillas attacked, with contact bombs, a bus carrying tobacco, vegetables, and clothing. Again that is according to ACAN, Panama City, February 10, 1981, and La Prensa Grafica of San Salvador, February 10, 1981.

If the gentleman will indulge me, when I was in San Vicente only a month ago for the elections, watching the people stream to the polls, we were in the middle of the town and it was in the square, and the polling precinct was on one end of the square and as I looked over my shoulder on the other end of the square I saw several hundred people gathering on either side of the street. And as they gathered, the first coffin went by, and then a second, and then a third, and so forth.

What had happened there was that those people were going to bury at least 8, because I saw 8 coffins, but as many as 25 or 30 soldiers who were ambushed by the leftist squard guerrillas of El Salvador the day before in that region. And they were carrying their young men off to the burial ground.

Death is an unfortunate and daily occurrence in that tragic area. And there are some in this country that would just as soon let them live with their unpleasantness and totally withdraw U.S. support from the people of El Salvador and let them fight among themselves and not worry about it.

What I am concerned about, if the gentleman would indulge me, is simply we cannot close our eyes to the unpleasantness, for it simply is not going to go away. We have got to do something about it.

And I would rather not be sending our soldiers down there. What I would really prefer to be doing is simply sending them the economic wherewithal so that they could try to protect themselves against these atrocities.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. The gentleman has indicated in his eloquence the types of problems that exist, and he has detailed in 1981 the leftwing terrorist activities.

Can you imagine going through 3 years of terrorist activities and people being killed indiscriminately, women and children, and going through this process? It is amazing that the El Salvadoran Government has existed. And I think the point is that this weekend they just had an election and can you imagine us having an election after 3 years of open hostilities in this country, and to be able to stream to the ballot boxes as they did this weekend? It is truly amazing.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The people go to the polls, of course, to protest this type of violence and attempt to guide their country through the processes of democracy. Unfortunately, when you have extremists that will not participate in the elections, it becomes hardly possible. They have been facing this kind of activity for 5 years. In the process, the unemployment level has gone from about 7 percent in 1979 to well over 40 percent today. The per capita income has declined to about 30 percent of what it was 4 or 5 years ago.

The people who are really suffering are the innocent people of El Salvador, all because of a small band of unsupported extremists who want to take over the country by force rather than by the ballot box.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. The gentleman, like this gentleman, had a little difficulty pronouncing some of the names in this special order. They are foreign names to us and they are of Spanish heritage. They are not the language we speak here on the floor.

But I think we all in the United States ought to recognize that this is not some far-away country. It may be a different language, but it is a very close country. The people of El Salvador, the country of El Salvador is probably closer to the gentleman's district in Louisiana than my people are to our Nation's Capital in Missouri.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The gentleman's point is well taken. As a matter of fact, I have made that point frequently on my trips back home. We in New Orleans are closer to the people in San Salvador, the capital of El Salvador, then we are to the people in New York or Los Angeles. And, of course, you can walk from San Salvador to any place in the United States if you had to. They are our neighbors. Whatever happens to them could ultimately happen to us, and so it is very much in our interest to make sure that they get the protection and the peace and the freedom that they are looking for so that we do not ultimately suffer the same kind of terrorism that we are illustrating here today.

I commend the gentleman for his special order.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. I thank the gentleman from Louisiana for his contribution.

Mr. CLINGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. I will now call on another gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. CLINGER), who has been very involved and very concerned about leftwing terrorists attacks on the people of El Salvador.

Mr. CLINGER. I thank the gentleman from Missouri very much for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I would just like to carry on with detailing some of the events, some of the acts of terrorism that have occurred. I think the point we are making here is that this is not some recent or limited activity. This has been going on over a long period of time.

I think, Mr. Speaker, I would just once like to have those who have opposed the administration's policies in El Salvador to tell us exactly what they would do and how things could be better for the people of El Salvador in specific terms rather than in generalized rhetoric.

As we have heard from the previous speakers, my colleagues who spoke earlier, bombs and murder and terrorism are useful and frequent tools of the FMLM. I have documented evidence of additional acts of terrorism, more killings and bombings by the FMLN which I am going to read into the RECORD in just one moment.

But the point, I think, that we are trying to make, Mr. Speaker, is that we have got to really try to bring a balance to the discussions of our debate over El Salvador, which is heated and emotional. The focus I think is too often on the problems which the current government, and never mind what current government, never mind the realities of the existing situation, but substituting one government that must answer to us, or that does answer to us, for another that listens only to the Soviet Union is certainly not going to help the United States. And, more importantly, it is certainly not going to help the average citizen in El Salvador.

Mr. Speaker, I deal a lot with economic development in this body and I am very sensitive to the direct connection that exists between the quality and extent of our infrastructure, highways, bridges, power stations, et cetera, and the ability of a society to have economic growth, to create jobs and grow. There is a very direct linkage between the quality of that infrastructure and the ability to have economic growth. And one of the greatest tragedies that I have perceived in El Salvador is that we are destroying the economic infrastructure that makes any kind of economic growth possible in that country.

We have seen a sustained, systematic campaign to make it impossible for economic growth to take place. And it just seems to me that it is very deliberate, and those that say that the problem in Central America, and specifically in El Salvador, is not a military problem but is one of poverty, that is true. Poverty is a very real factor that the Communist Marxists-Leninists are counting on to bring themselves to power. And they are making it almost impossible for any other kind of regime to succeed.

So I think that from my point of view the most really reprehensible thing they are doing there is to destroy the ability of that country to grow.

But let me just mention that perhaps one of the best examples of that was on February 6 of 1981 when a high powered bomb explosion destroyed the Delirio Bridge and damaged the national electric power station and left the entire eastern part of El Salvador without power, and that was reported in ACAN, Panama City, on February 6, 1981. And this, as you have heard other speakers say, was not an isolated incident. They have made a point of targeting those power stations and infrastructure that would make it impossible for growth to take place.

On November 3, 1981, an international fair manager was killed by Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front members as he was traveling in downtown San Salvador toward the fairgrounds. That is reported by Radio Cadena YSKL, San Salvador on November 3, 1980.

On October 10, 1980, the secretary of the executive committee of the party, Melvin Rigoberto Orellana was assassinated by terrorists identified as belonging to the Farabundo Marti Popular Liberation Front.

And on July 3, 1980, the People's Revolutionary Army claimed support for the murder of members of the Nationalist Conciliation Party, Nationalist Democratic Organization, and the local commanders in Morazan and San Miguel; again reported by Radio Cadena Central, in San Salvador on July 30.

Then on June 23, 1980, 215 persons were threatened with death. This was threatened by the ultra leftist armed forces of National Resistance, who released a list of threatened which included three former presidents of El Salvador:

Fidel Sanchez Hernandez, Arturo Armando Molina, and Carlos Humberto Romero; as well as junta members Napoleon Duarte and Antonia Morales Erlich, and on April 14, 1980, the guerrillas occupied Soyanpango, near San Salvador in clashes with the army troops at the time Mayor Jose Estrada Mayorga was caught in the crossfire and killed.

On April 1, 1980, the Guatemalan Ambassador, Carlos Lemus Gallardo, was attacked in front of the Salvadoran high school, and the Revolutionary Party of Central American Workers claimed responsibility as reported again by the French Press Agency on April 1, 1980.

February 14, 1980, leftwing militants took over the office of the Agriculture and Livestock Development Bank; 600 employees were taken hostage by the Salvadoran Christian Peasants Federation and the Farmworkers' Union, both belonging to the People's Revolutionary Party, as reported in ACAN in Panama City.

On November 28, Mr. Speaker, Jose Guzman, former mayor of San Martin, was machinegunned to death by Farabundo Marti Popular Liberation Forces as he was driving toward San Salvador with his 13-year-old son, who was slightly injured.

Mr. Speaker, this is a litany of terror, or horror, of murder that is too long, far too long, but I think it is extremely important that we present this litany; that we detail these events which, as the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. COLEMAN) has pointed out, have taken place over not 6 months, 1 year, but over a 5-year period. And I think that it is incumbent upon us to attempt to redress the balance here; that this is a situation where we have seen systematic, deliberate, ongoing acts of terrorism to try to disrupt and overturn the Government in El Salvador.

So I would just like to add my commendation to the gentleman from Missouri for bringing this special order in order that we may put into the RECORD some of these events which are so tragic.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania for his contribution and the points that he made about the destruction of the infrastructure as well as loss of lives by the left, the Communist-Marxists in El Salvador. He has been certainly a Member who has contributed much to this body on this issue. We look forward to having him and his advice as we debate these issues, probably this week here in this House, later on this week, when various bills are proposed for foreign aid and also for the appropriations bills that will be coming through.

Mr. Speaker, leftist guerrillas have systematically terrorized the people of El Salvador. And while the most immediate threat has been to the lives of many innocent people, the leftists have also targeted the local economies of these peasant villages, clearly attempting to make more people homeless and jobless.

Because when people are homeless and jobless they get very frustrated and they get ripe for revolution. That is what they are hoping, these Communists and leftists down there. They do not want to settle things at the ballot box, but they do want to shoot people. They want to provide terrorist activities and an atmosphere of intimidation in order to convince these people of El Salvador that their method and their way is right.

If you are going to intimidate the whole country then you will have a lot of people who are afraid to speak up and come forward.

That did not and has not happened yet. This weekend again, I emphasize, the people of El Salvador streamed to the voting booths to cast their vote for their democracy, for their own president. They decided to go through the ballot box and not the bullet. I think it is obvious this type of activity is the only recourse that the rebel guerrillas, the Nicaraguan-supplied front in El Salvador, this is the only success they have had; these terrorists activities, they have had no success where it counts, at the ballot box.

I would like to continue detailing these atrocities of the left. On April 18, 1983, FMLM guerrillas attacked a La Paz electrical substation and blew it up; April 17, 1983, the guerrillas attracked the San Sebastian Mining Complex where 400 guerrillas attacked the richest gold mine in El Salvador, killing in the process six national guards. And once they were in control of that facility, the guerrillas placed dynamite charges and set fire to the complex.

What happened? Hundreds of jobs were lost as well as the loss of those six guards. They set fire to the complex. Those jobs were lost for many months. The mine will be out of service for years. This was reported in El Mundo, San Salvador, April 18.

On April 10, 1983, a civil defense chief and deputy chief were murdered; residents of the town of El Pajal, San Juan Nonualco, witnessed as Rodil Calderon and Rodolfo Herrera were put up against a wall and shot by extremists who had taken over the town; the extremists stole money, food, and jewelry.

This was reported in La Prensa Grafica in San Salvador on the 11th of April.

Same day, 200 subversives attacked the town of Comatepeque, San Pedro, and killed 3 civil defense guards and the son of the local commander. They looted homes and stores. This is reported in El Diario de Hoy, San Salvador, on April 11.

Two days before that, guerrillas occupied the town of Cancasque for two and a half days, killed 12 civilians, while there in those two and a half days, reported in El Mundo, San Salvador.

April 4, 1983, seven people were killed including the mayor. Guerrillas occupied four townships including Guadalupe, Verapaz, San Lorenzo, and San Cayetano; in San Cayetano Istepeque, they dragged Mayor Eleazar Cruz, 55, from his home to the municipal building and shot and killed him. This is the mayor of that town. Certainly not any way to conduct an election, but these people are not interested in elections; they are interested in killing people who are in positions of control. This was reported in Latin, Buenos Aires.

March 13, 1983, guerrillas sabotaged powerlines in San Salvador and caused a blackout not only in San Salvador but also in Usulutan, San Miguel, La Union, and Morazan. French Press Agency of Paris reported this on March 14.

February 16, 1983, guerrillas took over seven radio stations and forced the operators to air guerrilla transmissions. This was reported February 17, 1983.

Previous month in January 26, 1983, three civilians were shot to death when the Salvadoran urban guerrillas attacked guards at the northern section of the San Carlos garrison in northern San Salvador. ACAN, Panama City and other press reports on that day.

January 26, 1983, Rebel groups destroyed two high-voltage transformer poles in the southern part of San Ana, 65km west of San Salvador. Reported on Radio Cadena YSKL, San Salvador.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to call upon the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. WALKER) who also has articulated here on the floor his opposition and concern of the leftist movement in Central America and ask him if he has any remarks he would like to make at this time.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman from Missouri for yielding to me and also for taking this special order during which we have an opportunity to point out that the terrorism of the left in El Salvador has been a major story of the violence in that country.

All too often what we hear is the report to the human rights organizations that are pointing out, justifiably so, that large numbers of people are losing their lives to terrorists in El Salvador.

What so often is not reported, however, is that much of that terrorism comes from the left. It is true that the rightwing death squads operate and they are a horrendous example of what has gone wrong in that country. Their terrorism needs to be exposed. We hear these reports from the human rights group. It is usually always attributed to rightwing death squads and we have largely ignored this whole pattern of leftwing terrorism.

Yet in 1983 we had a banner year for terrorism, economic sabotage, and political assassinations by the radical left in El Salvador.

Largely unnoticed by the American press were the growing number of innocent civilians—men, women, and children—that were falling victim to this increasingly indiscriminate violence perpetrated by the left.

In January 1983, a whole series of incidents took place that were reported by the press within that country and around the world.

For example, the leftist rebels detonated a coastal highway bridge over the Lempa River. That was reported by Radio Venceremos in January 1983.

An important power tower was destroyed near San Felipe. That was reported in El Mundo.

Near San Martin, the Liberation Front rebels, the left, attacked a bus, killing one young girl and injuring seven.

One only has to wonder what kind of people attack buses with innocent civilians aboard them, including young children and end up killing a young girl as a part of their political vendetta within the country.

The terrorists also destroyed a railroad bridge near San Miguel by attaching dynamite to that bridge.

Terrorists attacked the National Telecommunications Administration and Civil Defense Headquarters. That was reported in El Diario de Hoy in San Salvador.

The rebels sabotaged high-tension wires that provide electricity to several towns. That was reported by Radio Candena in San Salvador.

The National Liberation Front rebels blew up the Salvador Beltran Luna bridge over the Torola River in Morazen. That was reported by Radio Venceremos.

The Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front rebels occupied the town of San Francisco Morazan. That was reported by Radio Venceremos.

The rebels also attacked military posts in several towns on January 11, 1983, and that was reported by the Havana International Service on January 12.

An ARENA deputy was attacked, ARENA being the rightwing party of the country. A deputy, Col. Alberto Jarquin, 64, was attacked while driving home with his son. An explosive device was thrown at his car. That was reported by Radio Cadena in January 1983.

In other words, a whole series of incidents, acts of terror against the economy of the country, acts of terror specifically against the people of the country carried out completely by leftwing terrorists.

It is a most disturbing pattern and the kind of thing that we need to be aware of when we hear talk that the United States ought to pull the rug out from underneath the Government because these people, these terrorists, being supported by the Cubans, by the Soviets, by the Nicaraguans, they are being funded to carry out just these kinds of acts in El Salvador. The purpose is very clear, the overthrow of the society in El Salvador which is at least attempting to make some moves toward a more democratization and ultimately freedom for the people.

I thank the gentleman.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. I thank the gentleman for his contribution to our special order. He has certainly hit it right on the head in his statements about the terrorist acts that he detailed to us here in January 1983. All of them that he mentioned were all within 1 month, any one of which would, in most places in the world, would certainly be the major event for many, many months, he detailed many of them all in the same month of January 1983.

Mr. WALKER. If the gentleman will yield, when you look down through the list what you find is that all of them took place in about a 16-day period. So that it is really a 2-week period we are talking about. All of things that I detailed took place within a 2-week period in a country as small as El Salvador. I would submit that if a series of accidents of that type all attributable to one group of terrorists took place in a country as big as the United States in a 2-week period that we would be taking all kinds of action to try to control that kind of terrorism within our own country.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. This was not too far removed, I think calendar-wise, if memory serves me correctly, that we were debating here on the floor of the House how we were going to put a fence up from Nicaragua and El Salvador to keep all these arms coming in that end up killing people, we were going to erect a fence. Of course we never did anything about it. It was probably at the same time that these people were being killed, was it not?

Mr. WALKER. The gentleman is absolutely correct.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. I thank the gentleman.

The gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. LIVINGSTON) has returned and has, I believe, some additional detailing accounts that he would like to share with the rest of us.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is important to consider, that the people that we are talking about here are real people. These are not things that happened on television. These are not things that happened to characters in some play. What we are describing here are events that happened to real human beings, people just like ourselves. They may speak Spanish instead of English, but they are people just as we would meet on the street or have in our homes. They may be relatives of ours. As a matter of fact, they are neighbors of ours.

Many were not involved in any special activity. They were not involved in politics or protests. Some were at soccer matches, some were in churches, some were in their very homes; some in their respective towns.

Illustrative of the types of atrocities that we have already described are some additional incidents.

On April 3, 1982, a deputy of the ARENA Party, which participated in the elections, which tried to contribute to democracy, his name was David Joaquin Quinteros. He had just been elected deputy and he was shot from a car and seriously wounded in the head. He died in the hospital. That according to the French news agency in Paris, April 4, 1982.

On April 22, the same month, same year, the FMLN occupied the town of Sociedad, 12 kilometers east of San Francisco Gotera, the capital of the Morazan Province. That occupation of course took place without benefit of elections, according to the Manaqua Domestic Service of that date.

On April 3, Reyes Romero, age 35, was killed by men carrying different weapons. They shot him three times in front of a store and left a sign stating that he had been executed for being an informer, according to La Prensa Grafica on May 2, 1982.

On May 5, a powerplant was dynamited by terrorists in the village of Tierra Virgen, outside of San Martin, La Palma and it caused a blackout. Now that happens day in and day out. When I was down there it happened at least three or four times. But that particular incident was reported by Radio Venceremos on May 12, 1982.

On July 15, 1982, the President of the International Trade Fair, Nicolas Nassar, was murdered by leftist guerrillas. The Department of State Country Reports on Human Rights Practices for 1982 reported that in February 1983.

On September 1, 1982, three peasants were killed; Ricardo Escobar and Roberto and Maria Luz Romero were killed and 1 child, Marcos Arevalo, was injured during a terrorist attack in Jucuaran, Usulutan Province, according to Radio Cadena YSKL, in San Salvador on September 1, 1982.

On October 8, 1982, six policemen were killed. The chief of police in Berlin, in Usulutan Province, and five policemen were all killed in an ambush, according to El Mundo, in San Salvador, on the next day.

On October 15, 1982, 10 bombs exploded in San Salvador. Bombs were placed in telephone boxes and utility poles. They disrupted the telephone and power service. One bomb went off 200 meters from the U.S. Embassy, according to ACAN in Panama City on that date.

And then on December 6, 1982, 1 person was killed and over 100 people were kidnaped. Fans at a soccer match were kidnaped by guerrilla groups in San Sebastian. One person ran and was fired upon and killed. Minors, elderly people, and women were in the group of people kidnaped, according to Radio Cadena YSKL, in San Salvador, on December 6, 1982.

And, finally, on December 21, 1982, rebel harassment led to the suspension of coffee harvesting in the provinces of Tecatan and California, according to Radio Cadena YSKL.

So, there you see murder and sabotage in a deliberate attempt to kill innocent people and sabotage the economy, constantly blowing up bridges and killing off labor union leaders. That is the type of thing being done by these people who take justice into their own hands. I call it "justice," but that is a poor word for it because, in fact, this is murderous activity of the worst sort. It is total destruction of democratic processes, and it really is incumbent upon us as citizens of the United States, just a few miles to the north of these innocent people, to stand with those who believe in peace and freedom and try to offset the threat that is constantly being imposed on a day-to-day basis by these murderous rebels who have no concern for innocent life.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

I wonder what sometimes it takes to jar the American people out of some of the apathy that they have about what is happening in Central America. The gentleman mentions 100 people being kidnaped at a soccer game. Can you imagine what would happen in New Orleans, in the gentleman's district, in his city, if 100 people at a New Orleans Saints game were kidnaped? This is something that would be not only unheard of but the reaction by the American people would be tremendous against that. But the same American people feel that, well, it does not happen in our country, so we do not even hardly take note of it.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Well, of course, the gentleman is right. It is not universal among the people of this country, but there are those, including those who are political leaders in this Nation, who would close their eyes and close their doors and their hearts and their minds to what is going on in Central America. I just cannot say it enough. I think if we continue to turn away from the violence that is plaguing our neighbors to the south, some day that same violence will plague us.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. Speaker, at this time I yield to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. GINGRICH), who I think will have some contributions to be made at this time.

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman for yielding, and I appreciate his taking the time to put in the RECORD this sort of thing, because it is only by, really, laying the base of truth so that people can see where the terrorism comes from, where the weapons come from, and what is happening in Central America, that people can begin to appreciate how much trouble freedom is in our hemisphere and why it is important that we be involved.

The leftist guerrillas in El Salvador are engaging in the same kind of terror tactics that terrorist groups around the world employ in their attempt to topple the young democracy currently in El Salvador. and it is little wonder, given the immense amount of military support provided them by their Sandinista, Cuban, Soviet, Libyan, Bulgarian, and PLO patrons.

I might mention, by the way, that many of the very Members who on this floor will condemn the Palestinian Liberation Organization for its terrorism in Israel will then just shrug their shoulders at terrorism that is taking place in El Salvador.

Similarly, many of the Members who stand on this floor and say they support the freedom fighters in Afghanistan will turn their backs when the people of El Salvador are trying to fight for their freedom.

It is the Communist nations I just mentioned, Nicaragua, Cuba, the Soviet Union, Bulgaria, who are the most responsibile for providing weapons and, in the case of Nicaragua, for providing training grounds, so that the terrorists can learn and be prepared to engage in killings in El Salvador.

I would like to enter into the RECORD some examples of killings in El Salvador.

On January 4, 1982, nine terrorist bombs exploded in San Salvador. Buildings attacked were the social housing fund, the homes of Capt. Roberto Alfonso Mendoza Portillo, Cesar Augusto Miraflor, the magistrate Rafael Sanchez Rodriguez, the Judith Aleman family home, the home of Manuel Rene Villacorta, and the shirt factory owned by Judith Aleman. Those were all bombed on January 4.

And I think American citizens have to ask themselves: What would our reaction be if in our National Capital or in our State Capital or in our county seat on 1 day nine terrorist bombs were to hit a social housing fund building, seven homes and a local factory? How would that disrupt and terrorize our society?

On January 12, 1982, terrorists killed four guards, one sergeant, and kidnaped children. Terrorists attacked Jocaitique, north of Morazan, ransacked and destroyed several homes.

On January 21, 1982, Communist terrorists killed two men they suspected to be death squad collaborators in the Sarti company.

On February 3, 1982, 400 people were killed.

And again I think every American citizen should ask themselves: How would you feel, how would you react, would you be afraid, would you be courageous, what would your attitude be if 500 terrorists attacked and murdered the entire population of your town? Yet on February 3, 1982, 500 terrorists attacked and murdered the entire population of Nueva Trinidad. Four hundred people were killed. Terrorists shot at random and set fire to everything in their path. Fifty men were kidnaped.

On February 10, 1982, guerrillas attacked downtown San Salvador with bazookas, damaging the largest telecommunications center in the country.

Imagine that if here in Washington ABC or NBC or CBS or the AT&T building were to be hit by guerrillas, and then you have some sense of how desperate the fighting gets and how vicious the guerrillas are.

On February 22, 1982, leftwing terrorists blew up two 115,000-volt towers of the Cerron Grande line in the Guaycume area.

Now, let me just say that we are talking about a situation in which the country is trying to survive, it is trying to have jobs, it is trying to keep its economy going, while guerrillas are systematically blowing up the primary facilities for electricity, for communication, and for transportation.

For example, on February 24, 1982, terrorists blew up a bridge on the coastal road near El Coyelito.

Again, I would say to all Americans: The next time you drive over a road on your way home, the next time you drive on a road, on the interstate, and you pass over a bridge, ask yourself: What would my neighborhood be like if that bridge were blown up today or tomorrow or the next day by guerrillas? What would happen in my town? What would happen to our economy, what would happen to our chance for a decent life if every couple weeks the guerrillas took out another bridge? And we can begin to appreciate the terror and the savagery that is being imposed on the decent, freedom-loving people of El Salvador.

On February 27, 1982, terrorists attacked Roberto d'Aubuisson on the road from Santo Domingo to San Sebastian.

Now, d'Aubuisson is an important enough political leader in El Salvador that the terrorists attacking him would be the equivalent of GARY HART or Walter Mondale, for example, being attacked by terrorists while they tried to campaign. Imagine our reaction if terrorists were that frequently and deeply involved in American society.

On March 14, 1982, guerrillas dynamited and completely destroyed the Chapeltique bridge over the Chapeltique River in northern San Miguel.

On March 28, 1982, the mayor and local garrison commander were shot. The mayor of Villa Socieded, Morazan Province, Humberto Blanco, and Comdr. Jose Perla were murdered by terrorists trying to prevent people from voting in the elections.

Imagine that every time we had a primary—last Saturday we had a primary in Texas—people were being shot going to the primary. Imagine, as I said a minute ago, here on February 24 and again on March 14 bridges were being blown up. I think that the gentleman from Missouri brings to everyone's attention the fact that the real cause of the terrorist violence in El Salvador is directly tied to the Communist aid they are getting through Nicaragua, it is directly tied to the Soviet Union and Bulgaria in Cuba, and that we in this country this week have an obligation to look honestly at the two amendments that are going to be offered to the foreign aid bill. We need to face up to our duties, as Franklin Roosevelt taught us, to be a good neighbor; that we have to be at least as concerned about El Salvador, 2 days' drive from the Texas border, as Harry Truman was about Greece, a long way from America; we have to be committed to allowing and protecting and helping the forces of freedom win so that folks who had an election on Sunday, an election which has not occurred in Communist Nicaragua, has not occurred in Communist Cuba, has not occurred in Communist Soviet Union, but in El Salvador the people had their second election this year, and it was a decent, honest election, and they deserve help from their neighbors in the United States.

I thank the gentleman for holding this special order.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. I thank the gentleman for his important contribution, trying to bring home exactly these cold, calculated facts that have been distilled from the reports in the media and to make them compassionate and to bring home exactly what it means and what it would mean to the people of the United States if we had to live under these types of terrorists acts perpetrated by the leftwing and the Marxist Communists in Central America, and El Salvador in particular.

Mr. Speaker, we have brought this special order because we want to not in any sort of way defend the activities of the rightwing death squads. I want to point that out and make that very clear. We are very much opposed to that, as we are to the leftwing death squads.

But the fact of the matter is that the rightwing death squads have gotten so much expression in the press in this country and within the media and in discussion here on the floor that it is almost as if we are tacitly approving of the leftwing when we do not bring up these things. Nobody in this Congress approves of these acts, and nobody in the Congress wants to support them, so I ask all my colleagues to come forward with us to convey a message that condemns both sides who use terrorists activities, who use the bullet instead of the ballot, in El Salvador, and that is right as well as left.

Simply, we are trying to provide an opportunity for people to witness what has gone on and the travesties that have gone on from the left.

Mr. Speaker, I have a few items I would like to express before we wrap up the special in detailed accounts that have occurred in June and May, and April 1981. I will leave those for the RECORD, but let me point out just one. That was March 25, 1981, when the daughter of Jose Napoleon Duarte, the man who many think, by exit polls and otherwise, has either won the election held in El Salvador for President this weekend, or will come very close to winning that election.

His daughter was attacked in March 1981 when her pick-up truck was smashed several times by a car driven by one of these terrorists. I ask anyone in this House whether or not we would have the fortitude, the courage, to go forward with our political agenda, to lead our people, if our families were being attacked as they have been in El Salvador, and say to everybody that the message is that these people have the choice, and they have chosen democracy, with whatever and whoever won yesterday, but the people of El Salvador are living under a tremendous, terrified atmosphere of both right and left, and we, as policymakers and decisionmakers in this House have got to recognize that one is not any worse or any better than the other and we ought to channel our energies and our directions and our legislation so that these people might live in freedom, freedom from both right and leftist terrorist acts.

REPUBLICAN STUDY COMMITTEE REPORT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. GINGRICH) is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, I just want to outline a process that we began this afternoon which, I think, relates directly to the debate on foreign policy this week and which I think will be of some interest to all of the Members of the House and to those who watch the House both in the news media and in the country at large.

This afternoon, in a press conference, the Republican Study Committee released a study done by Frank Gregorsky of statements by key Members of the Congress on foreign policy beginning in 1970. This study indicates quite clearly that there is a systematic pattern of self-deception and of being wrong by which the members of the leftwing of the Democratic Party both in the House and in the Senate managed over a number of years to avoid learning very much out of their errors. When you read this study by Mr. Gregorsky, which the study committee is making available, and you see case after case, starting in Vietnam, then Cambodia and Laos, then in Nicaragua, in Afghanistan, in Angola, today in El Salvador, the same patterns occur over and over and over.

As a consequence, one has to ask the question: How could obviously very bright people be that wrong? How could they fail to understand what was going on, or when they failed to understand, how could they fail to learn from their own failure, because we have now had 14 years of members of the leftwing of the Democratic Party telling us that if only the United States would behave, the world would get better.

It reached, I guess, its peak of being out of touch with reality when at least two members of the leftwing of the Democratic Party said, at the time the Soviet Union shot down the Korean airliner, that it was the fault of the United States that the Soviets had had to shoot down a Korean airliner; that if we were not so aggressive, they would not be so afraid. In fact, one of them said we should be ashamed that we forced the Soviet Union to defend itself by shooting down an innocent Korean airliner.

It takes, I think, a pretty long string of excuses for the Soviet Union to get to a point where you blame the American Government because the Soviet Government shoots down innocent people.

But, in fact, the other case we have had recently is Grenada. When the President of the United States liberated some 800 American students and ended a ruthless butchery of pro-Communist dictatorship which had been imposed in a matter of days because, in fact, the former Maurice Bishop government was trying to get away from the grip of the Soviet-Cuban colony it had become, and they killed Maurice Bishop, in that pattern it is absolutely amazing that there were actually Members of this body, mostly radical Democrats, who got up and said we should impeach Ronald Reagan for kicking out a Communist government.

We have since gotten copies of the material, of the minutes, of the records of the Communist Government of Grenada, because like all governments they had their bureaucracy and they kept their records, and we find when we read the materials, the minutes of the Communist Government of Grenada, that they were, in fact, systematically working with the Soviet Union.

So, when Members of this body go back over to various radical Democrats and say to them, "Now that you know that the Grenadian Government was dealing with the Soviet Union, that it was involved in signing a contract with the Soviet Union, that it was becoming a colony of the Soviet Union, how do you feel now?"

The answer I was given on the floor in a private conversation last Wednesday was, "Those are CIA documents. How do I know they are true?"

Now, if you have somebody who will go so far to excuse the Soviet Union that if the Soviet Union shoots down an airplane it becomes America's fault, and who then, when presented absolute evidence out of Grenada about what was going on, says "Aha, that proves the Central Intelligence Agency probably doctored them," at that point I would suggest to you that you have someone who has a very great difficulty being in touch with reality.

That is the central problem we face in this body: That in fact there is an entire branch of the Democratic Party which has now adopted a radical world view. That radical world view says basically that whatever happens, it is probably America's fault; that the Soviet Union can always be excused; that Communist Governments are always in some way trying to do well whatever they happen to do badly; and that governments that are non-Communist are probably dangerous and are probably bad to their people.

A real test of that world view is coming up in the case, for example, of Costa Rica. Costa Rica has been the most honest, the most democratic, the most decent country in Central America, in all of Latin America, for that matter.

Costa Rica disbanded its army in 1948. Communist Nicaragua is now forcing a crisis on Costa Rica. We have a pretty good historical case here. We have 36 years of the least censored, most honest, least corrupt government in Latin America.

It will be interesting to see whether any of the radical Democrats can decide to side with Costa Rica, or whether, instead, we start to get arguments that say, "Well, it is really all Costa Rica's fault because, after all, they did something to antagonize the Nicaragua Communists." I suspect that there will be remarkably few radical Democrats either to provide aid to Costa Rica, although it is probably of all the countries in the New World the country which has best moral case.

After all, if you disband your army 36 years ago, you are pretty clearly indicating you want to live in peace. If we are not willing to defend a country that decent, that tiny, that unwilling to threaten anyone, then I think you begin to raise a question of where, in fact, is America willing to stand.

This whole issue of the inability to see clearly what is going on goes back a very long way in American life. What we are going to do is to release this paper, which cites Members by name, by date, starting in 1970 when one radical Democrat said, "Well, if only we would pull out of Vietnam that would force the Vietnamese to negotiate a compromise."

Well, of course, when we pulled out, it led to the Communists in Vietnam, and in fact it was not a compromise; it is now a Communist tyranny.

Then another radical Democrat said, "Well, you know, if we would just get out of Cambodia, then they would have peace."

Well, the peace they got was a Communist tyranny which killed one out of every seven Cambodians.

Then there was a radical Democrat who said, "We ought to stay out of Angola. It is none of our business, and we ought to let Angola decide for Angolans."

Well, the fact is that there are 25,000 Cuban Communist troops in Angola today, and they are imposing a Communist dictatorship, which is a colony of the Soviet Union. And there is a pro-freedom force called UNIDA led by Jonas Savimbi which is trying to fight its way back into freedom and which controls more of Angola than the El Salvadoran guerrillas control in El Salvador. But we do not hear a single radical Democrat jump up and say that we really ought to help the forces of freedom in Angola. Oh, no. In Angola, where there are Cuban Communist troops, we ought to stay out, and in El Salvador, where there are Communist guerrillas, we ought to stay out. In other words, if you a Communist and you are imposing a dictatorship, we should not stop you, and if you are a Communist and you are trying to impose a dictatorship, we should not stop you.

So there is in effect a double standard. If you are pro-American, you are probably corrupt, and if you are pro-Communist, you are probably all right.

It is a systematic problem. So that, for example, we get narrowly based rightwing governments. That is a common phrase. There are never any "narrowly based" leftwing governments. Yet virtually every Communist dictatorship is even more narrowly based in its power base than any conservative government or rightwing government on the planet.

After the problems in Africa, we then have the whole difficulty in Afghanistan. Remember, just a few moments ago I said that when Maurice Bishop tried to break off his alliance in his role as a colony for the Soviet Union, what happened was that he was promptly shot by the pro-Soviet dictatorship and was in effect knocked out. Their technique was: "You want to be free? Fine, we'll kill you."

That should not have surprised anyone when in 1979, in Afghanistan, the pro-Soviet dictator tried to break free from the Soviet Union; he was killed, his family was killed, his aides were killed, and a pro-Soviet dictator was imposed by force. We see in Grenada the same thing we saw in Afghanistan. It is a set pattern. It is a pattern that says that once the Soviet Union gets you in its grips, it will go to great lengths, including killing you, if necessary, in order to avoid having you get out of its grip.

In that setting you would think that the radical Democrats would begin to figure out that maybe having the Soviet KGB—what has been called the "Gestapo of the left"—is a bad thing, maybe having the Cubans there advising you is a bad thing, and maybe governments that are leaning on Soviet and Cuban advisers are in fact likely to end up as Communist dictators. We will not hear that this week on the floor of the House.

But what we are going to do is, tomorrow night we are going to take a series of special orders and read into the RECORD the Republican study committee study by Frank Gregorsky, which outlines rather clearly the historical case that there is in fact a radical world view, and that the radical Democrats are in fact addicted to that world view. We are then going to invite on Wednesday and Thursday radical Democrats who are named in the study to come and share a special order, much in the way that the gentleman from New York (Mr. SOLARZ) and I shared a special order several weeks ago. We think that if they want to explain it, if they want to offer an alternative version of what is going on, if they want to disagree with us, they ought to have a right to do so once we have read it into the RECORD, and that the comity of the House requires that if we are going to say something in the RECORD, we should be willing to stand up and defend what we say with our colleagues whom in effect we are criticizing. So on Wednesday and Thursday nights we are going to take special orders and offer that opportunity.

Now, in addition to that, let me say that we are going to suggest that when you read Mr. Gregorsky's study and when you look at our outline of the radical Democrats' world view, then people who want to either watch on television or read in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the debate this week will have a way of keeping score.

How often will a radical Democrat get up and mention that there are Cuban advisers in Nicaragua? How often will a radical Democrat get up and protest the fact that there was $112 million in Soviet military equipment in Nicaragua last year? How often will a radical Democrat point out there there is $300 million in Soviet construction for military bases in Nicaragua going on right now in some 40 bases?

You can have sort of a check list to keep score. And what you will discover is that again and again and again what the radical Democrats will say is that it is all the U.S.' fault, that if we would only be reasonable, if we would only negotiate, if we would only get out of the way; it is our policy of force, it is our fault. It is an extension, as I said earlier, of the same rationale that led two radical Democrats to say that it was America's fault that the Soviet Union shot down a Korean airliner.

Why do people have a difficult time understanding that the Soviet Union is very dangerous, and that communism is a threat to freedom? I was very struck as a former history teacher by how far back in the 20th century this phenomenon goes, and I want to enter into the RECORD tonight some quotations from what I think is the finest history of the 20th century that has yet been written, a book by Paul Johnson called "Modern Times, the World From the Twenties to the Eighties."

Paul Johnson is an Englishman. He was educated at Stonyhurst College, Lancashire, and Magdalen College, Oxford. He was assistant editor of Realités, and then he was on the staff on the New Statesman from 1955 to 1970. He originally was very leftwing and shared the values of many people who I think would be shocked at what he said. But over time, as he studied the Soviet Union and he studied the rise of tyranny, he became concerned, so he wrote this history, and I want to talk briefly about the creation all the way back into the 1920's and the 1930's of a leftwing Western World view which just rejected negative information about the Soviet Union and about communism which said in effect, "Don't tell me about it."

After several pages in which Paul Johnson outlines the whole concept of the purge under Stalin, the slave labor camps, and the secret police, he proceeds, and in many ways it is the Soviet Union which is the model for Adolf Hitler's Nazi Germany. The Soviets had already had a secret police in place for 15 years before Adolf Hitler came to power. The Soviet's already had labor camps before Adolf Hitler came to power. In many ways the Germans studied what the Communist were doing in Russia in order to establish a truly totalitarian state.

Faced with the fact that there were enormous camps in the Soviet Union, that there was slave labor, that there was a police state, and that there were secret police, what happened in the American left and the English left? This is what Paul Johnson said:

In the outside world, the magnitude of the Stalin tyranny—or indeed its very existence—was scarcely grasped at all. Most of those who travelled to Russia were either businessmen, anxious to trade and with no desire to probe or criticize what did not concern them, or intellectuals who came to admire and, still more, to believe. If the decline of Christianity created the modern political zealot—and his crimes—so the evaporation of religious faith among the educated left a vacuum in the minds of Western intellectuals easily filled by secular superstition. There is no other explanation for the credulity with which scientists, accustomed to evaluating evidence, and writers, whose whole function was to study and criticize society, accepted the crudest Stalinist propaganda at its face value. They needed to believe; they wanted to be duped. Thus, Amabel Williams-Ellis wrote an introduction to a book about the building of the White Sea Canal, later so harrowingly described by Alexander Solzhenitsyn, which contains the sentence: 'This tale of accomplishment of a ticklish engineering job, in the middle of primeval foress, by tens of thousands of enemies of the state, helped—or should it be guarded?—by only thirty-seven OGPU officers, is one of the most exciting stories that has ever appeared in print.'

Let me digress from Johnson and say this at this point for those who may not be familiar with this. Here is a slave labor camp that may have involved 300,000 slaves, that involved deliberate brutality, and that may have had as high as a 10-percent-a-year death rate because people were not fed enough, they were working in bad clothing and bad weather and the guards were very brutal. Yet, here is a Western intellectual describing it as though it were an idyllic, wonderful place.

Let me go to quote from Paul Johnson:

Sidney and Beatrice Webb said of the same project: "It is pleasant to think that the warmest appreciation was officially expressed of the success of the OGPU, not merely in performing a great engineering feat, but in achieving a triumph in human regeneration."

Again, to deviate from Paul Johnson, Beatrice and Sidney Webb, two of the leading leftwing thinkers in Great Britain who had enormous influence in the United States, are in effect here describing this slave labor camp as though somebody were to describe Auschwitz as a place of dignity where people are redeemed. It is the most clear, total fabrication of the truth you can imagine, and yet clearly they believed it. These are not lying agents of the Soviet conspiracy. These were people who desperately wanted to believe.

Let me go on quoting from Paul Johnson:

Harold Laski praised Soviet prisons for enabling convicts to lead "a full and self-respecting life", Anna Louise Strong recorded: "The labour camps have won a high reputation throughout the Soviet Union as places where tens of thousands of men have been reclaimed." "So well-known and effective is the Soviet method of remaking human beings", she added, "that criminals occasionally now apply to be admitted."

□ 1600

Let me, if I may, repeat that last quote, because I think only by understanding how totally willing to deceive themselves the American and the British left is can we begin to understand how bad our crisis is and how difficult it is to describe what is going on in Central America.

This is from Anna Louise Strong quoted by Paul Johnson:

So well known and effective is the Soviet method of remaking human beings that criminals occasionally now apply to be readmitted.

In other words, she was with a straight face reporting that Russian prisons were so good that people asked to be allowed to go to them in order to be regenerated and rejuvenated morally. Now, a person who will believe that will believe almost anything, and if you read all of the leftwing writings about Stalin in the 1930's, you discover that in fact they did believe almost anything.

Let me go on quoting from Paul Johnson:

Whereas in Britain, wrote George Bernard Shaw, a man enters a prison a human being and emerges a criminal type, in Russia he entered "as a criminal type and would come out an ordinary man but for the difficulty of inducing him to come out at all. As far as I could make out, they stay as long as they like."

Now, notice, I am quoting here George Bernard Shaw, one of the most brilliant, cynical critics of Western civilization we have had in the last century, a man of enormous intelligence, a man of great impact, and a man who could honestly say that to the best of his knowledge, Soviet prisoners liked to stay in prison so much that they did not leave it.

Now, a man who is willing to believe that the reason people were not getting out of prison was because they liked staying there is a man who will believe almost anything.

Imagine if you will and you can appreciate a little better my sense of frustration if you can understand that we are dealing here with decent, honorable, hard working people, who honestly came to believe whatever they had to in order to apologize for the Soviet Union. They were totally unwilling to believe that Stalin was a terrorist, that Stalin killed people, that Stalin led the great purges, that Stalin had slave labor camps, because they did not want to.

Imagine that your next door neighbor had this habit of coming to your house and offering your daughter or your son a pet bunny rabbit which had an unhappy tendency to turn out to be a rattlesnake.

Now, at some point you would begin to worry about your neighbors, about this ability to deal with reality if they insisted on bringing back another rattlesnake while calling it a bunny rabbit, yet here we have evidence from the thirties, and I would add some more in a moment, that the American and British left for over 50 years now has found it impossible to deal directly with the nature of the Soviet Union.

I go on to quote from Paul Johnson:

The famine of 1932, the worst in Russian history, was virtually unreported. At the height of it, the visiting biologist, Julian Huxley, found a "level of physique and general health rather above that to be seen in England."

Shaw threw his food supplies out of the train window just before crossing the Russian frontier "convinced that there were no shortages in Russia." "Where do you see any food shortage" he asked, glancing around the foreigners only restaurant of the Moscow Metropole.

Let me close that quote and again comment. Here is the great brilliant literary leader of the left in the middle of the worst famine in Russian history who is so naive and so eager to believe that he allows the Russians to take him to a restaurant only for visitors and then assumes he is seeing what is happening in the countryside.

Now, we know because as historians we have gone back and looked, we know how bad that famine was. I say to you, if George Bernard Shaw could have been that clearly duped, does that explain why some TV and movie stars today are willing to tell you how good Nicaragua is? Does that help you understand better why some literary and leftwing figures tell you that really, Castro is reasonable? Because we know how duped they were in the thirties. We know how wrong they were in the thirties.

Let me go on. George Bernard Shaw wrote:

Stalin has delivered the goods to an extent that seemed impossible 10 years ago, and I take off my hat to him accordingly.

Quoting again from Paul Johnson:

But Shaw and his traveling companion, Lady Astor, knew of the political prisoners, since the latter asked Stalin for clemency on behalf of a woman who wished to join her husband in America. (Stalin promptly handed her over to the OGPU).

Let me make a note that OGPU is the original term for that period for the secret police:

And she asked him, "How long are you going to go on killing people? When he replied, "As long as necessary," she changed the subject and asked him to find her a Russian nursery maid for her children.

This is typical of the modern American left. When confronted with the real brutality of the Soviet Communist system and its empire, when confronted with Soviet colonies, the American left, much like Lady Astor, wants to know if we can get a nursery maid for our children. There is no willingness to confront and deal head on with the fact that the Soviet Union really is a police state that really does lock up people.

Going on to quote from Paul Johnson:

Estimates of Stalin written in the years 1929–34 make curious reading. H. G. Wells said he had "never met a man more candid, fair and honest . . . no one is afraid of him and everybody trusts him." The Webbs argued that he had less power than an American President and was merely acting on the orders of the Central Committee and the Presidium. Hewlett Johnson, Dean of Canterbury, described him as leading "his people down new and unfamiliar avenues of democracy". The American Ambassador, Joseph E. Davies, reported him as having "insisted on the liberalization of the constitution" and "projecting actual secret and universal suffrage". "His brown eye is exceedingly wise and gentle" he wrote. "A child would like to sit on his lap and a dog would sidle up to him". Emile Ludwig, the famous popular biographer, found him a man "whose care I would readily confide the education of my children." The physicist, J. D. Bernal, paid tribute both to his "deeply scientific approach to all problems" and his "capacity for feeling". He was, said the Chilean writer, Pablo Neruda, "a good natured man of principle"; "a man of kindly geniality" echoed the Dean.

Some of these tributes can be variously explained by corruption, vanity or sheer folly. Davies who persistently misrepresented the nature of Stalin's Russia to his government, was being in effect bribed by the Soviet regime, who allowed him to buy icons and chalices for his collection at below-market prices. Anna Louise Strong was well described by Malcolm Muggeridge as "an enormous woman with a very red face, a lot of white hair, and an expression of stupidity so overwhelming that it amounted to a kind of strange beauty". Self-delusion was obviously the biggest single factor in the presentation of an unsuccessful despotism as a Utopia in the making. But there was also conscious deception by men and women who thought of themselves as idealists and who, at the time, honestly believed they were serving a higher human purpose by systematic misrepresentation and lying. If the Great War with its unprecedented violence brutalized the world, the Great Depression corrupted it by appearing to limit the options before humanity and presenting them in garishly contrasting terms. Political activists felt they had to make terrible choices and, having made them, stick to them with desperate resolution. The 30's was the age of the heroic lie. Saintly mendacity became its most prized virtue. Stalin's tortured Russia was the prime beneficiary of this sanctified falsification. The competition to deceive became more fierce when Stalinism acquired a mortal rival in Hitler's Germany.

There was, indeed, an element of deception right at the heart of this rivalry between the Communist and Fascist forms of totalitarianism. They were organically linked in the process of historical development.

This was, as Johnson said, the age of the heroic lie. Today we continue to live in an age of heroic self-deception. The paper written by Frank Gregorsky written for the Republican Study Committee, I think indicates conclusively that the radical Democrats, those who follow George McGovern's philosophy and who abandoned John F. Kennedy's, those who pursue the Gary Hart-Walter Mondale policy and leave Harry Truman and Franklin Roosevelt, that this radical Democratic philosophy has almost nothing to do with the real world, that when you study the lessons of history of Vietnam, Laos, Cambodia, Angola, Mozambique, Ethiopia, Afghanistan, Nicaragua, Grenada, and now El Salvador, that it is almost impossible to imagine that these intelligent, worthy, competent people could really believe this kind of nonsense, and yet again and again they come back and they do believe it. Again and again we find that they are unable to confront how dangerous, how difficult the world really is.

We are going to be making the case this week, both in the debate on the House floor and in special orders, that one of the major problems of American survival is the fact that the entire leftwing of the Democratic Party has accepted what is now a 50-year-old tradition among intellectuals of misrepresenting, misunderstanding, and self-deception about the nature of the Soviet state, the nature of Soviet tyranny, and the problems of survival on a planet where one of the two great powers is a deliberate user of terrorism, a deliberate user of secret police, and a deliberate user of torture.

The tragedy in Central America, as in the tragedy in southern Africa and the tragedy in Vietnam, is that none of this is difficult to predict. The patterns are the same, over and over and over. Again and again we find the same kind of intervention by the Cubans who are the puppets of the Soviet Union. We find the intervention of the Soviet secret police, which is the gestapo of the left. We see the same pattern built as we are seeing today in El Salvador.

The reason it is now so critical a crisis, the reason we need to be involved now is because we do not have the entire Pacific Ocean, we do not have the long distance from here to Afghanistan or from here to southern Africa. El Salvador is 2 days' drive from the United States by car. It is closer from El Salvador to Miami than it is from Miami to Washington, DC.

The mistakes that the radical left is now forcing on the United States by their dominance of the Democratic Caucus, and by the leadership of their three candidates for the Presidency are mistakes which will come back to haunt us immediately as the American people come to realize that on the average when a country goes Communist if the distance between that country and another water is, as from Cuba to Miami, 10 percent of the country moves, leaves, becomes refugees; if the distance is by land as it is from Afghanistan to Pakistan, 16 percent of the people of Afghanistan have walked into Pakistan. The Communist guerrillas in Central America who get aid from the Soviet Union, from Bulgaria, from Cuba, from Libya, from the Palestine Liberation Organization, from a network of totalitarian terrorist states that are antidemocracy, antifreedom, and anti the Western world, those Communist guerrillas have said publicly on radio that they are not waging a national war, they are waging a war without national boundaries, a regional war that first comes El Salvador, then Honduras, Guatemala, then Mexico.

People say, well, that is the old domino argument. My answer to that is go and stand on the border of Thailand looking into Cambodia, looking into Laos. In fact, people who argued about dominoes were right. They said if you lose South Vietnam you will lose Cambodia, you will lose Laos, and we did. There are now North Vietnamese troops sitting on the Thai border. Those dominoes fell.

People warned if you allow the Communist guerrillas to learn how to succeed in Southeast Asia they will someday be in Central America. I would ask you is the burden of proof on the side of us who in fact were right? Is it on the side of us who in fact warned there would be Communists in Nicaragua, that there would be Communists in El Salvador?

What is the radical left's answer to the problems of Costa Rica? Here is a country that is not offending anyone. Here is a country that does not have an army, and yet last week they asked for military aid because the Nicaraguan Communist Government is so ruthless that not only does it threaten El Salvador and Honduras, it threatens tiny, helpless, and unarmed Costa Rica.

If there is any test of the leftwing belief that moral leadership through unilateral disarmament works, I would say to you that Costa Rica is that test and that their belief has failed.

So in closing let me say to you that this week I believe is the beginning of a great debate where the American people and the American news media and our colleagues have to decide. We have released a paper which shows pretty conclusively that for the last 14 years there has been a systematic, self-delusion by the radical wing of the Democratic Party. This paper shows conclusively that the policies of a John F. Kennedy, the policy of Harry Truman, and the policy of Franklin Roosevelt who invented the good-neighbor concept for Central America, those policies no longer exist in the radical wing of the Democratic Party and that in the end is the first great test this week. Are we going to continue to listen to people who have been systematically wrong for 14 years or are we going to start looking at reality and asking tough questions about how we can help freedom survive on a planet in which the Soviet Union is a totalitarian tyranny, on a planet where the Soviet Union is trying to build an empire with colonies, and on a planet in which the Soviet Union willingly exports violence and is using its puppets to try to kill off freedom?

INTRODUCTION OF NEW FOOD IRRADIATION BILL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Washington (Mr. MORRISON) is recognized for 30 minutes.

● Mr. MORRISON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, today, along with several of my colleagues, I am introducing new legislation which promotes the use of ionizing radiation as a postharvest treatment for food commodities. Senator SLADE GORTON of Washington State is also introducing the identical bill today in the Senate.

The original House cosponsors of this new bill are: Mr. TOM FOLEY, Mr. MEL PRICE, Mr. PAT ROBERTS, Mr. WES WATKINS, Mr. BILL WHITEHURST, Mr. JOHN MCCAIN, Mr. BOB BADHAM, Mr. FRANK HORTON, Mr. COOPER EVANS, Mr. BILL THOMAS, Mr. ROD CHANDLER, Mr. HAROLD VOLKMER, Mrs. MARILYN LLOYD, Mr. JIM LEACH, Mr. TOM TAUKE, Mr. DAN BURTON, and Mrs. BEVERLY BYRON.

This new bill builds upon legislation I introduced last November (H.R 4544) and a proposed Food and Drug Administration regulation (49 Federal Register 5714) which was promulgated in February. H.R. 4544, my prior bill, changes the regulatory interpretation of food irradiation. Under current law, sources of radiation are defined as a food additive. I firmly believe that defining food irradiation as a food additive is inappropriate. Food irradiation is a process, much like boiling, freezing, or cooking in a microwave oven, and not an additive.

H.R. 4544 merely changes the definition so that food irradiation would be defined as a food process and the identical regulations which are applicable to pesticides would apply. That bill attracted nearly 50 cosponsors from both parties and all political stripes and I thank all those Members for endorsing the original bill.

This prior legislation, however, is no longer needed because the FDA promulgated its proposed rule in February. Indeed, FDA has indicated to me that the presence of the bill H.R. 4544 helped to expedite administrative approval of the regulation. The long awaited FDA rule effectively preempts much of the immediate, practical significance of my prior bill.

The regulation permits limited application of food irradiation primarily for fresh fruits and vegetables up to a dose of 100 kilorads, a dose which is one-tenth the standard now accepted by most international authorities. The public comment period for the regulation has been extended once and will expire on May 16.

This regulation is an excellent first step in gaining commercial and public acceptance of this technology. I commend Secretary Margaret Heckler for her personal leadership in developing the regulation and seeing that it was formally proposed. However, I believe that we need to build upon the regulation and that is why I am introducing new food irradiation legislation today.

The new bill, Mr. Speaker, is entitled "The Federal Food Irradiation Development and Control Act of 1984." I have struggled the past few months drafting this second generation bill in an attempt to find the judicious balance to facilitate acceptance of food irradiation and to accommodate as many interests as possible.

The bill has the endorsement of several major food organizations including the Grocery Manufacturers, and Food Processors, and United Fruit & Vegetable. I have consulted with various Federal agencies, including FDA, USDA, and DOE, the food irradiation industry, consumer and environmental groups, and agricultural associations in developing this legislation.

The bill retains the proposed definition of irradiation of food as a process or treatment and expressly excludes irradiation from the food additive definition. However, FDA would still retain authority to regulate now. The bill also provides for ongoing research and development of food irradiation, national uniformity of food irradiation regulations, and further provides explicit authority for leasing of federally owned irradiation source materials to the private sector to ensure an adequate supply while ensuring federal safety and transportation standards.

The centerpiece of the bill is the establishment of a Joint Operating Commission to facilitate acceptance of food irradiation. The Commission will operate within USDA and would coordinate and manage currently fragmented research and information exchange efforts. It will also act as a liaison to promote consumer acceptance of food irradiation and private development. My intent with the Commission is to do nothing more than provide a forum to coordinate largely existing activities and to facilitate consumer understanding of this technology.

A more detailed section-by-section summary of the bill and the bill itself follow this statement.

My experience has been that the public in general has an emotional, almost fearful response, to food irradiation. I hope that this bill, particularly the Joint Operating Commission, will promote open discussion of food irradiation so that public concerns about using radiation can be addressed.

No matter how successful and safe food irradiation proves to be, it will never obtain large scale commercial applications unless there is consumer acceptance. The consumer needs reassurance from the Federal Government and I view the Joint Operating Commission as the least restrictive way to facilitate public acceptance. The last thing we all want is for Government to get in the way of the progress in development of commercial food irradiation that we all see coming.

This legislation is aimed at promoting commercial applications and consumer acceptance of food irradiation. The impact of ionizing energy as a postharvest treatment could be revolutionary and some have already indicated that it is the most important development in food preservation since the introduction of canning and freezing last century.

The possibilities for food irradiation are unlimited and exciting. Food irradiation can protect the food from pests much like ethylene dibromide (EDB) does. But unlike EDB, it will not leave a residue on the food. If other postharvest fumigants are restricted by EPA, food irradiation is viewed by many as one of the most effective and safe substitutes.

Besides acting as a possible substitute for EDB and other fumigants, low doses of irradiation eliminate trichinosis in pork and would allow consumers to enjoy pork cooked as little as they like and could enhance the export prospects for pork. Use of irradiation stops the Medfly in citrus fruits and the codling moth in apples. Irradiation could also destroy botulinum and salmonella in red meats, poultry, and fish and extend the shelf life of fresh fruits, vegetables and grains.

There is a growing international consensus behind food irradiation. Two international organizations, the Joint FAO/IAEA/WHO Expert Committee and the Codex Alimentarius Commission, have recommended the use of irradiation on food up to doses 10 times higher than FDA is now proposing. Twenty-eight countries are already using gamma radiation on foods. Since about a quarter of the food supply in the Third World is lost to spoilage, food irradiation could also play a major role in helping feed the world.

The food irradiation technology is not new; we have accumulated over 40 years of research data. Food irradiation has been studied in more detail than any other food preservation technique over the past four decades. Food irradiation is ionizing energy which penetrates through food killing microorganisms. The ionizing energy used to irradiate food is roughly similar to the other energy waves such as visual light, radio, TV, microwave, and ultraviolet light.

As with these energy sources, the food absorbs only the energy of the radioactive source, not the source's radioactivity. For instance, an X-ray in the dentist office does not make your teeth radioactive and the X-ray table in the doctor's office does not absorb radioactivity even after thousands of X-rays.

It is physically impossible for food irradiation to induce radiation in food at any of the dose levels now being studied. It is true that irradiation may change the food slightly, but these changes are no more significant than the changes that occur from boiling or freezing food. Food irradiation is safe and wholesome and is incapable of making the food radioactive. It is interesting to note that severely ill patients in our hospitals and our astronauts in space are sometimes served foods sterilized with gamma radiation.

I hope that this new bill and the FDA regulation will contribute to the effort of advancing the cause of food irradiation as a safe and effective food preservation technology. I want to assure my colleagues and the general public that this bill is prudent and limited and that we are taking a slow, deliberative, and cautious approach.

The section-by-section summary, a copy of the bill, and other relevant articles follow. Further information on food irradiation can be found in the November 18, 1983, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, pp. H10570-H10576.

SECTION-BY-SECTION SUMMARY OF FOOD IRRADIATION BILL

Section I.—Short title:

The bill is called the "Federal Food Irradiation Development and Control Act of 1984".

Section II.—Findings and purposes:

The bill declares that food irradiation at regulated doses is safe and wholesome, is effective as a food preservative technique, and is one of the substitutes for many of the postharvest fumigants including ethylene dibromide (EDB). The bill further finds that irradiation is a process and cannot induce radioactivity in food. Finally, Congress finds that a coordinated effort to advance food irradiation is needed.

Section III.—Definitional and regulatory changes:

Section 201(s) of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act is amended by deleting "sources of radiation" from the definition of food additive and further exempting "food irradiation treatment" from being defined as a additive. A definition is added to the Act which defines "food irradiation treatment" as a food process.

Section 409 of FDA enabling Act is further amended to make conforming changes. These changes would generally insert "or food irradiation treatment" every time "food additive" is used. Thus, the regulatory provision of Section 409 will apply to "food additives or food irradiation treatment".

Section IV.—National uniformity:

The section declares that it is the intent of Congress to require national uniformity in the regulation of food irradiation treatment. Under this section, no state or political subdivision could establish any food irradiation requirement which is "in addition to or different from" the FDA requirements. This section essentially restates the acknowledged common law that federal law usually preempts conflicting and duplicative state law.

Section V.—Authorization for appropriations:

This section provides a permanent authorization to carry out the byproducts beneficial uses portion of the Department of Energy defense nuclear waste management program. The authorization would include research, development, and demonstration activities to promote all commercial application of byproducts beneficial uses except for food irradiation.

Section VI.—Leasing of byproducts material for food irradiation:

Section 81 of the Atomic Energy Act is amended to clarify the Department of Energy's existing authority to lease nuclear byproduct material to the private sector. The amendments would clarify current leasing guidelines so that byproducts are leased at fair market value (with profits going to the Treasury) and should be leased to encourage commercial applications of food irradiation treatment.

Section VII.—Establishment of Joint Operating Commission:

This section of the bill establishes within the Department of Agriculture a Joint Operating Commission for Food Irradiation (JOCFI). JOCFI shall be under the supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary shall provide necessary staff and office facilities. There is also a general authorization to carry out the activities of the Commission.

JOCFI shall consist of eight members including one individual, appointed by the President, who will represent the interests of the general public. The other seven members will be one representative each from the Departments of Agriculture, Health and Human Services, Energy, and Commerce, and the Environmental Protection Agency, the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, and the Agency for International Development. The appointments of the initial eight members shall be made within 90 days following the enactment of the Act and all vacancies shall be filled within 60 days. The seven members of JOCFI who are already employees of the Federal Government shall receive no additional pay and the one representative of the public shall receive a salary equivalent to grade GS-15 for each day of service.

The functions of the JOCFI Commission include: (1) to coordinate and manage all federal on-going and future food irradiation research and development activities. Additional research shall be conducted at Agricultural Research Service stations or at land-grant colleges; (2) to collect and consolidate all research data already gathered by various federal agencies; (3) to cooordinate information exchange activities on food irradiation treatment with various federal agencies, interested private organizations, and the general public; (4) to encourage investment by private sources in food irradiation treatment; (5) to encourage better understanding by the general public of food irradiation treatment; and (6) to petition FDA, if deemed appropriate, under section 409 of the FDA enabling Act to expand the scope of regulations allowing for commercial food irradiation.

TREATING FOOD WITH IRRADIATION—FDA CAUTIOUS ABOUT APPROVAL OF PROCESS

(By Patricia Picone Mitchell)

You reach for a product on your supermarket shelf and see the words "treated with ionizing radiation" printed prominently on the label. Will you put it back? Consumers may encounter such products sometime in the next two years, once the Food and Drug Administration completes consideration of a regulation to allow foods to be disinfected, pasteurized and preserved with low doses of gamma-, beta- and X-rays.

Food irradiation, as the process is called, has been feasible for more than 30 years, but it is only now that FDA has considered permitting its use in the United States on a widescale basis. In contrast, countries such as the Netherlands have already approved irradiation for many foods, among them shrimp, chicken, frog legs and bread. About 50 irradiation-processed foods have been approved by health authorities in approximately 28 countries, including Japan, where 5,000 tons of potatoes are irradiated each year to inhibit sprouting. Excluding Japan's potatoes, it is estimated that total world output of irradiated foods is 2,000 tons per year.

In fact, some Americans have been eating irradiated food on a regular basis. The astronauts have dined in space on irradiated corned beef, smoked turkey and steak. Irradiated foods have also been used for hospital patients who need the sterilized products because of immune deficiencies. The U.S. military has been interested in purchasing such sterilized foods, which it is claimed can be safely eaten years after they are processed, if properly packaged.

The FDA has been reluctant to give widespread approval for irradiation, although it has recently approved its use for spices and permits very low doses for sprout inhibition of potatoes and as a disinfectant for wheat and wheat flour. "It's a hard thing—how do you determine the safety of any process?" asks Clyde Takeguchi of FDA's Division of Food and Color Additives in the Bureau of Foods. The big question that stumped FDA staffers for years, he says, was how to conduct safety studies of food irradiation—especially in an environment where the regulatory science was rapidly changing.

Consumer groups have kept relatively silent on the food irradiation issue, aware that the process could offer significant benefits by replacing the use of dangerous chemicals, but also concerned about still lingering safety questions. Thomas Smith of the Washington-based Public Voice for Food and Health Policy says his group has taken no formal position about the safety of the technology, but adds that he is "glad" that FDA has moved cautiously in permitting expansion of irradiation. "There are still questions that remain about the technology," says Smith, echoing the view of other consumer activists.

Concerns of a different nature have been voiced by other groups, however. The Environmental Policy Institute fears that widespread commercialization of food irradiation will lead to the transport of highly radioactive materials to food irradiation facilities located in America's neighborhoods.

Robert Alvarez, spokesman for EPI, says the federal program in which states agree with the Nuclear Regulatory Commission to regulate such facilities is in "a shambles." Calling irradiation "a high technology that's fairly dangerous," Alvarez says "the jury is still out in terms of its utility." He says his group will seek a legislative remedy to block FDA's approval of the process until a more effective system for regulating irradiation facilities is in place.

The technology could be a boon for both consumers and the food industry, as long as consumers are not scared off by the fear that the foods they are eating will glow in the dark, or worse. Actually, according to researchers and proponents of the process, irradiated foods are treated with beams of radiation that are too small to allow any residual radioactivity to remain in the products. What do get "zapped" are insects, bacteria, molds, fungus and other microorganisms that each year spoil one quarter of the world's food supply. At varying dose levels, irradiation has the potential to:

Clean up spices and garlic and onion powder, replacing chemical treatments currently used, such as ethylene oxide, the safety of which has been questioned. (Spices are often contaminated with dirt and insects and conventional heat disinfecting destroys their flavors.) This irradiation use was approved by FDA last summer and is being practiced commercially by Radiation Technology Inc. of Rockaway, N.J.

Control insect infestation in cereals, flours, fresh and dried fruit. Irradiation could replace the use of the chemical fumigant ethylene dibromide or EDB, which the Environmental Protection Agency is considering banning because of tests showing its carcinogenicity.

Control pathogenic bacteria that cause public health problems. Irradiation could kill off the parasites that cause trichinosis, making possible the serving of rarer pork and opening up export markets to countries that don't accept U.S. pork because of the trichinosis problem. Irradiated poultry would be free of salmonella, a pathogen thought to contaminate at least one-third of all the fresh poultry sold in the U.S. and estimated to cause up to one million cases of gastroenteritis each year, according to a 1983 Commerce Department report.

Extend the refrigerated shelf life, through its pasteurizing effect, of products that spoil quickly (ground beef, fresh fish and seafood, and such produce as blueberries and strawberries) from several days to several weeks.

Reduce or replace the use of sodium nitrite and nitrate in cured meat products, since meats irradiated at high enough doses would be sterilized and protected from clostridium botulinum, one of the major reasons nitrite is used.

The major underlying safety concern of irradiated food centers on the fact that chemical substances, called radiolytic products, are formed in irradiated foods at very low levels. Such reaction products are also a byproduct of other cooking and preserving methods, but researchers are seeking to find out whether the radiolytic products in irradiated foods are unique and/or harmful. Eugen Wierbicki, of the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Eastern Regional Research Center in Philadelphia, who has researched irradiation for over 20 years, says radiolytic products occur very regularly and can be predicted by computer analysis, based on dose and temperature of the product during irradiation. He points out that canned foods contain three times as many reaction products as irradiated products. "They are not unique because they are present in other foods and are all natural compounds," he says.

However, according to FDA's Takeguchi, radiolytic products occur in such small quantities they are often difficult to detect. And it's also difficult to determine if they are unique since a multitude of reaction products that occur in conventionally processed foods have never been identified.

Another controversial issue facing FDA is labeling. Under current FDA regulations, irradiated foods must be labeled with the words "treated with ionizing radiation." (Products not inrradiated but which contain irradiated ingredients—like spices—require no special labeling.) Martin Welt, president of Radiation Technology, says such labeling "can only mislead people," and notes that currently there is no requirement for labeling of foods treated with chemical fumigants, even though residues of such chemicals often remain in the food. Several other countries, including Holland, Belgium and South Africa, require labeling, along with a small graphic symbol, on directly irradiated foods.

FDA in its upcoming proposal will have to decide whether to continue the current requirement for labeling and if so, in what form. A recent report by the Congressional Research Service noted that alternate names have been suggested for the technology, such as "cosmic processing," "picowave processing," or "processed with ionizing energy," which some believe may avoid the public association of irradiation with "radioactive."

"There's nothing really magic about irradiation—it's just another form of energy," says Philip E. Lewis of the U.S. Department of Commerce's Bureau of Industrial Economics, who recently authored a report on the subject. Once the energy source is removed from the food, the food itself emits no energy. Microwaves are another form of radiation, but with a different effect—exciting the molecules and heating up the food. Gamma rays, on the other hand, disrupt the chemical bonds of living things, killing off micro-organisms and insects but causing only a slight temperature rise in the food. Therein lies the advantage of food irradiation over conventional food preservation methods such as canning. Without the need for heat, there are fewer flavor and odor changes and nutrient losses, and the foods more closely resemble their raw state.

The source of the gamma rays, most common of the rays used in food irradiation facilities, is cobalt-60, a byproduct of the nuclear industry. In a food irradiation facility, the food is placed on a conveyor belt and passed through a shielded chamber, where it is exposed to the rays emitted by the radioactive metal.

FDA's forthcoming regulation will permit a relatively low radiation dose of 100 kilorads, which is one-tenth that allowed by a host of foreign countries. Canada, for example, strongly motivated by a desire to control salmonella in poultry, has just proposed permitting foods to be irradiated with up to one megarad (1,000 kilorads), the dose advocated by several international organizations, including the Codex Alimentarius Commission, a United Nations food standards setting group operating under the auspices of the World Health Organization and the Food and Agriculture Organization.

For approval of foods irradiated at doses larger than 100 kilorads, the FDA proposal would require stuides in which the food is tested on animals.

One reason FDA staffers have been so cautious in conferring their blessing on the process is that the potential for use of irradiation is so great. "The agency is going to be more cautious in approving a process that could eventually be used for a substantial part of the nation's diet than it would be in approving a new food additive that may represent only a minor fraction," says Lewis in his report. Lewis also points out that once large-scale irradiation facilities becomes available, "there would be tremendous pressure to continue their use even if their safety later came into debate."

FDA has in part been stymied by a 1958 amendment to the Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act that says food irradiation must be regulated not as a process like canning or fumigation but as a food additive, requiring premarket approval with stringent safety testing.

Rep. Sid Morrison (R-Wash.), an apple farmer from the Yakima Valley, recently introduced legislation to reverse irradiation's legal status, proposing to define it as a postharvest treatment. Currently Washington apples and cherries must be fumigated with suspect chemicals to rid them of coddling moths before they can be exported. An aide to Morrison says the bill has been gaining support among other sectors of the farm industry, including papaya and mango growers in Hawaii, whose produce could travel longer distances if irradiated first.

Even if FDA were to permit irradiation unconditionally, Lewis believes the process "won't take off tremendously." For one thing, he says, food companies already enjoy the advantages of an efficient food production and distribution system and may not see a tremendous opportunity for creating new products with a high profit-making potential.

The food industry is also concerned with how consumers will accept the process. Lewis notes in his report, however, that a recent Canadian study suggests that when properly informed, "the public may accept irradiated food more readily than food companies believe." He says Japanese consumers, "naturally sensitive to the issue of radiation," have accepted irradiated potatoes.

While irradiation has been touted by proponents as a cost- and energy-saving preservation process, this may not always be the case. There are the logistical problems and costs of transporting foods to a central irradiation facility. Irradiation, according to Lewis, is currently more expensive for sprout inhibition of potatoes than chemical treatment. It has other drawbacks as well: Some fresh fruits can be successfully irradiated, while others tend to soften and undergo flavor and color changes. Milk products undergo changes in taste when irradiated.

Wierbicki believes, however, that further research will overcome these problems.

The potential for widespread use of high-dose irradiation may also be limited. USDA is currently completing a wholesomeness evaluation of high-dose sterilized precooked poultry, and is expected to submit a petition to FDA for approval within a year. Because high-dose radiation requires the food to be precooked and then frozen before it is irradiated, energy savings over freezing or canning may be minimal. Such products may have considerable export potential, however, especially to countries with hot climates and poor refrigeration.

Whatever the benefits or drawbacks of the process, the extent to which food irradiation takes off will ultimately depend on FDA. And while the FDA proposal would expand the uses of this technology, it would not permit doses high enough to take advantage of all the possibilities. The day when consumers routinely store their pouches of chicken in the pantry is years or even decades away.

RENEWED INTEREST IN FOOD IRRADIATION

By any other name, irradiation of food would probably have been sanctioned by the federal government years ago. But because "irradiation" mistakenly conjures up visions of glowing food, food manufacturers, unsure of consumer acceptance, have not vigorously pressed for federal approval. As a result, the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) has been less than swift to authorize the use of irradiation. However, with increasing concern about the presence of ethylene dibromide residues in food, there is renewed interest in irradiation as an alternative to the fumigation of fruits and vegetables.

Although the technology has been feasible since the 1950's, it was only last year that the FDA sent a recommendation to the Department of Health and Human Services to expand the use of irradiation. But Secretary Margaret Heckler has yet to sign off on the proposed regulation and even then, FDA would have to solicit public comment on the proposal before granting final approval. In November, Representative Sid Morrison (R-Wash.), whose constituency includes apple growers, introduced legislation that would speed up FDA approval.

FDA has already permitted some applications of irradiation of food but to a very minor extent. For years, astronauts have consumed irradiated food as have individuals who suffer from immune deficiencies and must eat sterilized food. Last summer, FDA authorized the use of irradiation to clean up spices, which are often contaminated with insect parts and bacteria in their natural state.

Proponents of irradiation envision much wider use of the treatment, contending that it can offer a significantly better food product. Irradiation has been successfully used to inhibit sprouting, kill larvae in harvested fruit and vegetables, and destroy contaminants such as salmonellas in chicken and trichinae in pork. The treatment can also kill Clostridium botulinum and eliminate the need for nitrite in bacon. The Department of Commerce speculates that irradiation could improve the quality of domestic meat and fruit for export, which could lead to a better balance of trade. And the U.S. military, which has been a principal researcher of irradiation, has long advocated it in order to provide troops with food that tastes fresher and has a longer shelf life than canned groceries.

The United States has lagged behind international acceptance of irradiation and critics of FDA say that the agency has been unduly cautious. In 1977, a joint committee of the World Health Organization, the International Atomic Energy Agency, and the Food and Agriculture Organization reviewed a multitude of studies and concluded that irradiation is safe and effective for several foodstuffs. In 1981, the same committee issued virtually unconditional approval of irradiation when applied at medium energy levels. About 20 countries now allow irradiation for various applications, processing a total amount of 2000 tons annually. The Japanese, for example, irradiate thousands of pounds of potatoes every year to prevent sprouting. Despite the international committee's recommendations, the United States still has not adopted the committee's standard. Ironically, a senior FDA scientist was a member of the joint committee that voted unanimously for the standard.

Irradiation suffers from a terrible public image in the United States. FDA has received numerous handwritten letters by individuals who have little understanding of the process, but object to it nonetheless. Irradiation uses ionizing energy to preserve food at levels that do not produce radioactivity. "It is a total misconception that you can produce radioactivity [from food irradiation]," says Thomas Cochran, a physicist at the Natural Resources Defense Council. (The council, however, has not taken an official position on irradiation per se.)

The process uses gamma rays from a cobalt-60 or a cesium-137 source, or high energy electrons from an electron accelerator. Doses up to 100 Kilorads (krad) kill insects such as the Medfly and control sprouting. Medium doses of 100 to 1000 krad reduce bacterial counts. Higher levels sterilize food and eliminate viruses, so that the food, as precooked meats, have a shelf life of up to 7 years. The shelf life of canned foods is only about 2 years.

FDA and others are concerned that irradiation might form harmful compounds after food is treated, but so far testing has uncovered nothing unusual. Sidney Wolfe, director of the Health Research Group, would like to see more through evaluation of these by-products. He says there is "still a need to identify what's in irradiated food." On the other hand, FDA has pinpointed 65 by-products of irradiated food and all of them can be found in other non-irradiated food. Debra Schechter, a spokeswoman for the Center for Science in the Public Interest, says that the group has not done an in-depth study of irradiation, but so far it "is not concerned about irradiation. We don't think there is anything wrong with it."

In 1981, the international joint committee ruled that the use of 1000 krad was safe and acceptable. But higher levels may prove to be acceptable as well. Dean Cliver, a microbiologist at the University of Wisconsin's Food Research Institute and a U.S. delegate to the joint committee, wrote FDA that "a good deal of evidence" suggests that levels of at least 5000 krad do not pose any threat. This point is apparently further supported by recent research conducted by the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA). Department scientists will soon submit to FDA the results of a massive study in which more than 300,000 pounds of sterilized chicken were fed to numerous experimental animal species. The chickens were irradiated using the various energy sources and then fed for 2 years to mice, rats, rabbits, and beagles. Donald Thayer, who directed the study and is head of the USDA's Eastern Regional Food Safety Laboratory, says the studies, which evaluated toxicological, birth and reproductive effects, demonstrated that irradiation is safe.

Despite the endorsement of the international committee of 1000-krad doses, the FDA in 1981 gave notice that it would consider a limit of only 100 krad for most foods. (The agency does permit doses of 1000 krad to irradiate spices.) Herbert Blumenthal, who is director of toxicology in FDA's bureau of foods and was a member of the international committee, says the agency took this position because studies of food treated at 100 krad or less have showed no adverse effects. According to FDA, foods irradiated at doses greater than 100 krad and comprise more than 0.01 percent of the diet may contain a sufficient quantity of unique by-products to warrant further toxicity testing. Blumenthal defends FDA's 100-krad limit, saying that it introduces a greater margin of error should any risks be present.

But FDA's proposal has perplexed many food specialists. Edward Josephson, who headed the Army's research on irradiation for 15 years, wrote FDA that numerous long-term animal feeding studies conducted over the past 20 years have not demonstrated any confirmed ill effects.

The difference could mean success or failure for companies interested in the process. According to Commerce Department estimates, companies investing in an irradiation plant must process several million pounds of product to be profitable. At FDA's proposed 100-krad dose, food processors are limited to killing fruit flies in food and inhibiting sprouting. This use of irradiation cannot generate enough volume of food to justify the investment, a point that Blumenthal acknowledges. The higher dose would allow broader applications of irradiation and make the venture profitable.

Proponents say that irradiation can be used successfully with a wide variety of foods, but perhaps not all. Some foods that were previously fumigated with EDB, such as papayas, do well when irradiated. Papayas are a significant export crop for Hawaii. The Environmental Protection Agency says that citrus fruit can be successfully irradiated. But Florida's department of citrus and the California Citrus Council both claim that irradiation at the levels required to destroy fruit flies in fresh citrus cause blemishes in the peel and also make the pulp mushy.

FDA approval of food irradiation has become hampered in part because Congress ruled in 1958 that irradiation must be considered a food additive, rather than a process such as heating, freezing, or canning. This designation immediately threw up several barriers to approval and "has made us the laughing stock of the world," says Cliver of the University of Wisconsin.●

CHICAGO'S POLISH CONSTITUTION DAY PARADE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ANNUNZIO) is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, May 3 was the 193d anniversary of a landmark event in the history of the people of Poland. It was on this day that Poland adopted its first democratic constitution, and assumed its rightful place in the community of free nations. On Saturday, May 5, the Polish National Alliance sponsored Chicago's annual Constitution Day Parade, and it was a genuine pleasure and honor to participate in this year's commemorative celebration.

This magnificent parade down Dearborn Street in downtown Chicago, stepped off at noon on May 5, and consisted of numerous floats, bands, and marching units, and thousands of the marchers wore the beautiful clothing of their native Poland. Also, many dignitaries representing business, labor, and civic organizations too numerous to mention took part in this observance and at this point in the RECORD, I wish to insert the 2-day program of events which took place in Chicago in commemoration of Poland's May 3, 1791 Constitution.

The program follows:

PROGRAM

SATURDAY, MAY 5, 1984

Program at Reviewing Stand, Dearborn and Washington Streets—12 Noon

Welcome: Mrs. Helen M. Szymanowicz, Vice President, Polish National Alliance; General Chairman, Poland's Constitution Day.

National Anthems: Mr. Stefan Wicik, accompanied by U.S. 81st Army Band, Fort Sheridan, Illinois.

Parade narrators: Mrs. Helen M. Szymanowicz, Mrs. Lottie S. Kubiak.

Grand marshal: Judge Frank Sulewski, Cook County Circuit Court.

Parade coordinator: Larry Rzewski.

Program at Richard J. Daley Center—1:30 p.m.

Welcome: Mr. Stanley Sciblo, Commissioner, District 13, Polish National Alliance.

Invocation: Most Rev. Alfred L. Abramowicz, Auxiliary Bishop of Chicago.

Master of Ceremonies: Honorable Aloysius A. Mazewski, President, Polish National Alliance, President, Polish American Congress.

Remarks: Honorable James R. Thompson, Governor, State of Illinois.

Remarks: Honorable Harold Washington, Mayor, city of Chicago.

Principal address: Honorable Charles H. Percy, U.S. Senator, Illinois.

Address: Honorable Frank Annunzio, Member of Congress.

Address: Honorable Jan Nowak, Former Director, Radio Free Europe.

Benediction: The Right Reverend Joseph K. Zawistowski, Bishop, Western Diocese, Polish National Catholic Church.

Closing:

SUNDAY, MAY 6, 1984

Assembly for Solemn Mass: 10:00 a.m.—Holy Trinity School Hall, 1123 Cleaver St.

March to Church: 10:15 a.m.—to Holy Trinity Church, 1118 Noble St.

Solemn Mass: 10:30 a.m.—Rev. Casimir Tadla, CR, Pastor, Principal Celebrant.

Co-Celebrant and Homolist: Very Rev. Zbigniew Gorecki S.J.

Deacon: Rev. Dr. Edward C. Rozanski.

Choir under direction of Mr. Joseph Labuda.

Executive Committee: Helen M. Szymanowicz, Chairman; Casimir Jasinski, Commissioner Dist. 12 PNA; Jean Binkowski, Commissioner Dist. 12 PNA; Stanley Sciblo, Commissioner Dist. 13 PNA; Kazimiera Pytel, Commissioner Dist. 13 PNA.

This year's parade also honored the Polish American Congress on its 40th anniversary, and observed the 40th anniversary of the Battle at Monte Cassino, which exemplified the courage and bravery of the Polish Corps, and was a historic day in man's quest for freedom and self-determination, reinforcing the values echoed in the May 3 Constitution.

The Polish American Congress for the past 40 years has maintained an outstanding record of accomplishment, and has contributed greatly to the Polish-American community, helping to make our country strong. I like to take this opportunity to congratulate, my good friend, Aloysius Mazewski, president of the Polish American Congress, and all the officers and members of this fine organization on the occasion of its 40th anniversary, and give them my best wishes for continued success in their future endeavors.

Adopted only a few years after our own Constitution, the Polish May 3 Constitution stands out as one of the great achievements in Polish history, and as a milestone in the history of mankind's quest for liberty and justice. The Polish Constitution of 1791 serves as a symbol of progressive Government under democratic principles of freedom and self-determination, and these exemplary ideals have come to represent the aspirations of the Polish people, and all people who seek to determine the course of their own destinies without interference or oppression.

With the enactment of the May 3 Constitution, the Polish people were pioneers in their heroic efforts to shake off the yoke of tyranny and oppression from Poland and from all of Europe. The Constitution provides an enduring priceless heritage of democracy, religious tolerance, and humanitarianism, which continues to be a beacon of hope for the people of Poland in their efforts to throw off the yoke of their Communist oppressor.

Inspired by the values and principles of the Polish Constitution of 1791, Americans of Polish descent have contributed mightily to the cause of freedom in this country, and Poles have sacrificed much for the cause of freedom in Poland.

All of us know too well of the brave men, women, and children who must face a dismal existence at the hands of the Communists. Nevertheless, they remain firm in their determination and resolve, as they actively struggle to achieve once again a free Poland—a country governed by the ideals embodied in the May 3 Constitution.

In commemorating Polish Constitution Day, we join hands with our brothers and sisters in Poland in their just cause to reinstate their political, cultural, and religious freedom. We recognize their inherent right to self-determination, their right to restore their national identity, and the right of Poland to reenter the community of free nations.

Mr. Speaker, as we celebrate this 193d anniversary of the Polish Constitution of 1791, I am honored to join with Polish-Americans in the 11th Congressional District of Illinois which I am honored to represent, and Americans of Polish descent all over this country, in paying tribute to those who have struggled and are continuing in their struggle to transform into reality the noble ideals expressed in the May 3 Constitution. Let us continue our solidarity, our support, and our humanitarian aid, as we join with the brave people of Poland in their prayers for justice, self-determination and freedom.●

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to:

Mr. JONES of North Carolina (at the request of Mr. WRIGHT) for this week on account of official business.

SPECIAL ORDERS GRANTED

By unanimous consent, permission to address the House, following the legislative program and any special orders heretofore entered, was granted to:

(The following Members (at the request of Mr. DAUB) to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material:)

Mr. MORRISON of Washington, for 30 minutes, today.

Mr. WHITEHURST, for 30 minutes today.

Mr. ANNUNZIO, for 5 minutes, today.

Mr. GONZALEZ, for 60 minutes, today.

Mr. OBEY, for 60 minutes, on May 8.

Mr. OBEY, for 60 minutes, on May 9.

Mr. OBEY, for 60 minutes, on May 10.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

By unanimous consent, permission to revise and extend remarks was granted to:

(The following Members (at the request of Mr. DAUB) and to include extraneous matter:)

Mr. WOLF.

Mr. PHILIP M. CRANE.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska.

Mr. CONTE.

Mr. BILIRAKIS.

Mr. BROOMFIELD in three instances.

Mr. JEFFORDS.

(The following Members (at the request of Mr. JONES of Tennessee) and to include extraneous matter:)

Mr. KASTENMEIER.
Mr. MCHUGH.
Mr. LANTOS in two instances.
Mr. CHAPPELL.
Mr. FLORIO.

AMENDMENTS

Under clause 6 of rule XXIII, proposed amendments were submitted as follows:

H.R. 5119

By Mr. DORGAN:

(Amendment to the amendment in the nature of a substitute.)

—Page 4, line 13, strike out "$587,250,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$422,500,000".

(Amendment to the amendment in the nature of a substitute) (Text of H.R. 5421)

—Page 5, line 11, strike out "The" and insert in lieu thereof "(a) consistent with the requirements of this section, "the"; strike out line 16; line 22, strike out the closing quotation marks and the second period; and after line 22, insert the following:

"(b) The President shall charge interest on financing under this section at such rate as he may determine, except that—

"(1) the interest rate under this section may not be less than the greater of—

"(A) 5 percent per year, or

"(B) the rate which is 7 percent less than the current average interest rate, as of the last day of the month preceding the signing of the loan agreement on behalf of the United States Government, that the United States Government pays no outstanding marketable obligations of comparable maturity; and

"(2) not more than 10 percent of the aggregate principal amount of financing provided for a fiscal year under this section and section 24 may be at a rate which is less than the current average interest rate, as of the last day of the month preceding the signing of the loan agreement on behalf of the United States Government, that the United States Government pays on outstanding marketable obligations of comparable maturity.

For purposes of paragraph (2), if a country is released from its contractual liability to repay the United States Government with respect to financing provided under this section for a fiscal year, the amount of such financing shall be included in determining the aggregate principal amount of financing provided for that fiscal year but shall not be counted toward the 10 percent limitation on financing at concessional rates of interest."

By Mr. HALL of Ohio:

(Amendment to the amendment in the nature of a substitute) (Text of H.R. 5421)

—Page 4, line 13, strike out "$587,250,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$562,250,000"; and after line 18, insert the following:

(c) Assistance may not be provided for the Philippines for the fiscal year 1985 under chapter 2 of part II of such Act.

By Mr. RAHALL:

(Amendment to the amendment in the Nature of a Substitute) (Text of H.R. 5421)

—Page 2, strike out the sentence beginning with "of this" in line 20 and ending with "program." in line 25; and page 4, after line 8, insert the following new subsection:

(a) Section 42 of the Arms Export Control Act is amended by striking out subsections (a), (b), and (c) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(a) Financing made available under sections 23 and 24 of this Act may not be used to finance the procurement outside the United States of any defense articles, defense services, or design and construction services, including financing for coproduction or licensed production outside the United States of defense articles of United States origin.".

By Mr. MATSUI:

—At the end of the bill add the following new section:

LIMITATION ON DEFENSE REORGANIZATIONS

SEC. . (a) Section 125 of title 10, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(e)(1) Notwithstanding subsection (a), the Secretary of Defense—

"(A) may not test the transfer, reassignment, or consolidation of a function, power, or duty of a military department to a component of the Department of Defense outside a military department unless the test has been specifically authorized by law; and

"(B) may not carry out the transfer, reassignment, or consolidation of a function, power, or duty of a military department to a component of the Defense Department outside a military department unless the transfer, reassignment, or consolidation has been specifically authorized by law after the completion of the study of such transfer, reassignment, or consolidation.

"(2)(A) Paragraph (1) does not apply to a transfer, or a test of a transfer, of a function, power, or duty of a military department if the transfer (or the ultimate transfer contemplated under the test)—

"(i) would involve reallocation of fewer than a total of two hundred military and civilian personnel positions (including temporary civilian positions) from the military departments to the component of the Department of Defense outside a military department; or

"(ii) would not result in a change of expenditures by Department of Defense entities of more than $10,000,000 in any fiscal year.

"(B) For the purpose of subparagraph (A), a personnel position shall be considered to be reallocated if the entity of the Department of Defense providing policy direction for that position is changed under the transfer involved.".

(b)(1) Clause (A) of section 125(e)(1) of title 10, United States Code, as added by subsection (a), shall apply to tests begun on or after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(2) Clause (B) of section 125(e)(1) of title 10, United States Code, as added by subsection (d), shall apply to transfers, reassignments, and consolidations after January 1, 1983.

REGULATION OF LOBBYING ACT

In compliance with Public Law 601, 79th Congress, title III, Regulation of Lobbying Act, section 308(b), which provides as follows:

(b) All information required to be filed under the provisions of this section with the Clerk of the House of Representatives and the Secretary of the Senate shall be compiled by said Clerk and Secretary, acting jointly, as soon as practicable after the close of the calendar quarter with respect to which such information is filed and shall be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The Clerk of the House of Representatives and the Secretary of the Senate jointly submit their report of the compilation required by said law and have included all registrations and quarterly reports received.

REGISTRATIONS

The following registrations were submitted for the first calendar quarter 1984:

(NOTE.—The form used for report is reproduced below. In the interest of economy in the RECORD, questions are not repeated, only the essential answers are printed, and are indicated by their respective headings.)

FILE ONE COPY WITH THE SECRETARY OF THE SENATE AND FILE TWO COPIES WITH THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES:

"PRELIMINARY" REPORT ("Registration"): To "register," place an "X" below the letter "P" and fill out page 1 only.

REPORT

PURSUANT TO FEDERAL REGULATION OF LOBBYING ACT

P	QUARTER
	1st	2d	3d	4th

NOTE ON ITEM "A".—(a) IN GENERAL. This "Report" form may be used by either an organization or an individual, as follows:
(i) "Employee".—To file as an "employee", state (in Item "B") the name, address, and nature of business of the "employer". (If the "employee" is a firm [such as a law firm or public relations firm], partners and salaried staff members of such firm may join in filing a Report as an "employee".)
(ii) "Employer".—To file as an "employer", write "None" in answer to Item "B".
(b) SEPARATE REPORTS. An agent or employee should not attempt to combine his Report with the employer's Report:
(i) Employers subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their agents or employees.
(ii) Employees subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their employers.

A. ORGANIZATION OR INDIVIDUAL FILING:

1. State name, address, and nature of business.

2. If this Report is for an Employer, list names of agents or employees who will file Reports for this Quarter.

NOTE ON ITEM "B".—Reports by Agents or Employees. An employee is to file, each quarter, as many Reports as he has employers, except that: (a) If a particular undertaking is jointly financed by a group of employers, the group is to be considered as one employer, but all members of the group are to be named, and the contribution of each member is to be specified; (b) if the work is done in the interest of one person but payment therefor is made by another, a single Report—naming both persons as "employers"—is to be filed each quarter.

B. EMPLOYER.—State name, address, and nature of business. If there is no employer, write "None."

NOTE ON ITEM "C".—(a) The expression "in connection with legislative interests," as used in this Report, means "in connection with attempting, directly or indirectly, to influence the passage or defeat of legislation." "The term 'legislation' means bills, resolutions, amendments, nominations, and other matters pending or proposed in either House of Congress, and includes any other matter which may be the subject of action by either House"—§302(e).
(b) Before undertaking any activities in connection with legislative interests, organizations and individuals subject to the Lobbying Act are required to file a "Preliminary" Report (Registration).
(c) After beginning such activities, they must file a "Quarterly" Report at the end of each calendar quarter in which they have either received or expended anything of value in connection with legislative interests.

C. LEGISLATIVE INTERESTS, AND PUBLICATIONS in connection therewith:

1. State approximately how long legislative interests are to continue. If receipts and expenditures in connection with legislative interests have terminated, place an "X" in the box at the left, so that this Office will no longer expect to receive Reports. ☐

2. State the general legislative interests of the person filing and set forth the specific legislative interests by reciting: (a) Short titles of statutes and bills; (b) House and Senate numbers of bills, where known; (c) citations of statutes, where known; (d) whether for or against such statutes and bills.

3. In the case of those publications which the person filing has caused to be issued or distributed in connection with legislative interests, set forth: (a) Description, (b) quantity distributed; (c) date of distribution, (d) name of printer or publisher (if publications were paid for by person filing) or name of donor (if publications were received as a gift).

(Answer items 1, 2, and 3 in the space below. Attach additional pages if more space is needed)

4. If this is a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) rather than a "Quarterly" Report, state below what the nature and amount of anticipated expenses will be; and if for an agent or employee, state also what the daily, monthly, or annual rate of compensation is to be. If this is a "Quarterly" Report, disregard this item "C4" and fill out items "D" and "E" on the back of this page. Do not attempt to combine a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) with a "Quarterly" Report.

QUARTERLY REPORTS*

*All alphanumeric characters and monetary amounts refer to receipts and expenditures on page 2, paragraphs D and E of the Quarterly Report Form.

The following quarterly reports were submitted for the first calendar quarter 1984:

FILE ONE COPY WITH THE SECRETARY OF THE SENATE AND FILE TWO COPIES WITH THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES:

"PRELIMINARY" REPORT ("Registration"): To "register," place an "X" below the letter "P" and fill out page 1 only.

Year: 19.....

REPORT

P	QUARTER
	1st	2d	3d	4th

NOTE ON ITEM "A".—(a) IN GENERAL. This "Report" form may be used by either an organization or an individual, as follows:
(i) "Employee".—To file as an "employee", state (in Item "B") the name, address, and nature of business of the "employer". (If the "employee" is a firm [such as a law firm or public relations firm], partners and salaried staff members of such firm may join in filing a Report as an "employee".)
(ii) "Employer".—To file as an "employer", write "None" in answer to Item "B".
(b) SEPARATE REPORTS. An agent or employee should not attempt to combine his Report with the employer's Report:
(i) Employers subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their agents or employees.
(ii) Employees subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their employers.

A. ORGANIZATION OR INDIVIDUAL FILING:
1. State name, address, and nature of business.

2. If this Report is for an Employer, list names of agents or employees who will file Reports for this Quarter.

NOTE ON ITEM "B".—Reports by Agents or Employees. An employee is to file, each quarter, as many Reports as he has employers, except that: (a) If a particular undertaking is jointly financed by a group of employers, the group is to be considered as one employer, but all members of the group are to be named, and the contribution of each member is to be specified; (b) if the work is done in the interest of one person but payment therefor is made by another, a single Report—naming both persons as "employers"—is to be filed each quarter.

B. EMPLOYER.—State name, address, and nature of business. If there is no employer, write "None."

NOTE ON ITEM "C".—(a) The expression "in connection with legislative interests," as used in this Report, means "in connection with attempting, directly or indirectly, to influence the passage or defeat of legislation." "The term 'legislation' means bills, resolutions, amendments, nominations, and other matters pending or proposed in either House of Congress, and includes any other matter which may be the subject of action by either House"—§302(e).
(b) Before undertaking any activities in connection with legislative interests, organizations and individuals subject to the Lobbying Act are required to file a "Preliminary" Report (Registration).
(c) After beginning such activities, they must file a "Quarterly" Report at the end of each calendar quarter in which they have either received or expended anything of value in connection with legislative interests.

C. LEGISLATIVE INTERESTS, AND PUBLICATIONS in connection therewith:

1. State approximately how long legislative interests are to continue. If receipts and expenditures in connection with legislative interests have terminated, place an "X" in the box at the left, so that this Office will no longer expect to receive Reports. ☐

2. State the general legislative interests of the person filing and set forth the specific legislative interests by reciting: (a) Short titles of statutes and bills; (b) House and Senate numbers of bills, where known; (c) citations of statutes, where known; (d) whether for or against such statutes and bills.

3. In the case of those publications which the person filing has caused to be issued or distributed in connection with legislative interests, set forth: (a) Description, (b) quantity distributed; (c) date of distribution, (d) name of printer or publisher (if publications were paid for by person filing) or name of donor (if publications were received as a gift).

(Answer items 1, 2, and 3 in the space below. Attach additional pages if more space is needed)

4. If this is a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) rather than a "Quarterly" Report, state below what the nature and amount of anticipated expenses will be; and if for an agent or employee, state also what the daily, monthly, or annual rate of compensation is to be. If this is a "Quarterly" Report, disregard this item "C4" and fill out items "D" and "E" on the back of this page. Do not attempt to combine a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) with a "Quarterly" Report.

AFFIDAVIT

NOTE ON ITEM "D."—(a) In General. The term "contribution" includes anything of value. When an organization or individual uses printed or duplicated matter in a campaign attempting to influence legislation, money received by such organization or individual—for such printed or duplicated matter—is a "contribution." "The term 'contribution' includes a gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money, or anything of value, and includes a contract, promise, or agreement, whether or not legally enforceable, to make a contribution"—Section 302(a) of the Lobbying Act.

(b) IF THIS REPORT IS FOR AN EMPLOYER.—(i) In General. Item "D" is designed for the reporting of all receipts from which expenditures are made, or will be made, in accordance with legislative interests.

(ii) Receipts of Business Firms and Individuals.—A business firm (or individual) which is subject to the Lobbying Act by reason of expenditures which it makes in attempting to influence legislation—but which has no funds to expend except those which are available in the ordinary course of operating a business not connected in any way with the influencing of legislation—will have no receipts to report, even though it does have expenditures to report.

(iii) Receipts of Multipurpose Organizations.—Some organizations do not receive any funds which are to be expended solely for the purpose of attempting to influence legislation. Such organizations make such expenditures out of a general fund raised by dues, assessments, or other contributions. The percentage of the general fund which is used for such expenditures indicates the percentage of dues, assessments, or other contributions which may be considered to have been paid for that purpose. Therefore, in reporting receipts, such organizations may specify what that percentage is, and report their dues, assessments, and other contributions on that basis. However, each contributor of $500 or more is to be listed, regardless of whether the contribution was made solely for legislative purposes.

(c) IF THIS REPORT IS FOR AN AGENT OR EMPLOYEE.—(i) In General. In the case of many employees, all receipts will come under Items "D 5" (received for services) and "D 12" (expense money and reimbursements). In the absence of a clear statement to the contrary, it will be presumed that your employer is to reimburse you for all expenditures which you make in connection with legislative interests.

(ii) Employer as Contributor of $500 or More.—When your contribution from your employer (in the form of salary, fee, etc.) amounts to $500 or more, it is not necessary to report such contribution under "D 13" and "D 14," since the amount has already been reported under "D 5," and the name of the "employer" has been given under Item "B" on page 1 of this report.

D. RECEIPTS (INCLUDING CONTRIBUTIONS AND LOANS):

Fill in every blank. If the answer to any numbered item is "None," write "None" in the space following the number.

Receipts (other than loans)

1. $.....Dues and assessments
2. $.....Gifts of money or anything of value

12. $.....Expense money" and Reimbursements received this Quarter

Contributors of $500 or more (from Jan. 1 through this Quarter)

13. Have there been such contributors?

Please answer "yes" or "no": .....

14. In the case of each contributor whose contributions (including loans) during the "period" from January 1 through the last days of this Quarter total $500 or more:

Attach hereto plain sheets of paper, approximately the size of this page, tabulate data under the headings "Amount" and "Name and Address of Contributor"; and indicate whether the last day of the period is March 31, June 30, September 30, or December 31. Prepare such tabulation in accordance with the following example:

Amount	Name and address of Contributor ("Period" from Jan. 1 through....., 19.....)
$1,500.00	John Doe, 1621 Blank Bldg., New York, N.Y.
$1,785.00	The Roe Corporation, 2511 Doe Bldg., Chicago, Ill.
$3,285.00	TOTAL

NOTE ON ITEM "E".—(a) In General. "The term 'expenditure' includes a payment, distribution, loan, advance, deposit, or gift of money or anything of value, and includes a contract, promise, or agreement, whether or not legally enforceable, to make an expenditure"—Section 302(b) of the Lobbying Act.

(b) IF THIS REPORT IS FOR AN AGENT OR EMPLOYEE. In the case of many employees, all expenditures will come under telephone and telegraph (Item "E 6") and travel, food, lodging, and entertainment (Item "E 7").

*All alphanumeric characters and monetary amounts refer to receipts and expenditures on page 2, paragraphs D and E of the Quarterly Report Form.

The following reports for the fourth calendar quarter of 1983 were received too late to be included in the published reports for that quarter:

FILE ONE COPY WITH THE SECRETARY OF THE SENATE AND FILE TWO COPIES WITH THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES:

"PRELIMINARY" REPORT ("Registration"): To "register," place an "X" below the letter "P" and fill out page 1 only.

REPORT

P	QUARTER
	1st	2d	3d	4th

NOTE ON ITEM "A".—(a) IN GENERAL. This "Report" form may be used by either an organization or an individual, as follows:
(i) "Employee".—To file as an "employee", state (in Item "B") the name, address, and nature of business of the "employer". (If the "employee" is a firm [such as a law firm or public relations firm], partners and salaried staff members of such firm may join in filing a Report as an "employee".)
(ii) "Employer".—To file as an "employer", write "None" in answer to Item "B".
(b) SEPARATE REPORTS. An agent or employee should not attempt to combine his Report with the employer's Report:
(i) Employers subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their agents or employees.
(ii) Employees subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their employers.

A. ORGANIZATION OR INDIVIDUAL FILING:
1. State name, address, and nature of business.

2. If this Report is for an Employer, list names of agents or employees who will file Reports for this Quarter.

NOTE ON ITEM "B".—Reports by Agents or Employees. An employee is to file, each quarter, as many Reports as he has employers, except that: (a) If a particular undertaking is jointly financed by a group of employers, the group is to be considered as one employer, but all members of the group are to be named, and the contribution of each member is to be specified; (b) if the work is done in the interest of one person but payment therefor is made by another, a single Report—naming both persons as "employers"—is to be filed each quarter.

B. EMPLOYER.—State name, address, and nature of business. If there is no employer, write "None."

NOTE ON ITEM "C".—(a) The expression "in connection with legislative interests," as used in this Report, means "in connection with attempting, directly or indirectly, to influence the passage or defeat of legislation." "The term 'legislation' means bills, resolutions, amendments, nominations, and other matters pending or proposed in either House of Congress, and includes any other matter which may be the subject of action by either House"—§302(e).
(b) Before undertaking any activities in connection with legislative interests, organizations and individuals subject to the Lobbying Act are required to file a "Preliminary" Report (Registration).
(c) After beginning such activities, they must file a "Quarterly" Report at the end of each calendar quarter in which they have either received or expended anything of value in connection with legislative interests.

C. LEGISLATIVE INTERESTS, AND PUBLICATIONS in connection therewith:

1. State approximately how long legislative interests are to continue. If receipts and expenditures in connection with legislative interests have terminated, place an "X" in the box at the left, so that this Office will no longer expect to receive Reports. ☐

2. State the general legislative interests of the person filing and set forth the specific legislative interests by reciting: (a) Short titles of statutes and bills; (b) House and Senate numbers of bills, where known; (c) citations of statutes, where known; (d) whether for or against such statutes and bills.

3. In the case of those publications which the person filing has caused to be issued or distributed in connection with legislative interests, set forth: (a) Description, (b) quantity distributed; (c) date of distribution, (d) name of printer or publisher (if publications were paid for by person filing) or name of donor (if publications were received as a gift).

(Answer items 1, 2, and 3 in the space below. Attach additional pages if more space is needed)

4. If this is a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) rather than a "Quarterly" Report, state below what the nature and amount of anticipated expenses will be; and if for an agent or employee, state also what the daily, monthly, or annual rate of compensation is to be. If this is a "Quarterly" Report, disregard this item "C4" and fill out items "D" and "E" on the back of this page. Do not attempt to combine a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) with a "Quarterly" Report.

AFFIDAVIT

NOTE ON ITEM "D."—(a) In General. The term "contribution" includes anything of value. When an organization or individual uses printed or duplicated matter in a campaign attempting to influence legislation, money received by such organization or individual—for such printed or duplicated matter—is a "contribution." "The term 'contribution' includes a gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money, or anything of value, and includes a contract, promise, or agreement, whether or not legally enforceable, to make a contribution"—Section 302(a) of the Lobbying Act.

(b) IF THIS REPORT IS FOR AN EMPLOYER.—(i) In General. Item "D" is designed for the reporting of all receipts from which expenditures are made, or will be made, in accordance with legislative interests.

(ii) Receipts of Business Firms and Individuals.—A business firm (or individual) which is subject to the Lobbying Act by reason of expenditures which it makes in attempting to influence legislation—but which has no funds to expend except those which are available in the ordinary course of operating a business not connected in any way with the influencing of legislation—will have no receipts to report, even though it does have expenditures to report.

(iii) Receipts of Multipurpose Organizations.—Some organizations do not receive any funds which are to be expended solely for the purpose of attempting to influence legislation. Such organizations make such expenditures out of a general fund raised by dues, assessments, or other contributions. The percentage of the general fund which is used for such expenditures indicates the percentage of dues, assessments, or other contributions which may be considered to have been paid for that purpose. Therefore, in reporting receipts, such organizations may specify what that percentage is, and report their dues, assessments, and other contributions on that basis. However, each contributor of $500 or more is to be listed, regardless of whether the contribution was made solely for legislative purposes.

(c) IF THIS REPORT IS FOR AN AGENT OR EMPLOYEE.—(i) In General. In the case of many employees, all receipts will come under Items "D 5" (received for services) and "D 12" (expense money and reimbursements). In the absence of a clear statement to the contrary, it will be presumed that your employer is to reimburse you for all expenditures which you make in connection with legislative interests.

(ii) Employer as Contributor of $500 or More.—When your contribution from your employer (in the form of salary, fee, etc.) amounts to $500 or more, it is not necessary to report such contribution under "D 13" and "D 14," since the amount has already been reported under "D 5," and the name of the "employer" has been given under Item "B" on page 1 of this report.

D. RECEIPTS (INCLUDING CONTRIBUTIONS AND LOANS):

Fill in every blank. If the answer to any numbered item is "None," write "None" in the space following the number.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

A SALUTE TO GLOVER WILKINS

HON. BILL CHAPPELL, JR.

OF FLORIDA

Monday, May 7, 1984

● Mr. CHAPPELL. Mr. Speaker, as many of my colleagues know, Glover Wilkins, Administrator of the Tennessee-Tombigbee Waterway Authority, is retiring. I would like to share with those who know him, and particularly those who do not, the accomplishments achieved by this man over the last 37 years or so through his spirit and dedication. I submit to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for reprint his biography, which I found best describes the man I know.

Glover Wilkins, Administrator of the Tennessee-Tombigbee Waterway Authority, and the Huck Finn of the Tombigbee, grew up around the river—near his native Brooksville, MS.

Unlike Huck Finn, however, Glover Wilkins has much more vision and ambition for his river than Twain's legendary character had for his.

Glover Wilkins has been associated with the Tennessee-Tombigbee Waterway Authority since its inception, but his dreams for the waterway dates back to 1947 when he was manager of the Columbus, Mississippi Chamber of Commerce. Up until 1958, when Wilkins became Assistant Administrator of the newly formed Tenn-Tom Authority, the chamber with Wilkins at the helm, kept alive the proposed Tennessee-Tombigbee Waterway. From the beginning of his association with Tenn-Tom, Glover Wilkins has been active in maintaining liaison with the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, builder of the waterway, and elected Representatives of the U.S. Congress.

His friends and associates know that Glover Wilkins' dedication to the Tenn-Tom project is all consuming. His interest in water resources of this Nation is evidenced by his active association with many regional and national water resource organizations.

He is regional trustee of the Ohio Valley Improvement Association and a past president of the Water Resources Associates, a national group of professional water resource people.

Immediate past chairman of the National Waterways Conference, Inc., he is also a member and past vice president of the Water Resource Congress and served on President Kennedy's Waterway Resource Policy Committee.

He is a member of the Tennessee River Valley Association Board of Directors, and has also served on the Small Business Advisory Council for the State of Mississippi.

In November 1962, he was named Administrator of the Tennessee-Tombigbee Waterway Development Authority, his present position.

Mr. Speaker, Glover Wilkins is a man we will be sorry to see leave the helm of the Tennessee-Tombigbee Waterway Development Authority. It gives me great pleasure to extend to him best wishes for a happy, healthy retirement. It is time now for him to enjoy all the things he helped make possible. He has certainly dedicated a lifetime toward preserving our water resources, and we all thank him for his efforts and commitment.●

CUFFING THE CONSTITUTION

HON. HENRY J. HYDE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 7, 1984

● Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, one of the major omissions of this House, under the strong political control of the Democratic Party, is its refusal to advance legislation dealing with criminal law reform.

Curiously, the Los Angeles Times supports this unfortunate failure to act in a recent editorial. The Attorney General, William French Smith, has answered the editorial in an interesting letter to the editor which appeared on April 23, 1984, and which deserves the attention of my colleagues:

[From the Los Angeles Times, Apr. 23, 1984]

In urging the House of Representatives to pass the Administration's anti-crime legislation, President Reagan declared that "it is about time we take the handcuffs off law enforcement and put them on thugs and murderers." This led the editors of The Times to suggest in its editorial (April 13), "Cuffing the Constitution," that the legislation "would put handcuffs on the Constitution." In fact, these anti-crime measures have been written with careful consideration for individual civil liberties and constitutional rights. They have been recognized by the Department of Justice and an overwhelming majority of the Senate—where the bulk of the legislation passed by a vote of 91-1—as critically needed to protect our citizens. The legislation is both prudent and essential, and it should be passed by the House immediately.

The Times criticizes three provisions in the crime package. First, it attacks the modification of the so-called exclusionary rule. The bill would allow courts to hear evidence collected by law enforcement officers who reasonably and in good faith thought they were acting lawfully. It reflects a growing concern in the country that the exclusionary rule's unjustified ill effects need to be curbed.

In California, for instance, a study conducted by the National Institute of Justice found that between 1976 and 1979 more than 4,000 state felony cases were dropped because of the exclusionary rule. The study also showed that half of those not prosecuted in 1976 and 1977 because of the exclusionary rule were re-arrested during the next two years—on an average of three times apiece.

The Times editorial erroneously concludes that the crime package will somehow reward police ignorance. This is simply not, the case. The Senate made clear that the belief the search was lawful must be grounded in objective reasonableness. It must be based on articulable grounds sufficient to cause a reasonable and reasonably trained police officer to conclude that his actions were justified.

The Times' second criticism involves the insanity defense. While The Times embraced one part of the Administration's efforts to improve the insanity defense as "a sensible reform long advocated,"; it challenged the companion effort to restrict the defense to those defendants who are genuinely mentally ill.

The crime package would eliminate the unworkable portion of the current two-part test for insanity. That test now permits the acquittal of a mentally ill defendant if (1) he did not realize that his conduct was wrong, or (2) if knowing it was wrong, he was unable to control it. The latter, "control" part of the test confronts courts and juries with the nearly impossible task of distinguishing between persons who are unable to control their conduct and those who are merely unwilling to do so. As the American Psychiatric Assn. noted recently, the "line between an irresistible impluse and an impulse not resisted is probably no sharper than that between twilight and dusk." Since there is no objective basis for making the distinction, the test invites fabricated claims and produces moral guesses masked as factual determinations.

Finally, The Times editorial states that the bail reforms advocated by the Senate would require a defendant awaiting trial to "prove" he wouldn't commit a crime while out on bail in order to secure pretrial release.

Here again, this is simply not what the anti-crime legislation does. Instead, it would create a limited, but important, authorization for detaining a defendant prior to trial where the government proves that the safety of the community or the appearance of the defendant at trial cannot be reasonably assured if the defendant is released.

These bail reforms have been endorsed by the Attorney General's Task Force on Violent Crime, the President's Task Force on Victims of Crime, and the National District Attorneys Assn. Consideration of a defendant's dangerousness for pretrial release has also been supported by the National Governors' Assn., the National Assn. of Attorneys General, and the American Bar Assn.

The broad support for all three of these improvements in the criminal justice system reflects a growing concern by Americans about the terrible toll of violent crime. The good faith exception to the exclusionary rule passed the Senate by a 63-to-24 vote, and the improvements in the insanity defense and bail laws were passed with the rest of the Administration's Comprehensive Crime Control Act by the overwhelming vote of 91-1 that I mentioned earlier. These proposals—and the others in the anti-crime package—enjoy bipartisan support and are constitutionally sound. They are also critically necessary. The House should pass them without delay. It has no excuse not to.

Attorney General, Washington, D.C.●

RAPE PREVENTION MONTH 1984

HON. JAMES J. FLORIO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 7, 1984

● Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, since 1973, Women Against Rape (WAR) has been helping rape victims and their families cope with the realities of this intolerable offense.

Through volunteer escort and counseling services, this private, nonprofit organization has become an invaluable part of our public safety enforcement system throughout this country. Over the past 10 years, WAR has developed crime prevention programs specifically targeted toward rape prevention techniques. In addition, this organization has faithfully disseminated information regarding these programs and guidelines for rape victims to schools, church, and community organizations.

In an effort to aid its campaign to better educate the American public in the prevention and treatment of rape cases, the Collingwood, NJ, chapter of WAR, in conjunction with the Burlington County Board of Chosen Freeholders, has declared May 1984 as "Rape Prevention Month." During this month, as in the past 4 years, this group will be making film and slide presentations on rape prevention available to interested groups, as well as conducting a high school essay contest on violence and its effects.

At this time, I would like to applaud this particular WAR chapter for its continued dedication in the fight against the rising tide of rape and its side effects. I urge all citizens, educational institutions, and public and private organizations in New Jersey and across this country to fully participate in the observance of this month as Rape Prevention Month.

The war against rape is one we cannot afford to lose.●

GEORGE FRAMPTON'S PROPHECY

HON. MEL LEVINE

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 7, 1984

● Mr. LEVINE of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to bring to the attention of my colleagues the prescient comments of George Frampton 10 years ago. George Frampton, an extraordinarily talented lawyer, whom I have the privilege to call my friend, warned his then boss, Leon Jaworski, of the consequences of not prosecuting former President Nixon for his Watergate crimes. Lloyd Shearer brought George Frampton's prophecy to light in an illuminating article in yesterday's Parade magazine. I ask unanimous consent to insert that article at this point, and I commend it to my colleagues.

The article follows:

GEORGE FRAMPTON'S PROPHECY

(By Lloyd Shearer)

The more that former President Richard Nixon comes in out of the cold trying to "reimage" himself as an elder statesman, the more accurate becomes the prophecy of George Frampton, an attorney now in the office of Rogovin, Huge and Lenzner in Washington, D.C.

Ten years ago, George Frampton (Yale '64, London School of Economics '66, Harvard Law School '69 and law clerk to Justice Harry Blackmun of the U.S. Supreme Court 1971-72) was one of the brilliant young lawyers on the Watergate Special Prosecuting Force, headed by the late Leon Jaworski. It was this task force that unearthed the criminal secrets of Watergate—the tapes, lies, evasions, conspiracies and stonewallings—which compelled Nixon's resignation on Aug. 9, 1974, without any apology to the nation or admission of guilt.

The closest Nixon came to an apology in his resignation speech was: "I regret deeply any injuries that may have been done in the course of events that led to this decision. I would say only that if some of my judgments were wrong, and some were wrong, they were made in what I believed at the time to be in the best interest of the nation."

Nixon's reluctance to admit his transgressions rankled Jaworski, who held him in contempt for obstructing justice, abusing the power of his position and turning the office of the Presidency "into a mean den where perjury and low scheming became a way of life." Jaworski asked his staff whether he should move to have Nixon indicted on half a dozen charges by the grand jury (which was eager to do so) and then tried in a court of law. Practically the entire staff recommended indictment of the President.

George Frampton, then only 29, put his recommendation down on paper. "I wonder if 10 years from now," he wrote late in August 1974, "history will endorse the notion that Mr. Nixon has 'suffered enough.' The powerful men around him have also lost their jobs and been disgraced, but many of them will have lost their liberty and livelihood. Mr. Nixon, on the other hand, will continue to be supported in lavish style with a pension and subsidies at taxpayers' expense until his death. He may reenter public life, however morally crippled."

"The prospect of Mr. Nixon publishing his memoirs (and thereby adding several million dollars to his net worth)," Frampton continued, "should remind us that, unlike his aides who are convicted of crime, Mr. Nixon will have the 'last say' about his own role in Watergate if he is not prosecuted. This is why, in my view, it is important (absent of a full admission of guilt) to have some definitive resolution of Mr. Nixon's Watergate actions.

"What is certain is that if he is not prosecuted . . . and after there is no more Special Prosecutor, Mr. Nixon in his writing and speaking will have the final opportunity to defend and justify his own role in Watergate as proper, constitutional and in the national interest . . . and to argue that only the political hysteria of the times brought about his downfall."

Thirty days after he became President, Gerald Ford pardoned Richard Nixon for all offenses, and the question of trying Nixon became moot.

This March, CBS paid $500,000 for 90 minutes of interviews with Nixon, now 71, by his former staff assistant, Frank Gannon. And on March 14, the Washington Post Service ran a report by Margot Hornblower that read: "The cream of America's business and industrial establishment welcomed Richard Nixon back into the fold. A sellout crowd of 1600 at the Economic Club of New York . . . gave him three standing ovations . . . Nobody mentioned Watergate."●

A TRIBUTE TO MARY LABYAK AND HOSPICE CARE, INC.

HON. MICHAEL BILIRAKIS

OF FLORIDA

Monday, May 7, 1984

● Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Speaker, Mary Labyak, administrator of Hospice Care, Inc., on whose board of directors I proudly serve, was recently appointed to the American Academy of Medical Administrators. In the most recent publication of Hospice, Inc., "Let's Keep In Touch," a feature article was carried on her that I would like to share with this Congress:

Congratulations to Mary Labyak, Administrator, on her recent appointment to the American Academy of Medical Administrators. Mary was elected as an affiliate of the academy which confers this honor upon those who show special qualifications in medical administration and merit such recognition.

The purpose of the academy is to provide a professional organization dedicated to developing innovative concepts in the field of health care administration and to the promotion and advancement of its members in knowledge, professional standing and personal endeavors, through education and research in management, administration and the philosophy of health care.

The academy is an international professional society which encourages and fosters a scientific approach to the practice of medical administration; provides a means of intercommunications; promotes conducts and institutes educational courses in this speciality, establishes and maintains a criterion for those engaged in this profession, and to provide for recognition by means of fellowships, grants, and scholarships to those performing noteworthy service in health care leadership.

This is truly an honor for Mary and Hospice Care is very proud of our own administrator. Congratulations.

I want to personally congratulate her and all those connected with the hospice and wish them continued success in their efforts of sharing love and understanding.●

STATESMANSHIP AT GROUP W BROADCASTING

HON. AL SWIFT

OF WASHINGTON

Monday, May 7, 1984

● Mr. SWIFT. Mr. Speaker, recently, Mr. Lawrence Fraiberg, president of the Group W Television Station Group gave an excellent speech to the National Academy of Television Arts and Sciences. Among the topics he discussed on that occasion was the use by broadcasters of exit poll data to make election projections while people are still voting: He made a strong plea for voluntary restraint by the broadcast media.

Previously, I included here a copy of the article from Broadcasting magazine about the speech, and Mrs. BOXER, of California, has included the speech in its entirety.

I believe Mr. Fraiberg's statements contributed so much to the dialog that has been conducted between representatives of the broadcast media and some of us in Congress on this issue, however, that today I would ask the indulgence of my colleagues to allow me to specifically highlight and comment on some of what Mr. Fraiberg had to say.

First, along with urging broadcasters to voluntarily refrain from using exit poll data to make election projections, Mr. Fraiberg called for a national uniform 24-hour election day. I am among those who have been reluctant to support this idea for two reasons. The first is that the evidence from the hearings held by the task force on elections of the House Administration Committee is that a 24-hour period for voting would be quite disruptive of the surprisingly fragile process by which we conduct elections in this country.

And second, any attempt to establish a uniform poll closing time in order to prevent election projections could very easily be short-circuited by broadcasters. Since the advent of the idea of using exit poll data to make election projections, broadcasters no longer need any actual vote totals to make their projections. Without voluntary restraint by the broadcasters—which is exactly what most of them have been resisting so strenuously—a uniform poll closing time would do nothing to prevent early projections.

However, I would like to state for the record that if thoughtful, concerned journalists like Mr. Fraiberg can initiate a process leading to firm guidelines in the broadcasting industry about waiting for the polls to close before making election projections, I for one am certainly willing to discuss potential complementary changes in the electoral process.

The second portion of Mr. Fraiberg's speech I would like to highlight is the following:

I can envision an election in which the Presidency itself could turn on a few percentage points in the West. In such a situation, exit polls could actually elect the President.

If anyone here thinks I'm exaggerating the problem, just listen to the words of ABC's Ted Koppel. On election night, 1980, at 10:15 p.m., Koppel said: "It's inevitable now that as this night continues, that Democrats are simply not going to bother to vote where the polls are still open. Why should they? It's all over as far as they're concerned."

Ten minutes later—probably after some heated discussion at ABC—Koppel changed his mind. He said: "Voters on the West Coast: There's more than just a Presidential race. Please do vote!"

But in a very real, very ominous way, Ted Koppel was right the first time. Television had made millions of American voters feel helpless—superfluous.

My comment on this, Mr. Speaker, is simply to point out that every time we get together with broadcasters to discuss the problem of early projections, we get a civics lecture. The broadcasters all piously argue that voters should know their votes count despite the projections; that they should be more mature and go vote on other races even though they have been told the Presidential race is over; that they should know projections are only projections, so they should vote despite having been assured by television news that their votes are irrelevant, and so forth.

And yet, even a network news person—a mature, knowledgeable individual who knew exactly the difference between projections and actual vote totals—had precisely the same reaction—"It's all over and Western votes don't count"—that most Western voters had. I have argued, and I think this bears out, that New York network news people are trying to impose a rather unreasonable standard of civic duty—that people should be expected to go cast their ballots after the election is over—on Western voters.

The third statement of Mr. Fraiberg's that I would like to highlight is:

I dislike the entire idea of legislatures meddling in the area of free speech and journalistic integrity.

I would argue that it is up to us to "head them off at the pass": to show that we can keep our own house in order.

What more can I say to that than: "Hear, hear." This is just exactly the sentiment of those of us in the Congress who have been working on this issue. It is just exactly what we have been asking for, and it is all we are asking for.

The fourth and final comment by Mr. Fraiberg that is particularly worthy of note was when he concluded:

That is why I am announcing today that the news directors of Group W broadcast stations have agreed not to release any of their own exit-poll projections until all polls for that office are closed. If this puts us in an inferior position competitively—then, so be it."

If other members of the broadcast media would demonstrate that kind of statesmanship, this whole problem would immediately be solved.●

PEERLESS INSTRUMENTS, INC., AWARDED "SUBCONTRACTOR OF THE YEAR" FOR REGION II BY U.S. SMALL BUSINESS ADMINISTRATION

HON. GARY L. ACKERMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 7, 1984

● Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to announce to my colleagues that a firm in my district, Peerless Instruments Co., Inc., of Elmhurst, Queens, has been named the "Regional Subcontractor of the Year" by the U.S. Small Business Administration for region II, which encompasses New York, New Jersey, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands.

Each year, judges representing prime contractors in each region select one firm to receive this honor. The Peerless Instruments Co., a leading supplier of precision parts, complex electromechanical assemblies, and advanced electronic control equipment, has won this prestigious award for its fine performance.

Peerless designs, manufactures, and tests critical assemblies and systems of the U.S. aircraft carrier Enterprise, the nuclear submarine Nautilus, trident submarines, and the F-14 and F-16 fighter jets. In addition, Peerless Instruments has earned a nationwide reputation for quality and reliability, and has been designated major supplier for the nuclear Navy by the Naval Sea Systems Command.

As the regional award winner, the company is now eligible to be considered for the coveted National "Small Business Subcontractor of the Year" award. The national winner will be announced at the 17th Annual Small Business Procurement Conference and Awards Banquet, which will be held May 8, 1984.

I congratulate the company's president, Thomas W. Considine, and all of the employees at Peerless Instruments, Inc., who share this award through their dedication.●

LOUISVILLE DEBATE TEAM RANKS HIGH NATIONALLY

HON. ROMANO L. MAZZOLI

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 7, 1984

● Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend the University of Louisville debate team on another outstanding season of tournament competition. The team was runnerup in the national tournament which took place at the University of Tennessee in Knoxville.

This is the second time in 3 years that the University of Louisville debators have reached the final round, and the third time in 4 years that they have reached the final four.

I commend the efforts of Cindy Leiferman (senior) and Mark Whitehead (junior) who constituted the University of Louisville debate squad.

The success of the University of Louisville debate team in recent years attests to the talents of the students, the quality of the program, and the coaching skills of Dr. Thomas J. Hynes, Jr.

I applaud the accomplishments of the 1984 University of Louisville debate team and wish them much continued success.●

A TRIBUTE TO MSGR. DANIEL J. BOURKE

HON. DOUG BARNARD, JR.

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 7, 1984

● Mr. BARNARD. Mr. Speaker, this summer one of the leading religious figures in Georgia will be celebrating the 50th anniversary of his ordination to the priesthood. Msgr. Daniel J. Bourke has devoted long years of service to his parishioners in my hometown of Augusta, GA, and in numerous other cities as well. Even after retirement, he continues to be active in parish affairs and frequently assists in pastoral responsibilities in Savannah.

It is no surprise that Monsignor Bourke's energy and enthusiasm and devotion continue unabated, because he has shown these traits since he was a young man growing up in Ireland.

A native of Birr, County Offaly, Monsignor Bourke prepared for the priesthood in Dublin. He was ordained June 24, 1934, at All Hallows Seminary. That fall he arrived in Savannah, GA, and began a lifetime of service by working in Albany, Douglas, and Savannah parishes.

I came to know this jovial Irishman while he served as pastor of St. Mary's on the Hill Parish, Augusta, from 1957 to 1970.

While carrying out his parish assignments, Monsignor Bourke held a number of diocesan appointments. From 1970 to 1976, he was vicar for special administative services and diocesan comptroller. He also was president of Aquinas High School, Augusta, from 1957 to 1970. He has been a member of the Knights of Columbus since 1935.

Since his retirement, Monsignor Bourke has been living in Savannah, where a golden jubilee celebration is planned for him May 17. Likewise, St. Mary's on the Hill Parish in Augusta plans to honor this gifted man with a celebration on May 11.

I am happy to join his many friends and admirers in paying tribute to one who has contributed so much to his community and to his church.●

ANDROPOV'S DEATH AND THE PROSPECTS OF A NEW REALISM

HON. PHILIP M. CRANE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 7, 1984

● Mr. PHILIP M. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, the following article by Ray Cline, entitled "Andropov's Death and the Prospects of a New Realism," appeared in the Washington Times in mid-February. As you may recall, in the wake of Andropov's death, many Americans accepted the false premise that a new Soviet leader would bring about monumental changes in Soviet-American relations.

In retrospect, Mr. Cline, a senior associate at the Center for Strategic and International Studies at Georgetown University, and a former Deputy Director for Intelligence at CIA, correctly warned that Andropov's death would mean nothing to the Soviet decisionmaking structure. Regardless of the man in charge, every leader in the Politburo is cut from the same Leninist-Stalinist indoctrinated mold. As Mr. Cline explains, the Soviet Hierarchy produces continuity and stability, not sudden changes of course, even in the event of the death of its leader.

Mr. Chernenko's continued refusal to return to the nuclear arms negotiating table, his outright objection to on-site verification, and his renewed campaign against the freedom fighters in Afghanistan are but a few examples of how this "new realism" has fared in just the last few months. I urge my colleagues to take a look at Mr. Cline's article and to heed his warnings.

ANDROPOV'S DEATH AND THE PROSPECTS OF A NEW REALISM

(By Ray Cline)

Honest Americans ought to send their representatives decently and politely to Moscow, not to praise Yuri Andropov, but to bury him. His career rise through the Communist Party bureaucracy and the KGB secret police to the top of the Politburo marked one of the most violent and deceitful periods in Soviet policy toward the United States. It is naive and dangerous to forget and forgive at the grave and speak as if Andropov was a friend and Moscow means us well.

Yuri Andropov's career came to its first revealing climax in the bloody betrayal and butchery of national communist reformers in Hungary in 1956. He saw massive Soviet arming and coaching of Hanoi's military forces to inflict a humiliating defeat on 500,000 American soldiers, sailors, and airmen and then to crush independence and freedom oriented South Vietnamese and Cambodians like bugs. He promoted the replacement of many billions of dollars worth of weapons in Arab hands to spark repeated Arab-Israeli wars and dislocate the whole world's oil supply from the Persian Gulf.

Observing such a payoff for deploying proxy forces against Americans and their allies, Moscow in Andropov's heyday in the KGB and the Politburo exploited a thousand regional grievances around the globe to create lavishly equipped armies in client states like North Korea, North Vietnam, Syria, and Cuba. It encouraged and assisted each to recruit, train, arm, and fund local fighting units dedicated to undermining and destabilizing neighboring states.

A covert war has been going on in the 1970s and 1980s sponsored by the Soviet Union through proxies of proxies to commit acts of cold-blooded terrorist violence, wage destructive ethnic and religious wars against Christians, Jews, and "Yankees," and secretly coordinate revolutionary political warfare in a dozen nations aimed at multiplying Soviet clout and diminishing American influence and prestige.

The mischievous blather from many congressional, academic, and media pundits favoring a friendly gesture by President Reagan of attending Andropov's funeral seemed to suggest that all this international violence is America's fault. Moreover, in typical American pollyanna style they hoped that a kindly personal move made in a "bygones are bygones" manner could magically set Soviet-American relations on a cordial new path. The occupation of Afghanistan and the rape of Lebanon are not so easily repaired.

This kind of gesture by Reagan might have been good domestic politics. It would have been disastrous international policy. In most parts of the world it would be interpreted as reflecting a sense of guilt in Washington, a Vietnam-like weakness in American policy toward Lebanon, and an obsequious American haste to persuade the next head man in Moscow, whoever he turns out to be, to ease the strategic pressure on the American people.

Perhaps many citizens in our rich and tolerant society might think President Reagan was demonstrating the generosity of the strong, but in Soviet, Arab, Latin, and most other cultures such behavior would certainly be read as revealing the deep, hidden anxiety of the weak. Such a signal is wrong and dangerous to send today if the United States intends to have any role defending its own cultural values and economic interests in international conflicts swirling about us in every quarter.

President Reagan fortunately understood these matters. He understands, though he has failed to persuade the Democrats in Congress and most media moguls, that Andropov's death probably means nothing at all for Soviet decisionmaking. Another personality will take his place, cut from the same cloth, dedicated to the same Leninist-Stalinist ideology and the same KGB-armed forces strategy.

After all, the "young men" in the ruling system in the Soviet Union are in their fifties and sixties and were closely vetted by their senior colleagues in their seventies when they were coopted into the top leadership by Breshnev and recently by Andropov. This one-party dictatorship structure of government is not like ours. It produces continuity and stability, not constant trimming or sudden changes of course.

Every leader in the Politburo learned the basic philosphy of communist states as enunciated by Lenin (war is politics by other means, or politics is war by other means) and Mao Tse-tung (political power grows from the barrel of a gun). Whoever emerges on top of the heap must have the triple support system behind him—the enormous Communist Party bureaucracy, the secret police, and the military forces. Everyone has been taught since he was a child that his society is in an irreconcilable systemic war with the pluralist democracies. He will toe the party line because he has to. Changes in direction in the near term will be tactical and propagandistic, not strategic. Real Soviet policy shifts in search of a modus vivendi enabling the two superpowers to live together without constant and costly conflict will come slowly. They will come at all only if Americans get a clearer picture in their heads of the kind of turbulent world we live in and show some dignity in a prudent determination to protect ourselves, our friends, and our strategic interest. The next phase of the nasty, destructive war in Lebanon probably will be the best litmus test both for Soviet intentions and American firmness.

If thinking about Andropov's death leads to greater realism on the part of Americans rather than fantasies of instant, friendly solutions of bitter differences at improvised summits, Yuri Andropov will in the long run have made a contribution to world peace. Otherwise things will go on much in the same sorry vein as during his active political lifetime. Let us hope that at least a modest learning process may get under way both in Washington and Moscow.

(Ray S. Cline, a senior associate at the Center for Strategic and International Studies at Georgetown University, is a former deputy director for intelligence, the CIA.)●

TRIBUTE TO MOUNT ANTHONY HIGH SCHOOL'S CLOSE-UP PROGRAM

HON. JAMES M. JEFFORDS

OF VERMONT

Monday, May 7, 1984

● Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Speaker, in 1979 schools from Vermont began participating in the Close-up program. Since then nearly 1,500 students and teachers from the State have experienced firsthand a week-long government studies program in Washington. I wish to recognize and give special welcome to students from Mount Anthony Union High in Bennington, who with their teacher Alan George, represent the single largest group ever to participate from the State of Vermont. These 38 enthusiastic participants have arrived in Washington to explore and experience the workings of our Government through seminars, workshops, and study tours.

The entire Bennington community is to be commended for the outstanding support it has provided to the program. Without the generous contributions of many people throughout Bennington, this trip would not have been possible for many of the students. It is in keeping with Vermont spirit of working together to achieve common goals, that this remarkable accomplishment has been realized.

The key to the Close-up program is involvement. I am very pleased to see that Mr. George and the students from Mount Anthony have set such an outstanding example of involvement in the democratic process for others to follow. To them and everyone who helped make it possible my sincere congratulations.●

Monday, May 7, 1984

● Mr. LEVINE of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in honor of my friend and constituent, Prof. Derek Shearer, who was recently awarded a prestigious Guggenheim Fellowship for 1984–85.

Professor Shearer, the director of urban studies at Occidental College, was 1 of 283 scholars, artists, and scientists who were chosen from among 3,542 applicants in the 60th annual Guggenheim competition. The fellows are selected by a committee of seven experts who meet each February to consider applications. The fellowships are awarded on the basis of past accomplishments in a given field, and a strong promise for the future.

The grants, averaging $19,500, are intended to provide 1 year's free time to engage in study, research, or creative activity.

Professor Shearer—an expert on urban policy and vice chair of the Santa Monica Planning Commission—will use his grant to complete a book on the implementation of innovative urban planning practices in American cities.

Professor Shearer teaches courses at Occidental in urban planning, urban economics, management, and urban politics, and directs the schools urban internship program. He is coauthor of two previous books on public policy, "Economic Democracy," and "A New Social Contract." His articles have appeared in the New York Times, the Los Angeles Times, the New Republic, the Nation, and many other publications. He is considered one of the leading under-40 thinkers on city planning and urban policy in the United States. His wife, Ruth Goldway, is the former mayor of Santa Monica.

It gives me great pleasure to share Professor Shearer's accomplishment with my colleagues, and I wish him much success on his book.●

SMALL BUSINESS ENVELOPE CEREMONY

HON. PARREN J. MITCHELL

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 7, 1984

● Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Speaker, this morning I had the priviledge of holding a press conference with William F. Bolger, the Postmaster General of the United States.

At this ceremony the Postal Service formally issued a commemorative envelope honoring small business. I would like to include for the RECORD a copy of the remarks I made this morning.

The remarks follow:

COMMEMORATIVE ENVELOPE CEREMONY

Good Morning. I am pleased so many of you could be here this morning with Postmaster General Bolger and me. As you know, this is Small Business Week, and I am excited we can kick off the week with this special ceremony.

Today Postal Service is formally issuing a commemorative envelope in honor of America's small businesses. I would also like to point out that in this week's issue of Time magazine there is a special section devoted to Small Business Week called a salute to small business. I am pleased to say that the U.S. Postal Service is one of the sponsors of this section. I think the Postal Service should be commended for doing so much to recognize our small business community at this time.

This envelope has been long awaited. One of the recommendations to come out of the 1980 White House Conference of Small Business was for the Postal Service to issue a commemorative stamp honoring small business. This recommendation was endorsed by the members of the Small Business Committee, and a formal request was made to the Postmaster General. After a lot of hard work, the Postal Service announced they would issue a commemorative envelope honoring small business. This announcement was formally made 2 years ago at a press conference with the Postmaster General. Last year the design of the envelope was unveiled at a special ceremony. And—at long last—the envelope is being issued today.

It is significant that the envelope is being issued during Small Business Week since this is a time that has been set aside to recognize the Nation's small business men and women. Small business is the cutting edge of competition; small business is the Nation's job creator; small business is the vanguard of innovation and invention; and small business is the source of the free enterprise leadership. It is the responsibility of all of us in public service to recognize these attributes, and today I feel we have done just that.

I would like to recognize just a few people now. First I want to thank the students from Mrs. Doris Glover's third grade class for coming here today. They are from Jackson Road School in Silver Spring. Perhaps we have some of our future small business men and women among us!

Next, I would like to introduce Pat Taylor. Mr. Taylor is one of the designers of the envelope and will be on hand after we complete our remarks to autograph your program and envelope.

And finally, I would like to recognize two more people: My colleague, Congressman ANDY IRELAND from Florida's 10th District. ANDY initiated the drive to get the Postal Service to issue this envelope; and Patricia Reese of his staff who has worked with ANDY on this over the last 2½ years.

In closing, I want to encourage all of you here to purchase at least one of these envelopes which will be on sale in the back of the room as soon as we finish our remarks. Let us all do our part to make recordbreaking sales of this special envelope.

Again, I want to thank all of you for being here today as we honor our small business community in this special way—the issuance of this commemorative envelope.●

IS THERE ANY FUTURE FOR RELIGION IN NICARAGUA?

HON. WM. S. BROOMFIELD

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 7, 1984

● Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I believe that an insight into the basic orientation of the Government of Nicaragua can be gained by examining the Sandinistas' attitude toward religion. Religion is being pushed out of Nicaragua. Even though Nicaraguans are protesting against the Communist government's actions, as the following article explains, the Sandinistas are determined to put an end to the Catholic Church in that country.

The New York Times reported on August 18, 1982, that Catholic students in Masaya, Nicaragua, protested against the Government's treatment of a young priest, Father Bismarck Carballo. As spokesman for the church in Managua, Father Carballo came to the attention of the Sandinistas. While having lunch with a female friend, he was attacked. Both he and his friend were forced to strip before being taken to jail. The Sandinista television station was on the scene and treated Nicaraguans to news coverage and pictures of the nude priest.

In response to this show of slander, Catholic students staged protests in various cities around the country. Some protesters also seized a military post and the local headquarters of the Sandinista Neighborhood Defense Committee, the civilian groups that police their neighborhoods and denouce suspected "counterrevolutionaries" to the authorities. Well-organized "mobs" from these committees have been known to paint, stone, and even burn down the homes of Nicaraguans who support the church, or question the Government's policies.

The Department of State advises that the Nicaraguan Government has established and fostered the spread of the "People' Church" in opposition to the existing Catholic Church in that country. As part of the Sandinista attack on the church, the Nicaraguan Bishop, Father Obando y Bravo is followed, harassed, and often threatened. As a frequent critic of the Government there, he is considered as an enemy of the state.

Time magazine reported that during his visit to Nicaragua, the Pope was mocked and jeered by groups of Nicaraguans intentionally infiltrated into a public outdoor mass in Managua.

The following article clearly shows that there are many Nicaraguans who love their religion. They resent having it taken from them. They recently voiced their deep concern by gathering at the National Cathedral in Managua. They eagerly offered their support for the church and their opposition to the Sandinista regime. I strongly believe that all Americans should be told of events of this nature so that they can see the true face of Commandante Ortega and company.

I salute the 100,000 God-fearing Nicaraguans and Father Obando y Bravo who bravely defied the atheistic Sandinistas to voice their support for their faith and their freedom. May these dauntless souls live to see the day when Nicaragua is again free.

With these observations in mind, I recommend this informative article to my colleagues in the Congress. (Article from the Washington Times attached.)

U.S. OFFICIALS BLACK OUT ANTI-SANDINISTA RALLY

(By Phil Nicolaides)

On Good Friday, a crowd of some 100,000 Nicaraguans thronged the plaza in front of Managua's National Cathedral for three hours to express, in the words of ABC's Peter Collins, "their passionate solidarity with the Catholic Church and opposition to the Sandinista regime." Some 8¼ million Americans watching the ABC-TV Evening News last Friday witnessed the event and heard the veteran network correspondent report it.

But if Americans had to rely on all other news sources singly or combined, they would never know it happened.

And if Americans had to rely on the State Department, they would be told it didn't happen.

None of the wire services carried the story or transmitted a single photograph to their hundreds of subscribers. None of America's newpapers reported it. Neither did NBC or CBS.

When the Washington Times asked State Department spokesman Joseph Becelia for information about the demonstration, he said he had not heard of it and would have to telephone the U.S. Embassy in Managua for a report. U.S. diplomats in Managua had apparently not cabled to Washington anything about the huge demonstration.

Quoting Roger Gamble, the deputy chief of the U.S. mission, Mr. Becelia sharply challenged the accuracy of the ABC report. "This was not an anti-Sandinista demonstration," he said. "By no means—neither in its origin nor in its nature."

When pressed to explain the loud chants from the crowd and the placards clearly visible on the television screen in the Collins report, Mr. Becelia replied that "any anti-Sandinista character or manifestations were peripheral to the religious nature of the gathering—although there may have been scattered anti-government shouts and a few placards."

He also said the crowd numbered "only 50,000, not 100,000." The larger figure, he said, "was a church estimate."

An ABC spokesman said, "Our crowd estimates were based on a careful review of the capacity of the plaza—the size of two football fields—and the density." In fact, he said, "some church officials were saying the crowd numbered 200,000. That 50,000 figure you got from the embassy is a Sandinista estimate. I don't know why anyone would take it as reliable."

A top administration official said the handling of this affair by the American embassy in Managua "unfortunately confirms the view of some of us that our 'experts' are not expert enough. It casts new light," the source continued, "on the reasons the Kissinger Commission was so dissatisfied with the attitudes and the abilities of our people down there."

A highly placed White House source, told of the State Department explanation, called it "absolutely incredible—those embassy people must be asleep at the switch."

"A disgusting performance," was the reaction of a former high government official closely involved in Latin American policy matters. "But the problem goes beyond embassy ineptitude," he said.

"The real question is why is State's Bureau of Inter-American Affairs putting this curious negative spin on events in Nicaragua which should be playing into our hands and supporting our position?

"It took great courage for those people to join in such a tremendous popular manifestation," he said. "They risked being physically attacked by the turbas divinas [divine mobs]—Marxist goon squads who frequently assault people, even in church buildings, when there is any complaining about the regime."

ABC News officials stood by their story. One reporter on the scene said the State Department's "attempt to downplay the political significance of this event—the people of Nicaragua rallying around their church and their bishop in defiance of the Sandinista regime—must be because they don't know what's going on, or don't want to know.

"Anyone who saw what we saw and heard what we heard would have grasped the fact that this was an outpouring of religious fervor, but also that feeling was directed against the regime, which has been fighting the church. The leaders of the demonstration, Bishop Obando y Bravo and Father Bismarck Carballo, are symbols of resistance and frequent targets of the Sandinistas," the network reporter said.

One of the frequent chants, ABC said, was, "'We are Christians, not Marxists.' That ought to tell you something."

A high administration official confirmed this account and agreed that the State Department's view was "way off base." He recalled how American embassy staffers in Moscow "showed the same kind of blindness when they failed to read the unmistakable signs that Yuri Andropov had died. Dusko Doder [of the Washington Post] filed the story, and eight hours later our embassy there was still denying it," he recalled.

Some highlights of the original ABC report:

"The crowd of 100,000 . . . led by Archbishop Obando y Bravo, in an exquisite rebuff to Sandinista leaders who had said he was out of touch with the people . . . shouted, 'Free Nicaragua!' and 'Christ Forever!'

"None of the Sandinista leaders was present. Most are declared atheists. In a defiant gesture, the march was organized by Father Bismark Carballo, the director of communications, a priest the regime tried to discredit last year . . . The church has begun to take on the role of the church in Poland. It is becoming the focus of opposition to the Sandinista regime.

"No police were present, because the Sandinistas know the church is the one force that can rally the people against the government. For their part, the church leaders said nothing against the regime, but emphasized the need for Catholic faith which here, as in Poland, means 'No' to Marxism."

Two days after the demonstration, the bishops of Nicaragua issued an Easter pastoral letter sharply critical of the regime. The letter was bitterly attacked in the government-controlled newspaper Barricada for failing to condemn "North American imperialism," and for urging the regime "to enter a dialogue with the murderers of our people."

The bishops' letter was one of the strongest ever issued by the church against the Sandinista regime. It condemned press censorship, the detention of political prisioners, violence against the Indian minority, restrictions on religious freedom, and the collapsing economy which has caused acute shortages and rationing.●

TESTIMONY OF WILLIAM BYWATER

HON. GEORGE MILLER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 7, 1984

● Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, in June 1983 the House Subcommittee on Labor Standards conducted hearings on (H.R. 3175) my bill to provide compensation to victims of asbestos and other occupational diseases. The proceedings of those hearings were published in November 1983. During the hearings on June 13, 1983, the committee was pleased to receive testimony from the AFL-CIO, Industrial Union Department and Building and Construction Trades Department. Testifying on behalf of the Industrial Union Department was William Bywater, president of the International Union of Electrical Workers, who focused among other things on the problems of occupational disease other than asbestos-related diseases, and the ways in which such diseases could be properly identified for purposes of compensation. Mr. Bywater attached an extension of testimony to his statement relating to presumptions for asbestos related diseases as well as trigger mechanisms for other toxic substances and processes which he asked to be included in the RECORD and which was accepted by the subcommittee for that purpose.

Inadvertently, that extension of testimony was not included in the published hearing record. Accordingly, I am including Mr. Bywater's additional testimony in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD which will be accepted and considered part of the hearing record on H.R. 3175.

EXTENSION OF THE TESTIMONY PRESENTED BY PRESIDENT WILLIAM BYWATER

The existing state workers' compensation system has failed to fairly compensate, usually to compensate at all, victims of occupational disease. It is important to know why this is the case.

One reason the compensation system has failed is because two fundamental concepts essential to understanding disease have not been adequately reflected in law.

The first concept is that disease cannot be explained in terms of simple, single causes and simple, single effects. The causes of disease are many and complex. So are the associated effects. Because most of us have this simplistic idea in mind when we use the term "cause," there is a growing consensus among scientists that the term should no longer be used either in scientific or lay publications. They suggest the term "risk factor" instead.

The second concept has been called "population thinking." This is a way of understanding each of us by looking at populations, that is groups to which we each belong because of some shared characteristic (such as our job or exposure to a toxic substance). This kind of thinking has shaped the information we have received from the scientist in modern times. Statistical methods have become very important in gathering and analyzing the information as it comes to us, but few laws or proposed laws have been written with this reality in mind.

Whether we are struggling with the problems of causation or trying to understand what occurs in a population, we have to deal with information as the scientist gives it to us. We must not ask that it be twisted to fit obsolescent language in our laws. Instead, we must change the law to fit the current state of science.

Compensation law has not been totally insensitive to these understandings. Thus the term "due to," "arose out of," "but for," and "the cause" usually found in compensation law should be retained only if they have been clearly qualified. One way this has been done traditionally is by the use of "presumptions."

Used fairly and consistently, presumptions defined and utilized within a compensation system will reduce reliance on the tort system. They bridge the gap created by unresolved scientific uncertainty and the ethical certainty that just claims must be paid.

The bill before us correctly makes an irrebutable presumption that asbestosis is caused by breathing asbestos because the scarring of the lung and calcification observed by the physician is typically found among exposed workers. The chance is very small that the same conditions can be found in the absence of asbestos exposure.

The bill makes the same kind of presumption for mesothelioma. Mesothelioma has in fact been associated with other fibers and, in animals, with some chemicals. But more than 95 percent of the cases studied have been associated with asbestos exposure at work or among the families of asbestos workers and other bystanders. The irrebutable presumption is justified.

In the case of asbestosis and mesothelioma, while most in the exposed population do not develop the disease, a burden of risk of disease was added by the asbestos exposure for each and every worker in the population. The size of the added burden varies, for example, with duration, extent and onset of the exposure, plus other environmental risk factors. Where the environmental factors are the same, the added burden of risk attributable to asbestos is the same and distributed uniformly throughout the entire group of workers.

The principle of Added Burden of Risk (and the irrebuttable presumption which in this case it justifies) must be applied consistently. There are no special rules of nature that set mesothelioma, for example, apart from cancers found at other sites.

Among asbestos insulation workers, regardless of personal differences such as whether they smoked or not, the risk of lung cancer associated with the exposure was more than five times the risk of lung cancer found among workers not exposed to asbestos. The added burden of risk is the same for the entire exposed population—even though the entire population will not contract lung cancer—and, therefore, an irrebuttable presumption is justified for those that do contract lung cancer.

The same case can be made for asbestos-exposed insulation workers who suffer from cancer at other sites (oropharynx, larynx, gastrointestinal tract, ovary, or kidney).

In other populations—even those involving asbestos and lung cancer—the outcome may be less certain. A presumption must be made requiring a higher level of evidence, i.e., a rebuttable presumption may be justified. The decision to apply a rebuttable rather than an irrebuttable presumption is a matter of judgement.

There are no special rules of nature reserved for the effects of asbestos. The principle of the Added Burden of Risk applies to other toxic substances and processes.

The labor movement has a moral commitment to all workers afflicted with occupational disease. We will not compromise this commitment.

A systematic way must be required to assess risk for all populations of workers, a generic approach to trigger all identified populations with a high risk of occupational disease.

We believe that the "trigger" has these elements:

1. An agent, process, or job found toxic from (a) observation of human populations or (b) experimental systems.

2. A site-specific estimate of significant risk of death or disease in a specific population exposed to the agent, process or job.

3. A presumption that a worker must be compensated when a significant, elevated risk has been found in a population, membership of the worker in the exposed population has been established, and the disease has appeared.

4. Coverage can be initiated on a case-by-case basis for reasons such as (a) incidence is unknown, (b) the uncertainties in the data for a population preclude a judgement for an entire population, and (c) when a population has not been defined or disease has appeared only in a few cases.

Neither compensation nor preventive intervention will effectively aid workers at high risk without requirement of these additional steps:

A. A survey of populations known through past studies.

B. An organized program of research to discover additional populations.

C. Maintenance of a registry of such populations.

D. Identification and notification of workers or their families who are members of registered populations.●

NUCLEAR ARMS TALKS

HON. DON YOUNG

OF ALASKA

Monday, May 7, 1984

● Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, if asked what they would like to see most in the arena of world affairs, a majority of Americans would undoubtedly indicate their desire for an agreement with the Soviet Union reducing the number of nuclear weapons in the world. Seeking to limit the number of these devastating weapons and thereby enhancing world stability is neither a Democrat nor a Republican issue, but rather a bipartisan issue. Since the early 1960's, both Republican and Democrat administrations have pursued negotiations with the Soviets to stabilize our relationship by limiting nuclear weapons testing and by limiting strategic forces. There has been some measure of success in these negotiations. Clearly, there is much left to accomplish. The talks must continue.

Yet, we should not delude ourselves by thinking that future agreements will come easily. For one, the START and INF talks can hit snags on any number of technicalities including the question of verifiability, the definition of throw weight, and the differences in force structure. The talks are further complicated by the nature of the Soviet regime itself. British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher once said that we must deal with the Soviet Union "not as we would like it to be but as it is." The differences between the Western democracies and the Soviets are both numerous and profound. Mrs. Thatcher continued: "We must not fall in the trap of projecting our morality on to the Soviet leaders. They do not share our aspirations, they are not constrained by our ethics, they have always considered themselves exempt from the rules that bind other states. Presenting themselves to the world as the fount of progress and revolution, they preside over a modern version of the early tyrannies of history. A structure so rigid that it totally precludes the normal processes of questioning, discussion, and change. They have little contact with their own people, still less with the free world."

For me, the Soviet destruction of the Korean airliner last September and particularly their subsequent rationalizations—even praise—of the attack highlight the extreme differences between our systems. There were indications prior to the KAL atrocity that progress could be made toward achieving an arms control agreement. That event, more than anything else in my opinion, dashed the hopes of those desiring such an accord.

We have now put some distance between us and that event. The harsh rhetoric on both sides has diminished somewhat. It is time for the talks to continue. As the talks resume, we must maintain a realistic appraisal of our adversary and deal with them as they are at the bargaining table. The once ardent cold warrior, Richard Nixon, was able to do so and concluded the SALT I agreement with the Soviets. If the Soviets will return to the talks in Geneva, we can with time and by focusing on areas of mutual concern, continue the march toward a lessening of world tension. The challenge before us is formidable and it demands our most serious efforts.●

ONE PERSON TOO MANY?

HON. MATTHEW F. McHUGH

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 7, 1984

● Mr. McHUGH. Mr. Speaker, as you know rapid population growth is an issue that we often overlook. Yet, the fact is that global population is expected to increase by approximately 1.5 billion between now and the end of this century. More than 90 percent of this growth is expected to take place in the poorest nations of the world, and that could have potentially serious consequences for the availability of food, shelter, jobs and basic services, the environment, and peace and stability.

In this connection, I would like to call the attention of our colleagues to a thoughtful article by Tad Szulc that appeared in the April 29, 1984, edition of Parade magazine. With the foreign aid authorization bill scheduled for consideration this week, I hope that our colleagues will give serious thought to the implications of what is potentially an international demographic disaster, a disaster that we may be able to avert through the implementation of effective and efficient population and family planning programs.

The article follows:

ONE PERSON TOO MANY?

(By Tad Szulc)

Short of nuclear annihilation, the greatest threat to humanity is, ironically its own sheer mass. Global population grows inexorably and at a rate so prodigious that by the year 2000—only 16 years from now—the world, with its added billions, will be unable to provide adequate food and energy, let alone jobs, housing, education and health care. And what could happen by the mid-21st century (when babies born in this decade approach old age) defies imagination—unless acceptable ways are found of curtailing population growth. This is as true in a special way for the United States as it is generally for the developing Third World, which accounts for 75 percent of the world's population.

Overpopulation on the scale currently taking shape will result in new and greater famines, perhaps wars, civil strife and deep social distortions as well as massive malnutrition and disease, vast migrations and a sharp drop in living standards almost everywhere, including this country. Yet no high-priority international strategy exists to cope with these problems. Emergency assistance is essentially all that is being done by the world community.

To the U.S., where the population growth rate has leveled off, the world population explosion represents an enormous pressure on its southern borders, as tens of millions of destitute migrants from Latin American are pushed north in search of a livelihood. It adds up to one of the most serious challenges to American society.

The latest famine in Africa, the result of one of the worst and longest droughts in history, illustrates dramatically the collapse of the delicate balance between population growth and food supply. The drought, which began three years ago, was directly responsible for the famine, of course, but uncontrollable population increases also contribute to mass starvation.

According to the UN Food and Agriculture Organization, of the 150 million people who live in the 24 African countries hit by the drought, an estimated 100 million face hunger and as many as 4 million, mainly children, may die this year and next from starvation, malnutrition and related causes. In Mozambique alone, 200,000 may have died in 1983 and at least 100,000 more this year.

Demographers have long warned that massive overpopulation is a time bomb, but in 1983 the point was finally reached when the threat began to become a reality. Recent discussions with population specialists at the UN, World Bank, U.S. Bureau of the Census and Washington think-tanks reveal this gloomy picture:

The world population rose by 82 million between mid-1982 and mid-1983—an all-time record, making 1983 a demographic turning point—reaching 4.7 billion last September. This is more than twice the global population of 20 years ago. The Census Bureau projects an increase of 82.8 million in 1983/84 and 84 million in 1984/85. At this rate, world population will hit 5 billion by 1986 and 6.2 billion by 2000. Try to visualize a new China and a new India—more than six times the population of the U.S.—swelling the ranks of humanity.

The World Bank estimates that only 23 of the 98 Third World nations will reach stationary population—no more absolute growth—toward the middle or end of the next century; the rest will quit growing only sometime during the 22nd century. China, now with 1.06 billion inhabitants and already the most populated nation in the world, should attain the stationary level in 2040, with 1.43 billion. India will have 1.8 billion when it stabilizes in 2140. The U.S., its growth rates slowing down, is expected to move from its present 234 million to 289 million when we reach stationary population in 2040.

Though average annual rates of growth are decreasing in the world, the actual numbers are racing out of hand (because each year the base is larger for figuring percentage increase).

Already, more than half the world's people live in cities that cannot house, feed or support them. Older cities—such as Calcutta, Delhi, Mexico, São Paulo and Jakarta—are turning into urban nightmares. Since 1960, there have been 245 additional cities with populations exceeding 500,000. And rural inhabitants keep migrating to cities, where at the same time babies are being born to earlier immigrants.

This worldwide population emergency is tragic where the availability of food, shelter, health services and jobs is concerned.

Lester R. Brown, president of the Washington-based Worldwatch Institute and a leading authority on food economics, says that "the way things are going, it's quite possible that per capita food production at the end of the century will be less than today." World food production, in fact, is already declining in many key sectors compared with annual population growth. Although overall world grain production doubled between 1950 and 1973, since then, Brown points out, the output per person "has barely kept pace with world population growth."

In Africa, for example, per capita food production in 30 countries actually fell in 1979 and 1980, aggravating the famine. When there is starvation on a vast scale, there are no resources, including human energy, to stimulate greater food production. And as births multiply, so does the overall survival problem. Most African nations lack workable systems of food production, distribution and marketing. The UN Food and Agriculture Organization warns that unless 4 million tons of grain are rapidly supplied to 22 African countries with 145 million people, mass starvation may be inevitable.

By the end of the century, the demand for grain in the developing nations will be twice the 437 million tons required in 1980. But experts note that excessive dependence on foreign assistance discourages local food production.

And problems beget other problems. Grain and cattle production, for example, have been hurt by the huge rise in petroleum prices since 1973. Petroleum is used in the production of fertilizers, which fewer and fewer Third World farmers can afford at today's prices. Compounding the problem is worldwide soil erosion, and farmers everywhere are doing little to protect the topsoil.

In terms of nutrition, the situation is appalling throughout most of the Third World. Although physicians offer no standard measurement for required daily caloric intake, it is well below generally accepted levels in the Third World, according to the World Bank.

In addition, medical care is declining. In Ethiopia, there is one doctor per 58,490 inhabitants; in Indonesia, one per 11,530 (in the U.S., it's one for every 520).

Whereas starving Africans have no place to go to find survival, in Latin America and Asia massive migrations are increasingly the solution for the destitute. Illegal migrants from Mexico are entering the U.S. in uncontrollable numbers. During the year ending last Sept. 30, the Immigration and Naturalization Service apprehended 1.03 million illegals crossing the border from Mexico (most were Mexicans, but there were also thousands of Central Americans). And the Service, short-handed along the frontier, doesn't know how many illegal migrants elude its surveillance.

Between 2 million and 3 million illegal immigrants a year remain in the United States, more than the annual natural increase in U.S. population. Approximately 4 million crossed (or attempted to cross) the U.S. border in 1982/1983. But assuming that Mexico's economic situation will not improve markedly, it is possible that nearly 6 million will be crossing the border 15 years from now.

And between 30 million and 40 million Mexicans and Central Americans are likely to enter the U.S. illegally between now and the end of the century. Hispanics now represent an estimated 10 percent of the U.S. population; this percentage may double by the year 2000.

UN Secretary General Javier Perez de Cuellar commented recently that "if the rapid population growth in developing nations is left unchecked, it will evidently undermine all efforts for economic and social development and could easily lead to widespread depletion of each nation's basic resources."

An expert at the Center for International Research of the U.S. Census Bureau put it even more starkly: "Unless international action is undertaken rapidly to control population, I can see systems of governments breaking down."

What is being done? In August in Mexico City, the United Nations will hold its periodic World Population Conference to consider new international measures to keep population down. That the world population jumped by 700 million since the last UN population conference, in 1974, suggests the inadequacy of present world programs.

The opposition of the Roman Catholic Church to most forms of birth control and family planning is a major factor inhibiting population control, especially in Latin America, Africa and Asia. Pope John Paul II has made it clear that he will not depart from this stance, but experts say that increasingly Church views are being ignored, particularly in families suffering less poverty and having more education.

China, using draconian methods to limit families to one child, brought its annual growth rate to 1.06 percent in 1983, one of the lowest in the world. India, with 715 million, has birth-control programs, including voluntary sterilization. There are birth-control clinics in many third world countries, and contraceptives are sold by street vendors in many Asian cities.

However, the international community—and especially the U.S.—has not faced the urgent need for a coordinated world program that would bring together all aspects of the great population crisis: birth control, food and energy production, health and education.

The UN has a population division with a relatively low priority. The World Bank's efforts are confined to studies and recommendations. The UN Food and Agriculture Organization lacks adequate resources. The Reagan Administration has a Coordinator of Population Affairs—a scarcely visible operation—in the State Department's Bureaus of Oceans and International Environmental and Scientific Affairs. Also buried in the State Department is a small Directorate for Health and Population in the Agency for International Development.

Lester Brown of the Worldwatch Institute charges that "there is a vacuum of leadership created by the U.S. in the population area." He adds, "There is no intellectual leadership. This administration has no people with vision to see the future if the United States were to commit itself to these problems."

Meanwhile the population time bomb is ticking. When the explosion comes at the end of this century, the United States will not escape the fallout unless we assume leadership to help our species save itself from its own blindness.●

PROFILING ENVIRONMENTAL EMERGENCY SERVICES CO.

HON. LES AuCOIN

OF OREGON

Monday, May 7, 1984

● Mr. AuCOIN. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my constituents in Orgeon who prize our State's unique heritage of natural beauty, abundant wildlife, clean air and clean water, I want to commend a company in my congressional district which has made protecting the environment literally its business—not only the company, but its president, Art Riedel.

The company is Riedel International's Environmental Emergency Services Co., and its specialty is cleaning up after other people's messes. Whether it is dioxin-contaminated soil, a toxic chemical spill, or an oil platform blowout at sea, the company's emergency units are ready to go anywhere, any time, to clean up practically anything.

Oregon was particularly fortunate to have EES to call on for help in an emergency last month, when an oil tanker in the Columbia River lost control of its steering and ran aground, puncturing its hull and spilling hundreds of gallons of oil into the river.

Thanks to the timely work of EES in containing and cleaning up the spill, an environmental catastrophe was averted. In appreciation for a job well done, and for the enlightenment of my colleagues who are concerned with protecting the environment, I ask that a recent article profiling Environmental Emergency Services Co. be reprinted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. The article by reporter, Steve Jenning was published April 6, in the Portland, Oreg., Oregonian.

The article follows:

RIEDEL HAZARD UNIT, EARNS REPUTATION

(By Steve Jenning)

By late last week, John R. Spencer and his crews had the huge Columbia River oil spill down for the count.

After 18 days, leakage from the Mobil Oil Corp. oil tanker that had punctured its hull on a rocky shoal just north of Portland had been confined to an area surrounding the Longview, Wash., docks. Most of the cleanup work had been done by Riedel International Inc.'s environmental hazard unit, headed by Spencer, a senior vice president.

"By the time this is read," the lanky, dark-haired Texas native said Thursday, "we'll probably have this one licked."

But as he talked, at least 37 other cleanup projects, some of them involving hazardous, toxic chemicals, in one part of North America or another, were being handled by crews from Riedel's Environmental Emergency Services Co.

Spencer said at least six of those 37 were "major jobs," ranging from the cleanup of dioxin-contaminated soils in and around Times Beach, Mo., to the removal of an industrial waste dump in Colorado.

In its 11 years as a formal entity within the $200 million per year, Portland-based, Riedel corporation, the EES unit has become a strong money-maker in a family of highly successful businesses. It also has gained a reputation as an operator that will go almost anywhere to clean up almost anything, from an ocean-borne oil slick sprung from a drilling rig blowout in the Gulf of Mexico, to the reclamation of a small Montana town virtually blown apart in the explosion of a trainload of toxic chemicals.

Estimates of the hazardous and non-hazardous materials cleanup business in North America vary from several hundred millions of dollars to over $1 billion per year. Businesses that must eradicate dangerous waste strewn in their own backyards often keep the full scope of the problem—and the cost of solving it—secret from competitors and customers.

AMONG TOP COMPANIES

But whatever the size of the market, most agree that Riedel's unit is among the top two or three such companies in the world. Riedel spokesman Daniel C. Bell, a senior vice president and generally considered company President Arthur A. Riedel's alter ego, is categorical.

"We are the leader in this industry," Bell says.

It started quite informally, about 20 years ago when Riedel tugs were called in to handle spillage problems in and around the Port of Portland. A major marine construction and general construction company, Riedel had little technical expertise in such work—just about no one had in those days. But because they were first on the scene at many spills, and because of the increasing concern about environmental damage from industrial accidents, Riedel began to hone its skills, inventing new techniques and equipment along the way.

EES was commissioned as a corporate subdivision in 1973. At the time the company managers made a risky, major investment in the fledgling unit. Almost $9 million was spent to purchase trucks, trailers and state-of-the-art cleanup equipment, and more dollars were spent to set up emergency centers throughout the United States.

The idea was to put Riedel's EES units within six hours of any potential major spill, anywhere in the country, involving port accidents, highway crashes or train wrecks.

Bell called it "something that was unique, nobody has ever tried it before." Riedel was breaking new ground, and establishing new techniques and inventing new processes and equipment along the way.

"It was magnum leap," Spencer said.

Why the move?

PRESSURE INCREASED

By the early 1970s, the environmental movement was well established, and along with it increased government funding. Government also put pressure on private business investment aimed at cleaning up industrial waste and accidents.

Riedel, by acting early, had positioned itself at the forefront of a brand-new, nationwide, growth industry. And by the end of the decade the EES division had begun to realize substantial rewards.

"A few years ago, our emphasis changed from dealing with oil spills to hazardous wastes," Bell said.

Riedel is a private company and therefore keeps confidential most of its financial profile. However, company officials noted that the EES unit's contribution to Riedel's overall revenue rose from 2 percent of the total in 1977 to 10 percent this year. Given Riedel's strong overall growth, the dollar figures are even more impressive, Bell said.

With the company now handling about 200 jobs per year, the percentage contribution may keep growing.

But Riedel is not without competitors and according to industry executives, the bidding wars for some jobs, whether privately or publicly financed, can be fierce.

"This business that we're in is going to grow faster than any other business in the United States," Spencer predicted.●

HUMAN RIGHTS IN AFGHANISTAN

HON. WM. S. BROOMFIELD

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 7, 1984

● Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I believe that all of us can agree that human rights is an important global issue today. On a daily basis, we in Congress hear about the tragic violations of human rights in some of the countries of Central America. I deplore these violations of human liberties whenever and wherever they occur. Let us shift our focus for a moment from this hemisphere to another region of the world, and talk about human rights violations there.

The continued illegal occupation of Afghanistan, a lovely peace-loving land, and the suppression of the Afghani people is one of the great tradegies of this century. Using the pretense of having been invited into the country, the Soviets invaded. The Kremlin set up the puppet Karmal regime and occupied the country with 105,000 well-armed combat troops. The world press has carried horrible stories of Soviet forces poisoning village wells, using poison gas, and strafing innocent Afghanis with the intimidating firepower of their helicopters and armored columns. More than 1 million Afghanis have been killed.

I am particularly worried about the recent escalation of Soviet aggressiveness in the war there. Now, the Soviets are using heavy bombers and high-altitude bombing to destroy population centers and the base camps of the Mujaheddin, the Afghani freedom fighters. In order to bring that poor country to its knees, the Kremlin is willing to use any trick in the book. I believe that the Soviets are willing to kill millions more Afghani peasants in order to subdue the countryside. What can we say about the human rights abuses in that country? The world quickly found out that the Soviets do not play by the rules. They have no peace groups back home protesting their illegal activities in that once free country. Human rights is not an issue in a totalitarian state.

I praise the Afghani resistance fighters for their bravery, dedication, and perseverance. I know that they are fighting against a formidable military force with modern equipment. These Afghani freedom fighters have been forced to fight to free their people and their land from the vicelike grip to the illegal occupiers. These poorly armed freedom fighters are on the leading edge of the fight for human rights.

While all of this bloodletting goes on, the Soviet Government insists that it is a peace-loving nation which respects human rights. The Kremlin actively supports Cuban and Nicaraguan attempts to liberate the so-called oppressed people in Central America. It encourages the Sandinistas in Nicaragua to export their revolution. We should all spend some time in Afghanistan and ask the Afghani people what they think about being liberated by the Soviet Army and what the Soviet Union thinks of the human rights of the Afghani people.

With these thoughts in mind, I recommend this fine article on Soviet military involvement in Afghanistan to all of my friends.

SOVIETS USE BOMBERS IN AFGHANISTAN

The Soviet Union has launched a major new offensive in Afghanistan, for the first time using heavy bombers against the rebels in an effort to take a stronghold that has resisted six previous Soviet campaigns, administration officials said yesterday.

The pounding by Soviet Tu16 Badger bombers began Saturday morning and continued through the weekend, officials said. A column of 20,000 Soviet and Afghan army troops with 600 to 800 vehicles is now moving north through the Panjshir Valley, an area that has continued to resist communist control.

U.S. officials said the latest offensive in the Soviets' four-year effort to control Afghanistan is likely to result in high casualties on both sides, with civilians suffering most from the high-altitude bombing.

The new tactics appear to escalate a trend in which the Soviets, frustrated by the stalemated war, have resorted to heavier attacks on population centers from helicopters, ground attack planes and now bombers.

In attacking the Panjshir, the Soviet Union is going after one of the prime rebel strongholds and the most renowned guerrilla commander, Ahmed Shah Massoud. Massoud, who has been called the Che Guevara of Afghanistan, may have provoked the offensive when his men recently blew up two bridges north of Kabul, the capital, officials said.

But if Massoud's action dictated the timing of the offensive, the Soviet Union had been building up to it. During the past several weeks, the Soviets increased their troop contingent in Kabul and deployed about 100 bombers on their border with Afghanistan.

The Soviet Union invaded Afghanistan in December, 1979, and installed a friendly government in Kabul. But much of the countryside has remained hostile to the Soviet occupiers and the Afghan army that supports them, with the Mujaheddin—as the Afghan rebels are called—waging a war of attrition that seems to have grown more effective during the last four years.

The Soviets have stationed more than 100,000 troops in the country and 30,000 more along the border. They have used Mi24 Hind helicopter gunships extensively, but until this weekend had refrained from the kind of high-altitude, widespread bombing that the United States used in Vietnam in an attempt to demoralize enemy forces.

On Saturday, however, the Soviets sent about three dozen medium-range Badger bombers and a probably larger number of Su24 Fencer fighter-bombers from bases along the border to attack the Panjshir Valley. The bombardment was followed by close-in attacks from ground attack planes and helicopters, plus heavy artillery shelling, officials said.

Massoud has established a primitive resistance government in the Panjshir, and about 10,000 rebels, are said to be ensconced there, many in caves along the valley's sides.

Massoud's rebels took advantage of a semi-official truce with the Soviets last year to fortify gun positions and ammunition stores deep in the mountains, which is why U.S. officials predicted that the Badger bombing would harm villages more than Mujaheddin positions.

By early yesterday, a column of Soviet and Afghan troops reportedly had advanced as far north as Rokheh, which the Soviets had occupied for about 10 months two years ago but had abandoned under pressure from the Mujaheddin. Officials were making no predictions about how long this offensive would last.

"This is the largest attempt to go in there," one official said. "But they'll have a hard time getting them [the Mujaheddin] out of this valley."

"The Soviets as of now, after six tries, don't control the valley," another official said. "But we can't say what their goals are—whether they want to burn crops, or kill Massoud, or control the valley."

Officials also did not say how many of the attacking troops are Soviet. The Soviet Union has tended to let the Afghan army do much of the ground fighting, while the Soviets fly some aircraft and operate some of the tanks and other heavy vehicles further to the rear.●

ELI BOYER IS HONORED

HON. HENRY A. WAXMAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 7, 1984

● Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to call to the attention of this legislative body and the American people the outstanding contributions of Eli Boyer. I speak not only as a Member of Congress from southern California and a member of the Jewish community of Los Angeles, but also as a personal friend of Eli Boyer.

Los Angeles is proud to have Eli Boyer as a native son. After graduating from the University of California, Los Angeles, with a degree in accounting, he rapidly became an outstanding member of his profession and a leader of the community.

Eli Boyer has shared his talents and time to benefit numerous charitable and civic activities. His affiliations include membership in the national executive committee of the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, acting as a national vice chairman of the Large City Budgeting Conference of the Council of Jewish Welfare Divisions, membership on key committees and the board of directors of the Jewish Federation-Council of Greater Los Angeles and he is a member of the board of the Nathan Adelson Hospice. He has also served as vice president of the Brandeis-Bardin Institute and vice president of Temple Israel of Hollywood. His other affiliations include the boards of directors of the Los Angeles Club and French-American Chamber of Commerce as well as serving on the advisory council to the mayor for the Department of Water and Power. In the academic field, Eli Boyer serves professionally on the advisory board of the School of Business, University of California, Riverside.

On May 17, 1984, the City of Hope board of trustees will honor Eli Boyer with the Spirit of Life Award. I ask the Members to join with me in congratulating Mr. Boyer on this special occasion and in extending our good wishes to the Boyer family—his wife, Michele, and their three children. May they continue to grow together, achieve and share the joy of dedication.●

CONGRESS: BEST LITTLE SOAP OPERA ON CABLE

HON. TIMOTHY E. WIRTH

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 7, 1984

● Mr. WIRTH. Mr. Speaker, I would like to share with my colleagues an article that appeared in the April 29 Outlook section of the Washington Post. The article details C-SPAN's coverage of the activities of the House of Representatives. Apparently, there is an avid, and growing, audience of Americans virtually hooked on live or tape-delayed broadcasts of our proceedings. I ask that the article, "Congress, Best Little Soap Opera on Cable," be printed in the RECORD.

[From the Washington Post, Apr. 29, 1984]

CONGRESS: BEST LITTLE SOAP OPERA ON CABLE

(By T. R. Reid)

Night has descended over the land of the free, and in homes from coast to coast the American people are starting their noctural tour of the dial.

"And now, heeeeeeere's. . . ."

CLICK.

No—wait a minute. What was that last show? Who's that big guy with the white hair and a gravel in his hand? This is Congress? On TV! And hey—this stuff is pretty interesting.

The preceding was, as they say in television, a dramatization, but it reflects a real and political potent phenomenon: More and more people every day are tuning in to the country's most unusual—and in many ways most daring—broadcasting venture, the Cable-Satellite Public Affairs Networks, or "C-SPAN."

There were all sorts of dire predictions (few of which came true) five years ago when the House of Representatives first authorized C-SPAN to televise its sessions. The development nobody predicted, though, has been the emergence of a devout national cult of Congress-watchers who have simply become transfixed with the daily look at their government in action.

The cable network's regular gavel-to-gavel coverage has spawned a whole nation of "C-SPAN junkies"—ordinary Americans who spend hours every day watching their congressmen at work, either live or by late-night taped replay. Watching Congress, these viewers say, educates and elucidates. But most of all, it captivates.

"It's the most fascinating thing that's ever been on TV," says Jackie Rosenfeld, a housewife in Southfield, Mich., who found C-SPAN "by accident" one day "when we were just flipping the old dial, you know, and all of a sudden there was Tip O'Neill with his gavel."

Since then, Congress has replaced the soaps and sitcoms in her household, Rosenfeld says "We just keep it on all day. The guys [in Congress] have just become like members of the family. Even that guy whose dentures don't fit right."

Rosenfeld can't recall the name of the denture-wearer, but no matter. "We like him anyway," she says.

"It's about half a generation ahead of everything else in the media," says Marty Stiegenthaler, a devotee in Weathersfield, Conn., who moved his computer business to his home in part so that he could watch the House while at work. "It shows you what technology can do for democracy because it brings you in direct communication with the government."

Among the 17 million homes wired for this technology is the big white one at 1600 Pennsylvania Ave.—a fact that offers at least a partial answer to the political types who have wondered aloud what President Reagan does all day.

The president evidently spends part of some days watching Congress on C-SPAN, which comes in over Channel 10 on the White House TV sets. "He's an avid viewer," says Rep. Robert S. Walker (R-Pa), himself an avid defender of Reagan's policies in Congress. "A lot of times he's said to me, 'Bob, I saw your speech on Channel 10.'"

Viewer Reagan has queued up a few time with other C-SPAN fans to telephone the studio during the network's regular call-in shows, when listeners can have live exchanges with a guest speaker. With a mixture of pride and chagrin, the network's managers recall a day last year when the President couldn't get through because too many other callers were lined up ahead of him.

While daily House coverage remains C-SPAN's main course, the network offers a number of appetizing side dishes that draw equally rapturous reviews from the audience.

C-SPAN's total budget for election coverage this year is less than CBS News will pay a single anchor man, yet the cable network has produced the most compelling and original hour of political television so far this year.

On caucus night in Iowa, C-SPAN went to one Des Moines caucus, pinned small microphones on every participant and broadcast live democracy at work—no reporter, no back-to-Dan-in-New-York, just real Americans electing their government. It was fascinating. It was inspiring. If it has been broadcast in Russia, it might have sparked a revolution. That one show conveyed the actuality of politics, and the wonder of government by the people, better than any anchor or analyst can ever hope to.

The principle C-SPAN followed that night—"let the story tell itself"—is at the core of all its coverage, and it's this that sets the network apart from the rest of TV news. The big commercial networks jump frenetically from news item to news item in constant fear that viewers will tune out by the millions if things slow down for the briefest moment. C-SPAN trusts the viewer to stay with the story; as the trade journal On Cable put it, C-SPAN "dares to be boring."

The network news shows, for example, might spend 3-4 minutes on a profile of an important congressman. PBS might give it an hour. When C-SPAN broadcast "A Day in the Life of Rep. Robert H. Michel (R-Ill.)," it gave the show a full 8½-hour day. "One interesting thing I learned was how much time he has to spend walking over from his office to vote," recalls Frances Flynn, a regular viewer in San Juan, P.R.

When Congress is not in session, C-SPAN does things like run the cameras all day in a big-city newsroom as the paper is put together or broadcast the White House News Photographers annual dinner. A few times C-SPAN has provided live coverage of the daily meeting where the C-SPAN brass decides what to televise the next day.

The non-profit public-affairs network was set up by the cable industry five years ago last month, when the House first agreed to live TV coverage of its daily sessions.

At that time, opponents predicted that TV would turn the floor debates into an irresistible stage for political showboats and gasbags. These arguments are still made in the Senate when anybody suggests that it, too, should let the American people look in on floor sessions.

So far, the effects in the House seem to have been mainly tangential. There are showboats and gasbags, but they mainly take advantage of the traditional open forums for speech-making at the beginning and end of each legislative day. Debates on actual legislation have not changed noticeably since pre-TV days.

Some House members say that they cast more informed votes now because they can follow the floor debate on TV while working in the office.

The people who have really become better informed, though, are the C-SPAN regulars all over the country who tune in to watch Congress every day.

I recently appeared on a C-SPAN call-in show and asked the regular audience about their viewing habits. They responded with a blizzard of phone calls and letters; the general message was crystallized by Shirley Baas, a retiree in Wallingford, Iowa, who wrote "it has been an ever snowballing passion in my life."

I heard from the "Watchdogs of Congress," a group of women in Sioux City, Iowa, who gather daily to watch the House do its work, and from a club called the "Older Citizens of Moore" in Moore, Okla., whose meetings center on C-SPAN. I learned of a viewer in Lubbock, Tex., who was so upset when her cable service dropped C-SPAN that she bought a $2,000 earth-station antenna to pull in the network without cable. (Other C-SPAN fans in Lubbock eventually raised such a stink that the city council ordered the cable firm to put Congress back on the schedule.)

The people at C-SPAN can't say how many such "junkies" there are. "We intentionally don't deal in numbers," says Brian Lamb, C-SPAN's president, a friendly, dapper, gray-haired, sort who could easily pass for a big-network anchor man. "We're trying to narrowcast; we're not looking for the most popular programming."

The C-SPAN people will say that the audience is growing steadily. And the growth is almost certain to continue, if for no other reason because more and more communities are getting cable television.

Representative Newt Gingrich (R-Ga.), who was one of the first congressmen to discover that the House had a loyal TV following, says estimates based on Arbitron surveys indicate that about a quarter-million people watch C-SPAN every day, with millions more tuning in off and on.

In television terms, this is small potatoes. Even the lowest-rated major network shows regularly attract about 6.5 million intense and devoted people distributed in hundreds of congressional districts from Key West to Kodiac are not something to be ignored. "Most House members will travel pretty far to talk to 200 people," Gingrich says. "When I stand up on the floor, the audience might be 1,000 times that.

Accordingly, some House members have made a conscious and successful effort to appeal to the C-SPAN audience. The result has been that some congressmen who rarely penetrate the consciousness of political Washington are developing a loyal national following.

Several representatives give credit to Representative Bill Alexander (D-Ark.), a comer in the Democratic leadership ranks, for blazing this trail. About a year ago Alexander began scheduling "special orders"—long speeches that come at the end of the legislative day, when the House floor is all but empty—and alerting TV viewers ahead of time that a major speech was coming.

Alexander, though, was mainly a one-man band. This year, a group of conservative Republicans turned the Alexander solo performance into a highly orchestrated symphony. They have put together a detailed schedule of "special order" speeches on designated subjects—one of their chief topics is how Speaker O'Neill mistreats the minority Republicans—and taken their case, day after day, to the people.

The talkative Republican insurgents include Gingrich of Georgia, Walker of Pennsylvania, Daniel E. Lungren (Cal.), Connie Mack (Fla.) and Barbara Vucanovich (Nev.). The C-SPAN viewers I talked to were familiar with whole group.

"That Walker—I could listen to him all day," said Jackie Rosenfeld, the Southfield, Mich., housewife. "I have to turn the set down when Walker and those guys get up," counters Shirley Rossi, a self-described "C-SPAN junkie" in Pueblo, Colo. To the politicians, of course, the important thing is not whether a particular viewer likes or dislikes Walker, it is that this junior Republican congressman from Lancaster, Pa., is instantly recognized in Southfield, and Pueblo.

O'Neill himself made the point one day last month when he was presiding over the House. He pointed his gavel around the floor, recognizing "the gentleman from Kansas" and "the gentlelady from New York" for speeches. But when he came to Walker, O'Neill said "the chair recognizes the media star from Pennsylvania."

Some Democrats are so disturbed by the emergence of Republican "media stars" that they are talking about terminating each day's TV coverage of the House when the legislative business is finished. That would mean the "special order" speeches would no longer be televised.

O'Neill, though, wouldn't even propose such a thing. "Television is here to stay permanently now," the speaker said last month. "I think there'd be a hue and cry if you were to shut it off * * * among the senior citizens, those who are not addicted to those soap operas. They watch the Congress and they love it. It's unbelievable."

Unbelievable, perhaps, in metropolitan Washington, D.C., where only a small fraction of the population has a cable connection to bring in C-SPAN. But the daily House sessions are no longer a novelty to the C-SPAN devotees across the nation. For a growing number of people, watching Congress in session is an essential element of the daily routine.

And to these loyal viewers, C-SPAN has become an essential part of the interchange between the people of this vast democracy and their government in Washington.

"That term 'legislative junkies' is funny, but I think it underestimates the audience of C-SPAN," says Aileen Weber, a regular viewer in Colonial Heights, Va. "The people who are watching are people who have discovered how interesting and how important it is to keep track of our representatives when they make our laws. I think more people are going to learn about this, and that is going to make a big difference in our democracy. I think we'll find out that C-SPAN is the most important thing that's happened to democracy since the invention of moveable type."●

IN COMMEMORATION OF HENRY DAVID PALEY

HON. ROBERT GARCIA

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 7, 1984

● Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, on April 16, 1984, Henry David Paley, president of the Commission on Independent Colleges and Universities in the State of New York passed away.

I know my colleagues from New York share my grief and sense of loss at his untimely death. Hank Paley was a warm, intelligent, fair, and decent man. He was dedicated to New York and its citizens; to bettering the educational system, and increasing the students' opportunities to advance their studies. He will be sorely missed by coworkers and friends alike.

The New York State Legislature passed a resolution which I would like to quote in part. It states:

Whereas, serving as President of the Commission on Independent Colleges and Universities in New York State since 1975, Henry David Paley personally directed and orchestrated a united effort aimed at assuring affordable choice among high quality postsecondary institutions; and

Whereas, today, the prosperous definition of the independent colleges and universities of this Empire State mirrors the commitment of Henry David Paley; and

Whereas, through his unswerving commitment to the aspirations and ideals of the independent colleges and universities of this Empire State, Henry David Paley did so singularly contribute to the efflorescence of educational endeavor; . . . and

Whereas this legislative body is greatly moved to join with the people of this Empire State in expressing its profoundest sorrow upon the passing of this extraordinary American, Henry David Paley . . . .

I, too, would like to express my profoundest sorrow at the passing of Hank Paley, a man we all loved and respected. ●

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. MARGE ROUKEMA

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 7, 1984

● Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Speaker, on May 2 the House voted on a procedural motion offered by Mr. CONTE to instruct the conferees appointed for House Joint Resolution 492 to simply go to conference. Certain news accounts the next day inaccurately portrayed this action as a vote on aid to El Salvador and covert aid to the Contras of Nicaragua. In fact, the vote in question was simply an attempt to get the House conferees, appointed some 20 days ago, to meet with their Senate counterparts in order to reconcile differences between the two Chambers' versions of the urgent supplemental appropriation for the Department of Agriculture.

On March 6, the House passed House Joint Resolution 492, which appropriated $150 million for emergency food assistance for Africa through the food for peace program—Public Law 480. On April 5, the Senate passed this measure with 36 amendments and requested a conference with the House. There are many worthwhile programs—such as the women, infants, and children, WIC, feeding program and other child nutrition programs—that are affected by the House Appropriations Committee chairman's refusal to go to conference with the Senate.

The Senate added numerous amendments to House Joint Resolution 492, many of which are unrelated to the USDA program and were not included in the House version. For example, the Senate added funding for aid to El Salvador and the Contras in Nicaragua.

Mr. Speaker, I want to make sure that my vote on this procedural motion is not construed as a vote for or against aid to El Salvador and Nicaragua. The aid questions were not part of the House-passed bill, nor should this vote in anyway be construed as a vote on the level of aid to the Central American countries. Indeed, the aid levels will be the subject of aid packages soon to come before the House as reported by the Foreign Affairs Committee.●

COACH CLARENCE TURNER TOPS IN NEW JERSEY

HON. JAMES J. FLORIO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 7, 1984

● Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues an outstanding educator and a fine man, Clarence Turner.

As the basketball coach of Camden High School, Coach Turner led his Panther squad to a record of 31–0 this past season, the best in the school's illustrious basketball history. In capping that season with a 69 to 49 victory over Kennedy High School of Paterson, Coach Turner and his team captured a State Group 4 championship. It was Turner's fifth State championship since becoming coach in 1971.

Perhaps more important than his outstanding career as a basketball coach, Clarence Turner is highly respected as an educator and friend by colleagues and students alike. In a day when educators are falsely maligned as inadequate, Clarence has served to dispel that accusation. Not only does he take great pride in turning out fine athletes, but he takes even greater pride in turning out fine men and women. We are truly grateful for his presence in Camden County.

As a fitting tribute to this fine man, the Camden High School Booster Club, along with his many friends, students and associates, will honor Clarence Turner on the evening of Wednesday, May 9 at Nero's Woodbine Inn in Pennsauken.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure that my colleagues will join me in congratulating Clarence Turner on his success this past season, and in wishing him the best of luck in the future.●

FBI UNDERCOVER OPERATIONS NEED GREATER CONTROL

HON. PETER W. RODINO, JR.

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 7, 1984

● Mr. RODINO. Mr. Speaker, last week, the Subcommittee on Civil and Constitutional Rights of the House Committee on the Judiciary issued its report on FBI undercover operations. The importance of this study and the validity of its findings, were underscored by the New York Times in its lead editorial of May 5, 1984, which follows. As the Times notes, there is more congressional agreement than disagreement on the problems and benefits of this technique, and "enough agreement to write some constructive legislation."

STRINGS ON FBI STINGS

Beneath the bicker of their majority and dissenting reports, Democrats and Republicans on the House Civil Rights subcommittee reach an important consensus about Government "sting" enterprises: They can be useful tools in fighting crime but need much closer supervision.

The Federal Bureau of Investigation, having shunned undercover work during J. Edgar Hoover's 48-year reign, has become much more willing to launch enterprises that masquerade as rackets in order to catch criminals. The well-known Abscam snared seven former members of Congress but it was faulted by a special Senate committee last year for loose management and excessive reliance on cooperating criminals. Other stings were less successful and raised still more questions.

One glaring example is Operation Corkscrew, in which agents tried for five years to demonstrate corruption on Cleveland's municipal bench. While a joint F.B.I.-Justice Department review committee nodded, a crooked bailiff hoodwinked agents into thinking he was bribing judges to fix cases; in fact, he was pocketing the F.B.I. bribe money. That debacle occurred because the bureau ignored its own rules requiring a basis for going after the judges and tests to see that the investigation was proceeding as planned.

In Operation Colcor, agents lost all perspective in pursuing political corruption in North Carolina's Columbus County. They posed as promoters of a new restaurant, proposed a referendum to sell liquor by the drink in that dry county and passed cash to the local political boss. The referendum passed but was set aside when state officials discovered it was an F.B.I. initiative. A few convictions were obtained, but at a great price.

How can such excesses be curbed? Democrats on the House committee want Congress to require a court order, akin to a search warrant, before anyone is targeted for a sting operation. But Republicans agreed with a unanimous Senate committee's judgment last year that truly rigorous monitoring by the Justice Department could be much more effective than a cursory judicial review of these complex undertakings.

That idea is worth testing. House Republicans would make the internal review mandatory and require Civil Rights and Civil Division attorneys among the monitors. They also want Congress to monitor this undercover work, especially the performance of the review committee. If that fails, there will be time enough to re-examine the warrant idea. Meanwhile, there's enough agreement to write some constructive legislation.●

CALL TO CONSCIENCE VIGIL FOR SOVIET JEWS

HON. FRANK R. WOLF

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 7, 1984

● Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, I am joining my colleagues in this year's call to conscience vigil to bring attention to the plight of Soviet Jews seeking freedom of religion and the right to emigrate from the Soviet Union.

I share the concerns of all freedom loving people over the plight of Soviet Jews. I have expressed this concern by urging the Soviet authorities to adopt a more flexible policy on emigration and to live up to those basic international standards of human rights spelled out in the Helsinki accords and other documents to which the Soviet Union is a signatory. Time and again, I have written Soviet officials to urge reconsideration of individual cases of refuseniks, from various cultural backgrounds, who were imprisoned for their religious or political convictions.

Furthermore, I am concerned about recent unwelcome developments in the Soviet bloc such as increasing manifestations of officially sanctioned anti-Semitism, persecution of both prominent and less well-known refuseniks, and the continued downward trend in Jewish emigration from the Soviet Union. We must continue to raise human rights issues with the Soviets at every level and in many forums. I pledge my continued support of the U.S. Government in its efforts on behalf of Soviet Jews, and in pursuit of progress on this human rights question.●

STAR WARS LOST IN SPACE

HON. ROBERT W. KASTENMEIER

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 7, 1984

● Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, Richard Strout, writing in the May 4, 1984 Christian Science Monitor raises questions about the practicality of President Reagan's Star Wars strategic defense program.

I believe that Mr. Strout's brief column is worthy of attention, and I urge my colleagues to read it. His hope that discussions with the Soviets take place is one which must be pursued. After all, we are not going to make ourselves any safer here on Earth through the militarization of space.

[From the Christian Science Monitor, May 4, 1984]

"STAR WARS": IS THIS DEFENSE PRACTICAL?

(By Richard L. Strout)

Does President Reagan really believe in "Star Wars"? You find yourself asking that question while listening to Defense Secretary Casper Weinberger explain it at the National Press Club. It was a sophisticated audience of about 250. The questions were mostly or all doubtful. We came away wondering.

President Reagan introduced "Star Wars" unexpectedly in a nationwide TV speech March 23, 1983, in which he made the extraordinary announcement, "I've reached a decision which offers a new hope for our children in the 21st century. . . . This subject involves the most basic duty that any president and any people share, the duty to protect and strengthen the peace."

The technical name for it is "Strategic Defense Program." The irreverent immediately dubbed it "Star Wars." Up till now, Mr. Reagan said, we had depended for peace on the threat of retaliation if attacked. But what if we created a kind of permanent protective system or shield over us—the knowledge "that we could intercept and destroy strategic ballistic missiles before they reached our own soil or that of our allies"?

Mr. Reagan was cautious about this "new hope for our children": He said, "I know this is a formidable technical task, one that may not be accomplished before the end of this century." The public found it hard to visualize. Mr. Reagan seemed to be proposing a kind of shield overhead, an astrodome of defense. People looked at each other. Said the dubious Union of Concerned Scientists, one has to believe "in a defense of stupefying complexity under the total control of a computer program whose proportions defy description, and whose performance will remain a deep mystery." It could never be tested, they noted, until the moment of actual use.

It should be remembered that nuclear defense can't be just partly or even 99 percent effective; if it is not absolute, it loses its meaning. Mr. Reagan was challenged on the subject by reporters at a press conference March 25, 1983. Rival leaders, he said, sit across a table with cocked guns. "Now," he said he would ask "the same scientists who gave us this kind of destructive power to turn their talent to neutralizing them."

Critics of Mr. Reagan ask if he is using "Star Wars" to counter the nuclear freeze groups who want less money spent on defense. Richard Halloran, a defense correspondent of the New York Times, noted in January:

"Over the last 18 months President Reagan has clearly stepped into the front ranks of those American Presidents who, since World War II, have been willing to employ military forces as an instrument of national policy." The reporter says, "He has put marines in Lebanon, mounted a show of force against Libya, ordered the invasion of Grenada, sent ships and soldiers to Central America and authorized covert use of mines off Nicaragua." In contrast to Presidents Ford and Carter, Halloran thinks Mr. Reagan "represents a return to a reliance on military power to achieve political objectives." He thinks Reagan has shown himself to be "bolder than his generals."

I looked down from the Press Club gallery trying to weigh the words of the earnest, fast-talking defense secretary who knows the President so well. Did he believe that a successful Strategic Defense Program could be developed? Mr. Weinberger said, "It must be tried." "Perhaps it won't work," he said; but remember, learned technicians said a strategic missile that could cross the Atlantic and hit a target in Europe was "impossible." How can we know what can be done?

Questions from the audience were handed up to the head table. They all spelled doubt. Mr. Weinberger remained earnest, but courteous. He criticized presidential aspirant Walter F. Mondale by name, for pooh-poohing "Star Wars" as something that would "open the heavens for warfare." Didn't he know the Russians had been trying that since 1967?

We came away wondering. President Reagan argues that his "Strategic Defense Program" shows him as peace-loving. But is it practical? An indirect commentary came on the Weinberger speech itself, which was carefully prepared and presented in the blaze of TV camera crews. But it received little press attention. Everybody yearns for the goal, but what is the next step? One comes away hoping that when the U.S. elections are over, President Reagan, a new Democratic leader, or both will meet General Secretary Konstantin Chernenko, either here or in Moscow, to talk things over.●

KEEP PURPOSE HERE

HON. WM. S. BROOMFIELD

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 7, 1984

● Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate the Michigan Credit Union League for 50 years of dedicated service to the people of Michigan and the credit union movement in the State.

The motto that has guided the Michigan Credit Union League since its inception on October 5, 1934, is "Keep purpose here." With this motto as its banner for half a century now, the Michigan Credit Union League has assisted its member credit unions in their continuing efforts to maintain and improve their effectiveness in providing financial services.

Today, the credit union movement is very strong throughout Michigan with a third of the State's population on its membership rolls. There are some 800 credit unions in Michigan with combined assets of more than $5 billion, offering their members not only the ability to save and borrow at reasonable rates but a wide range of financial services as well.

However, it was not always so. When the league was organized in 1934, it was a time of severe economic dislocation in this country. There were fewer than 50 credit unions operating in the State, and the combined assets of the various organizations amounted to less than a million dollars.

The Michigan Credit Union League has been a key factor in this impressive record of growth and service, enabling Michigan credit unions to achieve by their united efforts what they could not achieve on an individual basis.

Responding to the needs of its credit union members, the league was the prime mover in all aspects of the growth process. In previous years, the league emphasized the organizing of new credit unions and the development of credit union leadership by providing people with the training and tools to carry out their tasks more effectively.

For the past two decades, the league has taken the lead in the effort to enable credit unions to serve their members as full service financial institutions. For instance, 10 years ago Michigan credit unions with the aid and support of the league led the way in the introduction of the share draft—a check-like instrument enabling credit union members to reach into their accounts without visiting the credit union office. This innovation was a major step in credit unions' efforts toward achieving parity of power with other types of financial institutions as a full service financial organization.

Over the past 50 years as the Michigan league worked to meet the needs of its members, it also developed a national reputation for leadership and innovation. The Nation's other credit union leagues have long looked to Michigan for pioneering efforts in new service concepts.

Today, the Michigan Credit Union League and its member credit unions—as are all credit unions across the country—are faced with new challenges in the areas of deregulation and computerization. But Michigan's credit union people face the uncertain future with confidence—a confidence based to a great degree on the evidence provided by their past achievements. I, too, share that confidence in their ability and I know the Michigan league and its member will again lead our Nation's credit unions in meeting these new challenges.

Mr. Speaker, over the past 50 years, the Michigan Credit Union League has developed a record of service, innovation, and leadership of which to be justly proud. I trust my colleagues will join me in congratulating the league on its golden anniversary and wish it well for the years to come.●

SENATE COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Title IV of Senate Resolution 4, agreed to by the Senate on February 4, 1977, calls for establishment of a system for a computerized schedule of all meetings and hearings of Senate committees, subcommittees, joint committees, and committees of conference. This title requires all such committees to notify the Office of the Senate Daily Digest—designated by the Rules Committee—of the time, place, and purpose of the meetings, when scheduled, and any cancellations or changes in the meetings as they occur.

As an additional procedure along with the computerization of this information, the Office of the Senate Daily Digest will prepare this information for printing in the Extensions of Remarks section of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on Monday and Wednesday of each week.

Any changes in committee scheduling will be indicated by placement of an asterisk to the left of the name of the unit conducting such meetings.

Meetings scheduled for Tuesday, May 8, 1984, may be found in the Daily Digest of today's RECORD.

SENATE—Tuesday, May 8, 1984

(Legislative day of Monday, April 30, 1984)

The Senate met at 10 a.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the President pro tempore (Mr. THURMOND).

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray.

Gracious Father in Heaven, today we celebrate the centennial of the birth of Harry S. Truman, former Senator and President. We thank Thee for the memory of this very uncommon common man, remembering the international trauma under which he took office and his calm, reassuring, homespun integrity which carried us through and out of national mourning. We thank Thee for his honesty—his fearlessness—his down-to-earthness—his instinctive touch with all the people—and his deep and practical faith in God.

We thank Thee, also, our Father, for his influence as a Senator and for the influence of the Senate upon his subsequent life and service. We celebrate the significant impact which colleagues and peers in this body as well as the Senate as a whole had in equipping him for the Vice Presidency and his unique Presidency. Grant, dear God, that the Senate may continue to produce leadership of such excellence and relevance. In the name of Him by whose divine appointment each of us serves. Amen.

RECOGNITION OF THE ACTING MAJORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The acting majority leader is recognized.

SENATE SCHEDULE

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, today, after the recognition of the two leaders under the standing order and one special order, there will be a period for the transaction of routine morning business.

The Senate will then resume consideration of H.R. 2163, the Boat Safety Act.

Pending is the Chiles amendment, No. 3044, to the Baker amendment, which is No. 3027. Under the previous order, at 3 p.m. today, there will be a rollcall vote on the Chiles amendment.

Rollcall votes may be expected today and throughout the week. Senators should be on notice to expect late nights this week, in an effort to complete consideration of this measure.

There are a number of other matters that require the attention of the Senate, including the budget resolution, the reciprocity bill, the FTC bill, and the Resource Conservation Recovery Act.

At some point in the near future, the Senate must deal with the debt limit. We obviously have our work cut our for us in the coming weeks.

I remind Senators that at 10 a.m. today there is a joint meeting of Congress, to commemorate the 100th birthday of President Harry S. Truman. I am sure that all join in honoring this great American President.

The majority leader will have a further announcement regarding the schedule of the Senate.

DEATH OF WILLIAM EGAN, ALASKA'S FIRST GOVERNOR

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, an era has passed for my State. Alaska has lost a great leader, and I have lost a long time personal friend. Gov. William Egan passed away Sunday night, a quarter of a century after he became the first Governor of Alaska.

Bill Egan was in office as we reached many of the milestones in our State's brief history. One of the principal forces in achieving statehood for Alaska, Bill served as a territorial legislator, as president of Alaska's Constitutional Convention, and was elected as a member of what we called the Tennessee plan and came to Washington as a person who might become a Member of the Senate if Alaska were admitted as a State. At that time he was called a Tennessee plan Senator.

An outspoken proponent of statehood, once Alaska was admitted to the Union Bill Egan continued his public service and in 1959 became the State's first Governor.

He served three terms as Governor. During the first period, he served two terms, which is the limitation under Alaska's constitution. He gave Alaskans the hope that statehood would work and the vigor to rebuild our territory, expand our road systems, and improve our communities. He was very much a leader during the period following the Good Friday earthquake, during which Alaska suffered great devastation.

He was elected once again to serve as Governor in 1970, and during that third term he worked for the passage of the Alaska Native Land Claims Settlement Act, and he helped to draw the plans for the Alaska oil pipeline.

Governor Egan will be remembered as much for those milestones in our history as he will for his always gentle and humble approach to his life and to public office. As Governor, Bill Egan was known to walk from his mansion to work every morning; and on those occasions when he needed a car, he drove it himself. Many residents of Juneau, AK's capital remember the Governor's morning strolls, when he would walk to the waterfront, sit at a local cafe, and drink coffee with the fishermen and with the visitors who arrived on the ferries. They will recall his great memory for details and names. There is not a politician who did not envy his great memory for names.

I particularly remember Bill Egan for his continuous effort to show an interest in and make time for others. He always had time to discuss the problem we were working on together when he was Governor and I served here in the U.S. Senate, as well as when I served in the State legislature.

I want to express my sadness at the passing of Alaska's first Governor, William Egan, and to send the Senate's regrets to his lovely wife, Neva.

Mr. President, at the time the statehood bill passed the Senate, there were many Alaskans in the gallery. No one gave us any signal; no one told us where to go; but at that time, the chapel of the Senate was a very popular place. All Alaskans went to the chapel, and it was there that Mrs. Egan led us in singing the Alaska flag song and the Star Spangled Banner. She has been a real companion to my lost good friend.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, if any time remains, I reserve it and ask unanimous consent that if the majority leader has a statement, it appear at this point in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ARMSTRONG). Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECOGNITION OF THE ACTING MINORITY LEADER

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the acting Democratic leader is recognized.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may reserve the time that is allotted to the minority leader, for his later use.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

FINANCIAL HOLDINGS AND INCOME TAX RETURN OF SENATOR WILLIAM PROXMIRE

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, in 1963, 1965, 1967, and 1970, and yearly since 1972, I have submitted for the RECORD a history of my financial holdings from the time I was first elected to the Senate in 1957 until May 1983. In order to bring the full record up to date, I submit herewith the history of my financial holdings since May 1983.

My assets include ownership of a home in Madison, WI, on which I owe a mortgage to the former owners; ownership of my home and furnishings in Washington, DC, on which I owe a mortgage to the Perpetual American Federal Savings of Washington, DC; ownership of a 1980 automobile; ownership of two checking accounts in Washington, DC, banks, one checking account in a Madison, WI, bank, and one savings account in a Madison, WI, bank. I hold State and municipal bonds totaling $70,000.

I estimate my net worth to be about $490,000.

To the best of my knowledge, this is an accurate record of my financial holdings and obligations.

I herewith submit a balance sheet showing my net worth and how it was arrived at and a copy of my 1983 Federal income tax return.

I paid $46,143 to the Federal Government in taxes on my 1983 income. In addition, I paid $14,681 to the State of Wisconsin on 1983 income.

I ask unanimous consent that the balance sheet and copy of my 1983 Federal tax return be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CAN WE REDUCE THE PROSPECTS OF NUCLEAR WAR THROUGH BUILD-DOWN?

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, the single vote the U.S. Senators have cast on the nuclear freeze came late last year when we voted on an amendment that put the Senate on record as preferring a so-called build-down policy for nuclear arms instead of a nuclear freeze. That vote put the two bodies of Congress in opposition to each other on arms control policy. Earlier in 1983 the House had voted by a nearly 2 to 1 margin in favor of a resolution calling on the President to negotiate a mutual, verifiable freeze on the testing, production or deployment of nuclear arms. Now the President has called on the Congress to begin the process of authorizing the appropriation of some $450 billion over the next 6 years to modernize and improve our nuclear arsenal. Where are nuclear arms control negotiations in all of this? Nuclear arms negotiations with the Soviet Union are suspended with little prospect that they will make any progress in the near future.

So here we have this great democracy of ours with the overwhelming majority of the people on record in poll after poll and in statewide referenda in all parts of the country in favor of U.S. negotiations with the Soviet Union to stop the arms race. We have the House of Representatives endorsing that sentiment by a smashing 2 to 1 margin. We have the Senate expressing preference for a build-down of strategic weapons. And yet this same Congress is called on to pass spending measures that would pour hundreds of billions of additional dollars into expanding our already massive nuclear arsenal. Can this be possible? Can the Congress actually pour these vast sums into nuclear arms and still favor a freeze on nuclear weapons? Can the Government justify spending hundreds of billions of dollars more on nuclear weapons while actually following a policy of building down our nuclear arsenal? Should not a build-down on the basis of any kind of commonsense interpretation mean that we would spend less on nuclear arms? What kind of a nuclear weapons build-down policy is it that calls for such a colossal increase in spending money for additional nuclear weapons?

The irony of this situation in this great democracy is that: There are no two great issues on which the American people are today more decisively committed than these: First, support for efforts to end the arms race and second, support of policies to reduce the immense series of deficits that confronts our Federal Government at this very moment. And yet we are engaged in a hugely expensive, deficit-exploding policy of pouring billions into increasing the sure-kill power of our already immense nuclear arsenal. Oh yes, we cannot and should not stop strengthening our nuclear capability unilaterally. We must negotiate with the Soviet Union to make any arms control policy more than a naive exercise in unilateral disarmament.

But Mr. President, there is not the slightest indication that the administration has any intention of negotiating an agreement with the Soviet Union that would either freeze our spending on nuclear weapons or result in a significant build-down in the power to deliver a nuclear payload on the adversary. Here is why the build-down constitutes such a cruel deception. For the past 25 years we have poured hundreds of billions of dollars into our nuclear armed power.

Meanwhile, the megatonnage of that nuclear arsenal has steadily declined. The number of warheads has also fallen. We have been engaged in a build-down by the numbers. How in the world can this be? Have we been spending billions of dollars to achieve some kind of a unilateral reduction in the capability of our nuclear arsenal? No, indeed—this build-down by the numbers has given us a far more devastating nuclear force. We have made our nuclear weapons far less vulnerable to any attack by the Soviet Union and we have so improved the accuracy and reliability of our nuclear weapons that we have sharply increased our ability to take out every conceivable Soviet target. We can today take those Soviet targets out more surely and swiftly than ever. So after more than 20 years of a numbers build-down, we have massively built up the capability of our nuclear arsenal to destroy every target in the U.S.S.R. And this is precisely the kind of build-down—costing more hundreds of billions—and giving us ever greater assurance that we can destroy everything in the Soviet Union several times over—that we will buy with the half a trillion dollars we will spend on nuclear weapons over the next 6 years.

Mr. President can we doubt that the Soviet Union will follow the same course? Of course, we cannot. The arms race rushes on. As the nuclear technology competition speeds ahead we may lull ourselves to sleep with those reassuring words: build-down. We may fall for the illusion that we have found a magical system of arms control that will both permit us to pour billions of dollars into building ever bigger nuclear arsenals while at the same building down to a happy future where the nuclear arms on which we are lavishing billions will somehow dwindle and disappear.

What a self-delusion, Mr. President. This multibillion dollar program of building up nuclear weapons will not bring us arms control. It will bring us a continued nuclear arms race that will end in nuclear war.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an article that appeared in the National Journal on March 31, 1984, entitled Watered-Down Build-Down and written by Michael R. Gordon be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WATERED-DOWN BUILD-DOWN

For most people, the nuclear build-down is just a nice-sounding arms control concept. But it recently emerged as a hot campaign issue when Walter F. Mondale attacked Gary Hart for supporting the idea and thus legitimizing the Reagan Administration's strategic buildup.

Mondale's charge is a misleading oversimplification of Hart's record. Hart was an early supporter of the build-down, which calls for retirement of existing warheads as new ones are deployed by the United States or the Soviet Union in modernizing their arsenals. But last fall, Hart opposed the deal by which elements of the build-down were incorporated into the Administration's position at the Strategic Arms Reduction Talks (START) in return for congressional support of the MX missile. Lately, Hart has attempted to fend off Mondale's attack with an oversimplification of his own. Hart's advertisements omit his initial support and state only his opposition to the compromise.

Behind this campaign rhetoric is a complex arms control debate. Unlike many classic disputes between "hard-liners" and "soft-liners," the build-down dispute pits moderates within the Administration against moderates on Capitol Hill.

In this debate, two tough questions confront build-down proponents. Does the treaty proposal's compromise version of build-down do too little? Would a stricter proposal be less palatable to the Soviets than the new frameworks being worked on by the State Department and Joint Chiefs of Staff.

Getting a handle on the build-down is not easy. As proposed by Alton Frye of the Council of Foreign Relations and Sen. William S. Cohen, R-Maine, the original incarnation advanced the simple proposition that two warheads be retired for evey new one deployed. It was to be implemented on an interim basis while the START talks were in progress.

The plan grew more complex as supporters tried to take into account the criticism that "stabilizing" weapons, such as slow-moving bombers, should not be reduced at the same rate as "destabilizing" nuclear systems, such as land-based intercontinental ballistic missiles (ICBMs) with multiple warheads. Because of their quick flight time, such missiles are generally thought to have more utility as first-strike weapons—and would, conversely, be lucrative targets for a Soviet first strike.

Accordingly, build-down supporters devised a range of penalties aimed at deterring deployment of first-strike weapons in favor of stabilizing weapons. Under the revised plan, for example, deployment of a new warhead on a multiple-warhead ICBM would require retirement of two existing warheads. But less punitive ratios would be established for submarine-based warheads and those on bombers and single-warhead ICBMs. The planners would also establish contingency provisions in the event the Soviets were to halt deployment of new warheads.

Build-down proponents in the Senate—particularly, Cohen and Sam Nunn, D-Ga.—traded their support of the MX missile for the Administration's adoption of parts of the build-down concept in its START proposal. Features adopted by the Administration included the build-down penalty ratios and a generalized presidential pledge to support a "tradeoff" of restrictions on U.S. bomber weapons for restrictions on Soviet land-based missiles. But a funny thing happened to the build-down on the way to Geneva.

First, the interim implementation plan was dropped. More significantly, the penalty ratios were rendered virtually inoperative in the treaty proposal. The proposal, which aims at an ultimate reduction to 5,000 land and sea-based warheads for each superpower, calls for yearly reductions to be governed by one of two mechanisms: the penalty ratios or an over-all rate of 5 percent of each power's warhead arsenal—whichever is greater. Thus, the build-down's weighted penalty ratios, which work against destabilizing weapons, would be triggered only in the unlikely event that in a given year the ratios required retiring more than 5 percent of the U.S. warhead arsenal.

Barring an unforseen step-up in the U.S. strategic program, there would be no disadvantage in deploying destabilizing weapons such as the MX missile. The current proposal "permits both sides to pursue their modernization plans fully without great penalty," concluded a March 26 Congressional Budget Office report written by Lawrence J. Cavaiola and Bonita J. Dombey. Said an Administration official: "The Administration defanged the build-down and turned it into a traditional reduction formula."

Build-down proponent Frye argued in a recent article in Foreign Affairs that destabilization weapons would still be discouraged because "it would be foolish" for the United States to concentrate a significant number of MX warheads in silos deemed vulnerable to attack if it only had 5,000 warheads over all. That may be. But the Administration's decision to place MX missiles in existing silos testifies to its capacity to take action that its own officials and supporters have deemed wrongheaded. At any rate, the pressure to do otherwise stems from the 5,000-warhead limit in the original START proposal—not from the build-down.

Faced with these arguments, build-down proponents sometimes maintain that if the Administration adopts a more modest objective of reducing ballistic warhead levels to, say, 7,000, or if it toughens the build-down ratios, the modernization penalties might apply.

But Administration moderates foresee intense Soviet resistance to any plan that explicitly tries to seek a stiff penalty for modernizing multi-warhead land-based missiles—where the Soviets are strong—and lesser penalties on bombers and submarine weapons, in which the United States has the technological lead. The State Department would prefer to limit Soviet land-based missiles in a more indirect fashion.

None of this is to say that build-down proponents have not had a measure of success. Faced with pressure from them, from the President's Commission on Strategic Forces and from moderate forces inside the bureaucracy, President Reagan made his "trade-off" pledge, though the bureaucracy has yet to settle on exactly how such trade-off would work.

But that may be another way of saying that the best days of the build-down proponents may be behind them.

THE HOLOCAUST MEMORIAL MUSEUM

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, at the Kennedy Center's recent Evening of Commemoration Through the Performing Arts which recalled the Holocaust tragedy, Sigmund Strochlitz, Chairman of the Holocaust Days of Remembrance Committee, detailed plans for the creation of a Holocaust Memorial Museum in the Mall area of Washington, DC.

Elie Wiesel, Chairman of the United States Holocaust Memorial Council, commented on the uniqueness and significance of such a museum:

Our museum will be a place to remember. To learn. To share. By bearing witness to the tragedy, unprecedented in the annals of history, by collecting names and memories, by studying the chronicles and messages that survived, we will try to tell the story. And in doing so, we will teach our children, and theirs, that what happened once—and because it happened once to one people—must not happen again to any people.

The erection of the Holocaust Museum is one of the many important steps we can take to educate and protect against a Holocaust recurrence. The Senate has another opportunity to help in this fight.

The Genocide Convention was written in response to the Holocaust. All of the world's major powers except for the United States have now demonstrated their approval for the treaty's basic, fundamental principle of international law; 92 nations have signed this landmark agreement.

The Genocide Convention simply condemns the destruction of an entire people and establishes procedures for trying and punishing violators.

Mr. President, the United States takes pride in its exemplary commitment to human rights and justice. In the memory of the Holocaust victims, let us further our commitment to human rights and support ratification of the Genocide Convention.

Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time and yield the floor.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, there will now be a period for the transaction of routine morning business for not to exceed 10 minutes with statements therein limited to 5 minutes each.

THE FIRST OLYMPICS—ATHENS, 1896

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, with the 1984 summer Olympics just around the corner, I would like to make special mention of a very worthwhile new television miniseries, "The First Olympics—Athens, 1896." It was produced by Columbia Pictures television and will be aired on Sunday and Monday, May 20 and 21.

This is the true story of the 13 unheralded American athletes who competed in the first modern Olympic games in Athens, Greece, in 1896. It is the story of classics Prof. Dr. William Milligan Sloane who assembled the team with the most meager equipment. With Greek history books their only reference to the events, they took the 1896 Olympics by storm. The story takes place in a time when track and field events were virtually unknown in America. It traces the ragtag group of young men through their backgrounds, their pre-Olympic training, through the many nearly disabling obstacles they had to overcome and sees them to their day of reckoning in Athens, where they would bring home 9 of 12 gold medals.

"The First Olympics—Athens, 1896" was cowritten by Gary Allison and William Bast. The guest cast is headed by Louis Jourdan, who stars as the Baron Pierre de Coubertin, the visionary whose dream it is to organize an international festival of athletes and recreate the ancient games after 15 centuries. Other guest stars include Angela Lansbury and Honor Blackman and two young actors, Hunt Block and David Caruso, who portray key members of the first U.S. team. Tom McNab, athletic trainer for the 1984 British track and field team, was the trainer for the miniseries. It is interesting to compare the training methods and track and field scores of the 1896 team with present Olympic records. In 1896, Robert Garrett brought the gold home in the discus event with a hurl of 95 ft., 7½ in. During the 1976 games in Montreal, Mack Wilkins of the United States set the present record with a throw of 221 ft., 5 in.

Mr. President, in anticipation of the upcoming summer Olympics, I would like to join with our fine athletes, the people of Los Angeles, and Columbia Pictures television and commend to you "The First Olympics—Athens, 1896" on May 20 and 21.

TRIBUTE TO GEORGE ATTAR

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I would like to make my colleagues aware of the passing of a very special Rhode Islander. A man not born in America but born with the "stuff" Americans are made of.

George Attar died at the age of 42. Born in Syria, he was a man who never forgot his native culture but was tremendously proud of his American citizenship.

He looked forward to sharing the opportunities that would have laid ahead for his family in America. An untimely death stopped him from pursuing his American dream, but I am sure his family will carry his dream as they pursue theirs.

George Attar earned for himself a special place in the Armenian community in Rhode Island, and in the hearts of the many friends he had made in Pawtucket, RI, the city he loved and had chosen as his home.

George Attar in his life exemplified many of the values cherished by all Americans—love of family, willingness to work hard to realize his dreams, and a love of his community and his country.

I ask unanimous consent that a story from the Evening Times of Pawtucket, RI, of Friday, April 27, 1984, on the life of George Attar be printed in the RECORD:

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HIS DREAM RESTS NOW IN HANDS OF FAMILY

(By Karen Hupp)

PAWTUCKET.—Born in Syria and Armenian by descent, George Attar never forgot the traditions of his culture and his country.

But he loved America, treasured his citizenship and struggled for success in his adopted nation.

"George knew everything about America," his sister, Anahid, recalled last week. "And he loved Rhode Island, especially Pawtucket."

"It was his dream to live here and to bring his family here," she continued "He had chances to go where there were more job opportunities. But he wouldn't leave. He would say 'I have established my life in Rhode Island, and I want to finish it here.'"

George Attar died two weeks ago from heart failure. He was 42. The father of two small children, he had owned and operated the Hi Market on Central Avenue for the past 18 months.

His death leaves void in his close-knit family, in the Armenian community which patronized his store and among the many friends he'd made since coming to America in 1968.

And his family is convinced that George died because he worked so hard to make a place for them in their adopted country.

"He didn't think of himself, he thought of his family and others," said Anahid, interviewed in the family home at 124 Sweet Ave. Floral arrangements from George's funeral sat around the room.

"There was always a smile on his face," she continued in her lilting, accented voice. "He was a happy person. He was cruel only to his health."

George was 27, when he left Syria. Sponsored and assisted by several friends living in Pawtucket, he got a job in a pizza parlor and found a small apartment.

"George had always wanted to come to America," said Anahid, who works in Fleet National Bank's international commercial department. "America is a wonderful country, the mother of the whole world," she said. "There is more opportunity here, more freedom."

But George's American dream did not come easily.

Although he had graduated from and subsequently taught at an engineering college in Syria, he enrolled in Pawtucket's high school equivalency program and received another high school degree.

Already fluent in Armenian, Arabic and French, he painstakingly mastered English and found a new job as a draftsman.

He eventually earned enough money to send for his mother, Satenig, his two sisters, Anahid and Lucy, and younger brother, Paul. He bought furniture and rented a large apartment in Central Falls so they could all live together.

"Family was very important to George," said Anahid. "He would look at all of us and say 'This table we cannot divide'."

Religion was also important to the young Armenian. A regular member of St. Basil's Church where he was a lay reader and chanter, George would often drop in for morning mass at St. Leo's Church on his way to work.

In 1978, George married Sylvia, a Syrian girl living in Venezuela. They'd met when she was visiting mutual friends in Pawtucket. There was no question that the couple would remain with the Attar family, so they all pooled their resources and bought the sprawling two-decker on Sweet Avenue.

"George wouldn't look anywhere else for a house but in Pawtucket," said Anahid.

But in 1982, George was laid off from C.I. Hayes in Cranston, where he'd been employed for 13 years. Now the father of two children, Leon, and Cynthia, he desperately needed work. But there were no openings in his field.

"He took it hard", said Anahid. "His wife told me he was having pain in his body; he was very, very sad. But he would not leave Rhode Island."

After four long months of job-hunting, George saw the tiny, vacant market on Central Avenue.

"We told him it would be a big adjustment, that he would not be working in his field," Anahid said. "But he said it was worse not providing for his wife and children."

So the family helped him purchase the store, which George stocked with convenience items and Armenian foods. Most days he worked from 7 to 7, although often he started earlier to purchase fresh vegetables.

The market didn't make much money. But George loved his customers, Armenians who bought the specialized foods, children who stopped in for candy, neighbors who ran in for a quart of milk.

Tragically, 1984 was the year George had been working 16 years to see.

Business was finally picking up. His son had been accepted in St. Cecilia's School, a source of great pride for the family. Best of all, George's older brother, John, the last member of the family still in Syria, was planning to come to America.

But George wasn't feeling well. He was pale and often complained of chest pains. The family tried to take over some of the heavy work at the store. But one dreary April day he collapsed and later suffered a heart attack at the hospital. He died a few days later.

"He was our backbone," said Anahid, her eyes misting. "We were blind and he gave us eyes. We were deaf, he gave us ears. He gave us the tongue to talk. We needed him to live in this country."

The Attars still aren't sure what will happen to the Hi Market. All have their own careers and though they will now take care of George's wife and children, none has the experience to run a store.

For the time being, however, Paul has taken a leave of absence from his job as a chemist to keep the store open. "George worked so very, very hard," said Anahid. "We don't want his dream to die."

REHABILITATION OF OLD AND HISTORIC BUILDINGS

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I wish to address briefly today the effect of one provision in the tax bill passed by the Senate last month: The changes we made with respect to tax credits and depreciation for rehabilitation of older buildings and historic properties.

As one who strongly supported the original legislation in the late 1970's to grant special tax treatment to those who agree to rehabilitate historic properties, and as a supporter of the provisions in the tax bill of 1981 which greatly extended those credits and added new provisions to encourage rehabilitation of older buildings, I believe the provision we approved last month is a step backward.

I am concerned about the Senate provision for two reasons: First, the way it was done, and second, the adverse effect the Senate provisions will have upon rehabilitation if they are allowed to become law.

The Senate Finance Committee spent a great deal of time arriving at a bill which we felt was fair. After long deliberation and several votes, we agreed that raising the period over which real property can be depreciated from 15 to 20 years was an equitable provision. The real estate industry, while hardly enthusiastic about the change, generally agreed that changing the law to 20 years was preferable to other revenue-raising plans which had been put forth.

When this provision was debated on the floor—in the early morning hours of April 13—we were suddenly presented with a compromise which was billed as acceptable to all segments of the real estate industry. That, it turns out, was certainly not the case. In short, that segment of the real estate industry that specializes in rehabilitation of older buildings and historic property had been sacrificed to the interests of commercial real estate developers.

The Senate provision we passed on April 13 raises the period of depreciation for real property from 15 to 20 years for the period through December 31 of this year. The period then falls to 19 years for property placed in service in calendar year 1985 and to 18 years in calendar year 1986 and thereafter.

As part of the compromise we enacted, the revenue lost as a result of this future liberalization of depreciation is to be made up by decreasing the tax credit for rehabilitation of older buildings and by changing the accounting method used by those who rehabilitate certified historic properties. Under the Senate provisions, the tax credit for buildings over 30 years will be cut from 15 percent to 10 percent, and the credit for buildings over 40 years old will be cut from 20 to 15 percent. The tax credit for rehabilitation of certified historic properties will remain at 25 percent, but those who do the rehabilitation will be required to use a full basis adjustment when computing depreciation, rather than the half-basis adjustment enacted by Congress in 1981.

As I indicated earlier, the notion that this compromise had been agreed to by all sectors of the real estate industry is just plain wrong. Perhaps the best way to characterize what really happened is to quote a legislative spokeswoman for the National Trust for Historic Preservation who told the Washington Post that those in the industry who promoted this scheme are:

> Absolutely unscrupulous people who are content to offer up the Nation's older buildings and central cities as sacrificial lambs so that they could save a few tax dollars.

I could not agree more.

Those who instigated the compromise are among the most vocal opponents of high deficit spending—except, apparently, when it comes to their own interests, namely the tax write-offs they seek for the development of commercial property.

It should be noted that any change in the period of depreciation for real property will not affect the average homeowner in the slightest. The only ones who are affected are those who develop commercial property, including office buildings, apartment houses and shopping malls. All we have asked of these developers is that they accept a modest change in depreciation schedules; after all, until the tax bill of 1981, the period allowed for depreciation was 30 years or longer. A 20-year period is hardly a major hardship in light of the historic period allowed for the depreciation of real property.

This leads me, Mr. President, to my second point of concern over the changes resulting from the Senate compromise.

If these changes become law, they will make it that much harder for those who have been actively involved in the revitalization and rehabilitation of our older central cities and historic property.

Congress approved generous tax credits for rehabilitation of older buildings for a specific purpose: To encourage people to gamble that we can once again make older central cities viable places in which to live.

The existing tax credits for rehabilitating older property are an equalizer: They make it possible for a business to find it just as economically attractive to locate or remain in an older area as to relocate in newer facilities elsewhere. The 15- and 20-percent tax credits for rehabilitation of 30- and 40-year-old buildings are a driving force in making it possible to keep shops and factories in our older cities, to provide jobs that are essential to areas like my part of the country. According to the Treasury Department, taxpayers claimed $250 million in tax credits for the rehabilitation of older buildings in fiscal year 1982 and $335 million in credits in fiscal year 1983. It is clear that these credits are working to encourage renewal of older buildings in many cities across the country.

The same argument can be made when it comes to historic preservation.

Since the passage of the National Historic Preservation Act of 1966, Congress has made the preservation of historic properties a national commitment. We have successively liberalized the tax laws over the years to make this possible—most notably the 25-percent tax credit approved in 1981 for rehabilitation of buildings that are listed on the National Register of Historic Places.

Even though the 25-percent tax credit for rehabilitation of historic buildings will remain in effect if the Senate provisions approved last month become law, the accounting changes contained in the compromise proposal are counterproductive in that they will make rehabilitation of historic property somewhat less attractive.

It should be stressed, Mr. President, that it is not easy to rehabilitate an historic property. First, the property must be designated by the National Park Service as a "certified historic structure" which, in itself, can prove a time-consuming experience. Second, the rehabilitation itself must conform to the Secretary of Interior's standards for rehabilitation, to assure that the historic character of the property is not jeopardized.

Whatever the drawbacks, however, the 25-percent tax credit for rehabilitation of historic properties is working. Let me just cite a few statistics from my own State. In 1982 and 1983 alone, some 117 projects were undertaken in Rhode Island, spending a total of $46.5 million to historic rehabilitation. This is more than the total number of historic preservation projects that were undertaken in 5 years between 1977 and 1981, before the 25 percent credit was approved. Nationally, according to a recent report of the U.S. General Accounting Office on the historic credits, the estimated dollar value of investments in historic rehabilitation work has increased from a combined total of $140 million for fiscal years 1977 and 1978 to over $2.1 billion in fiscal year 1983 alone.

Clearly, it is in the national interest to continue to encourage both the preservation and rehabilitation of both historic properties and those which are merely old. Not only does such rehabilitation protect a valuable national resource—the heritage of our own history—it also gives those who want to see the rebirth of our older cities a fighting chance of success.

The Senate made a mistake on April 13. It is my hope, Mr. President, that the conference committee will undo the damage that was inflicted.

THE PRESIDENCY OF HARRY S. TRUMAN—SOME LESSONS FOR TODAY

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, today, May 8, 1984, marks the 100th anniversary of the birth of one of America's greatest Presidents, Harry S. Truman.

Recently, I made note of the many events taking place throughout Missouri and the Nation commemorating the Truman centennial, including today's joint session of Congress.

It is important that we remember and honor Harry Truman. But it is equally important that we also take a moment to reflect upon the lessons that Harry Truman's life in general and Presidency in particular hold for us today.

President Truman often remarked that had he not entered politics, he might very well have become a teacher. In my view, Harry Truman was a teacher, in the sense that the lessons the Truman Presidency provides us are lessons that we would be wise to heed.

From the very moment he was sworn into office upon the death of Franklin D. Roosevelt, Harry Truman taught us the importance of having a President who is willing to take charge and make the tough decisions. Monumental tasks greeted the new President. Abroad, a world war continued to rage. At home, social and economic changes posed challenges which President Truman would have to face.

When F.D.R. died, many people wondered aloud whether the plain-speaking man from Missouri would be able to fill his shoes. Wrote Senator Arthur Vandenberg of Michigan in his diary, "The gravest question mark in every American heart is Truman. Can he swing the job?" More than a few Americans feared that the Presidency would overwhelm him.

But in Missouri, the President's 92-year-old mother knew better. "Harry," she said, "will get along all right."

Harry Truman quickly proved his mother correct.

Speaking to an apprehensive Nation just 4 days after F.D.R.'s death, President Truman assured the American people that the country was in safe hands. Americans, their confidence restored by the President's strong, determined voice, warmed quickly to their new leader.

And those who would work most closely with Harry Truman soon came to recognize one of his greatest traits: His ability to make a decision and stand by it. Wrote one Cabinet member, "It was a wonderful relief to see the promptness with which Truman took up each matter and decided it." Another administration official marveled at how President Truman, in just 15 minutes, had given him a "clear directive" on each of 14 different problems.

Harry Truman did not regard one of his favorite phrases, "The Buck Stops Here," as an empty cliche. Through his firmness and his decisiveness, he taught us that waffling and vacillation have no place in the Oval Office.

Within only a few months after taking office, President Truman taught us another lesson: The importance of bringing to a halt a bloody and costly world war.

Shortly after his swearing-in, the military Chiefs of Staff informed Mr. Truman that the war in Europe would last another 6 months. President Truman refused to accept this gloomy prognosis. Instead, he worked with characteristic determination for a swifter end to the fighting; 25 days after his conference with the Chiefs of Staff, Germany surrendered unconditionally.

Against Japan, the prospects for a quick conclusion to the war seemed much bleaker. But in July, the President received news of the successful explosion of an atomic bomb in the New Mexico desert. Harry Truman knew that he now shouldered an awesome burden.

"Leonard," he confided to a friend, "I am going to have to make a decision which no man in history has ever had to make. I'll make the decision, but it's terrifying to think about what I will have to decide."

True to his word, Harry Truman did not run from the decision which events had forced him to make. He knew that if he did not use the new weapon, the war in the Pacific could drag on for another year and a half, at a cost of tens of thousands of lives on both sides. And so President Truman authorized the dropping of the atomic bomb.

He had given Japan the chance to surrender first. And he had made it unmistakably clear to his advisers that only military centers were to be the targets. As he told a Senator who urged him to drop even more atomic bombs on Japan: "My object is to save as many American lives as possible but I also have a humane feeling for the women and children in Japan."

Harry Truman made the decision to use atomic weapons not out of a spirit of vengeance, but rather out of the simple desire to, in the words of his biographer Robert Donovan, "end the war quickly and save lives."

Mr. Truman did not only lead us in war. He also gave us some valuable lessons about how to conduct a peace. President Truman passionately believed that nations should settle their differences at the negotiating table, not on the battlefield. Speaking in Kansas City in April of 1945, he pointed out:

> When Kansas and Colorado have a quarrel over the water in the Arkansas River they don't call out the National Guard in each state and go to war over it. They bring a suit in the Supreme Court of the United States and abide by the decision. There isn't a reason in the world why we cannot do that internationally.

Accordingly, the concept of the United Nations had few stronger advocates than Harry Truman. In fact, Mr. Truman's first decision as President was that the conference to establish the United Nations would convene as scheduled in San Francisco despite Franklin Roosevelt's death.

After the United Nations was founded in October of President Truman's first year in office, his commitment to the organization never wavered. As he wrote to Eleanor Roosevelt in 1948, "The Charter of the United Nations is a document under which we could work and have peace * * * I am still hopeful and still working with everything I have to make the United Nations work."

Harry Truman's example teaches us that world peace is the noblest goal a nation can aspire to.

Another lesson that emerged from the Truman Presidency involves our relationship with the Soviet Union. None of Harry Truman's predecessors had to deal as extensively with the Soviets in peacetime as did President Truman.

He harbored no illusions about the Soviet system of government. He knew it was undemocratic; he knew it was repressive. "Russian communism," he wrote, "isn't communist at all but just police government pure and simple. A few top hands just take clubs, pistols and concentration camps and rule the people on the lower levels." Harry Truman knew with whom he was dealing.

President Truman also knew that agreement with the Soviets would not come easily, that he would have to show strength and resolve when going face-to-face with Joseph Stalin. He was determined, he told a friend, not to let Stalin beat him at a poker game. He recognized the difference between negotiation and appeasement. In a famous confrontation with Soviet foreign Minister Molotov, the President, as he himself put it, "explained to him in words of one syllable and in language he could understand that cooperation required agreement and concessions on both sides and that cooperation is not a one-way street."

But while Harry Truman understood the difficulties inherent in negotiating with the Soviets, he also knew something else, something that some of today's leaders often seem to forget: The future of world peace hinges upon the maintenance of a dialog between the United States and the U.S.S.R.

Mr. Truman never forgot that and never failed to demonstrate a desire to pursue such a dialog. "The door is always open for honest negotiations looking toward genuine settlement," he declared to a California crowd in 1948. Privately, President Truman expressed the same sentiment. He noted in a diary entry that "I have always been willing to talk to Russia on any subject." These words held great wisdom when President Truman first wrote them; how much more meaningful they are for us today.

President Truman also taught us another lesson that has particular relevance for us here and now: How to resist successfully the spread of communism without going to war.

When World War II ended, the Soviet Union refused to withdraw its occupying army from Iran and attempted to install a puppet regime there. Some Presidents might have used force to dislodge the Russians. Harry Truman instead opted for quiet but firm diplomatic pressure. In early 1946, the Soviet Army pulled out.

The next year, 1947, found Greece and Turkey in imminent danger of falling into Communist hands. Again, Harry Truman refused to stand idly by. Appearing before Congress, President Truman asked for extensive aid to those nations. In that same speech, the President enunciated what has become known as the Truman Doctrine. He said:

> I believe it must be the policy of the United States to support free peoples who are resisting attempted subjugation by armed minorities or by outside pressures.

But, determined though he was to halt the spread of communism, Harry Truman was equally determined not to get the United States into another war. As Mr. Truman's biographer, Robert Donovan, puts it, "Truman clearly was not planning military action to contain the Soviet Union or communism. * * * The main vehicle of American influence abroad was not military but economic."

President Truman's anti-Communist actions testify to his desire to avert bloodshed. His administration's Marshall plan forestalled Communist gains in Western Europe by sending food, not guns, to the devastated nations of that region. His Berlin airlift represented a strong yet restrained measure that preserved freedom in West Berlin while minimizing the risk of war with the Soviet Union.

Harry Truman taught us that deploying troops and mining harbors need not be our only means of combatting communism.

President Truman also reminded us of the need to bolster our ties with our allies. In 1948, he took an unprecedented step when he asked the Senate to adopt a resolution declaring that U.S. policy should favor regional and collective arrangements as provided for in the United Nations Charter. Just 1 year later, representatives of 12 nations gathered in Washington to sign the North Atlantic Treaty.

"It is a simple document," President Truman said of the treaty that established NATO, "but if it had existed in 1914 and 1939, supported by the nations who are represented here today, I believe it would have prevented the acts of aggression which led to two world wars."

Mr. Truman recognized the force for good which NATO could exert upon world affairs. And NATO has indeed served us well since he helped bring about its creation nearly 35 years ago.

Harry Truman brought commonsense and pragmatism to the conduct of American foreign policy. But he also believed that foreign policy should be founded upon more than pragmatic self-interest. Harry Truman based his foreign policy upon the principles of compassion, justice, and mercy.

When he took office, he told Congress that "the responsibility of the great states is to serve and not to dominate the world." As President, Harry Truman set out to serve the world.

At the end of World War II, the nations of Europe faced severe food shortages. Mr. Truman did not turn his back on the suffering Europeans. He set up a Famine Emergency Committee, with Herbert Hoover as its honorary chairman, and asked it to find ways to reduce food consumption in this country so that we could send more food abroad. He appealed to Americans to tighten their belts, telling them that "millions will surely die unless we eat less." And he instituted measures that resulted in unprecedented amounts of food being shipped overseas to alleviate the crisis.

Nor did Harry Truman allow criticism of his relief program to deter him from doing what was right. Of one detractor, a flour manufacturer who balked at stepping up his production, the President wrote, "It is too bad that he couldn't be taken to Poland and be allowed to spend the rest of the winter and spring in a Polish village on the rations they have to eat. Maybe he would be willing to get a little more flour out of the wheat in order that he could have a slice of bread, which would look exceedingly good to him."

In the end, Europe finally recovered and began producing food once again. But the Europeans probably would not have made it through the crisis without U.S. help. According to one historian, "It is no exaggeration to say that American relief shipments in 1945-46 were the salvation of Europe." And it was Harry Truman who helped clear the way for those shipments to take place.

The famous Marshall plan—which Winston Churchill called "the most unsordid act in history"—represents another achievement stemming from President Truman's desire to inject mercy and compassion into the realm of foreign affairs. We here in the United States perhaps have some difficulty grasping the extent of the devastation that characterized post-war Europe. Harry Truman had no such difficulty. He had visited Europe after the war. He had witnessed first-hand the bombed-out factories, the ravaged countryside, the cold and homeless people.

Mr. Truman was determined to do something about it.

In a 1947 speech at Harvard University, Secretary of State George Marshall outlined the administration's plan. The United States, he said, would take the lead in rebuilding war-torn Europe.

Some historians have portrayed the Marshall plan as some sort of intricate and complex concept. But to Harry Truman, the rationale behind the plan was simple:

> It was a plan after the Second World War to prevent the kind of thing we had happen in this part of the country after the War Between the States. . . . After the Second World War, Europe had suffered the same way we had, and that made me think that we had to help rehabilitate Europe. It had to be rehabilitated by the people who had helped destroy it. . . . People were starving, and they were cold because there wasn't enough coal, and tuberculosis was breaking out. There had been food riots in France and Italy, everywhere. And as if that wasn't bad enough, that winter turned out to have been the coldest in history almost. And something had to be done. . . . The United States had to do it, had to do it all, and the people and the Congress had to be persuaded that it was necessary.

Four years and billions of dollars later, the Marshall plan had succeeded in getting Europe back on its feet.

In his 1949 inaugural address, President Truman set forth another proposal motivated by compassion for less-fortunate people around the globe, the point 4 program. The President described point 4 as a plan to help, as he put it, "the free peoples of the world, through their own efforts, to produce more food, more clothing, more materials for housing and more mechanical power to lighten their burdens."

Never before in American history had such concern about the plight of the rest of the world characterized our nation's foreign policy. "Not the discovery of atomic energy," wrote the historian Arnold Toynbee, "but the solicitude of the world's most privileged people for its less privileged as vested in Truman's Point Four and the Marshall Plan . . . . this will be remembered as the single achievement of our age."

Harry Truman's actions surrounding the creation of the state of Israel also demonstrate the quest for justice which underlay his conduct of foreign policy. The atrocities of Adolf Hitler and the Nazis had uprooted thousands of European Jews, leaving them homeless. To many Jewish leaders, the establishment of a Jewish homeland in Palestine seemed to offer a solution to the refugee problem.

Such a proposal did not meet with unanimous approval. One Senator wrote to the President expressing reservations about the idea.

Replied Harry Truman, "I sincerely wish that every Member of Congress could visit the displaced persons camps in Germany and Austria and see just what is happening to 500,000 human beings through no fault of their own."

Several of the President's own advisers also argued against the idea, claiming that America's need for Arab oil precluded United States support for a Jewish state in Palestine.

Harry Truman replied that he wanted to make his decision in the light of justice, not in the light of oil.

And Harry Truman did let justice guide his decision. He decided to endorse the creation of the Jewish state. Only 11 minutes after Israel's leaders proclaimed the independent existence of the new nation, President Truman granted it official diplomatic recognition. "Truman did not bring Israel into being," writes his biographer, Donovan. "But his decisions then and later began what eventually became a special relationship between the two countries."

In his conduct of foreign policy, then, Harry Truman had much to teach us. Hubert Humphrey put it best at a 1965 Truman award banquet in Kansas City:

> You ended World War II and brought peace to a weary and shattered world. You transformed President Franklin Roosevelt's vision of a United Nations into reality. You took the historic decision to aid Greece and Turkey when the flames of freedom had almost flickered out in that part of the world. You launched and saw through the sensational success the Marshall Plan of aid to the war-torn nations of Europe. In the best American tradition, you aided friend and former foe alike. Mr. President, you were a great builder in your years of high responsibility—a builder of peace, of a new Europe, of Israel-American friendship, and of many other things.

But the lessons of the Truman Presidency are by no means confined to foreign affairs. Harry Truman also left his mark upon domestic matters as well.

Upon taking office, President Truman pledged to continue vigorously the efforts of F.D.R. and the New Deal "to improve the lot of the common people."

Harry Truman made good on this pledge.

He fought to give a fair shake to America's working men and working women.

He fought for an agriculture program that would benefit farmers and consumers alike.

He fought for increased Federal aid to eduction, for he recognized that the quality of America's future depended upon the quality of American education.

He fought to strengthen and extend the social security system.

He fought successfully for passage of the National Housing Act of 1949, a measure designed to provide "decent homes in wholesome surroundings for low-income families now living in the squalor of the slums."

Harry Truman often ran into opposition from a stubborn and recalcitrant Congress. He did not always win his legislative battles. But he never quit fighting for what he believed in. As he told President John F. Kennedy in 1962, "You know my program was always 'Give 'em Hell' and if they don't like it give 'em more hell.'"

Perhaps no aspect of domestic policy demonstrates Harry Truman's commitment to fairness and justice more convincingly than does the issue of civil rights.

As a county judge in western Missouri, he had stood up to the Ku Klux Klan.

As a U.S. Senator, he had supported efforts to end racial discrimination.

And as President, Harry Truman launched an all-out war against inequality and injustice.

In late 1946, disturbed by the lack of progress on race relations, he appointed the President's Commission on Civil Rights to study the problem and recommend ways to tackle it. Just 1 year later, President Truman acted on the Commission's suggestions. In his "Special Message to Congress on Civil Rights"—the first such message ever given to Congress by any President—Harry Truman outlined an ambitious program designed to translate the Constitution's rhetoric into reality. He asked Congress to enact an anti-lynching law, an anti-poll tax law, a permanent Fair Employment Practices Commission, a permanent Commission on Civil Rights, and a Joint Congressional Committee on Civil Rights. He asked for laws prohibiting discrimination and segregation on interstate trains, planes, and buses. And he informed Congress that he planned to issue an order ending discrimination in the Armed Forces.

Harry Truman's civil rights message came in 1948, right in the midst of an election year. It infuriated the South. It shattered the Democratic Party. It threatened to cost the President his job in November.

But Harry Truman refused to play politics with civil rights. In a letter to an old Army buddy who had urged him to go easy on the civil rights issue, the President responded:

> When the mob gangs take four people out and shoot them in the back, and everybody in the country is acquainted with who did the shooting and nothing is done about it, that country is in a pretty bad fix from a law enforcement standpoint.
> When a Mayor and a City Marshall can take a negro Sergeant off a bus in South Carolina, beat him up and put out one of his eyes, and nothing is done about it by the State Authorities, something is radically wrong with the system.
> * * * I can't approve of such goings on and I shall never approve it, as long as I am here, as I told you before. I am going to try to remedy it and if that ends up in my failure to be reelected, that failure will be in good cause.

His deeply rooted sense of compassion led to his strong convictions on civil rights.

Even in the White House, Harry Truman never lost sight of who he was or where he came from. He never lost touch with the feelings, fears, and aspirations of the common people.

"It is the habit of men in high office to kowtow to the so-called big shots and to neglect the little people with no pull," he once wrote in a letter to a cousin in 1952. "When a guy comes to me with endorsements from Senators and House Members, and letters and calls from Governors and Wall Streeters, it leaves me rather cold. But when some old lady or a boy in the Army tells me what's troubling them, I go to work."

The greatness of Harry Truman lies in a large measure in this empathy for the common man.

Mr. President, I have given these speeches on the life and times of Harry Truman to pay tribute to him in his centennial year. The Economist, a British publication which I greatly admire, published an excellent retrospective on President Truman's achievements in its April 28 edition.

The article said, in part:

> The contrast between the slight opinion in which he was generally held when he took up the presidency and the towering achievements which he left behind when he departed gave rise to the unfortunate notion that the office of president of the United States has some magical quality about it that enables a small man to grow into it and become big, or an ignoble man to become noble. As has since been amply demonstrated, nothing of the kind can be expected. Truman could not have done what he did had he not, to begin with, had the right stuff in him.
> In my view, there is no doubt he had "the right stuff."

HARRY S. TRUMAN: A CENTENNIAL SALUTE

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. President, it is instructive for all of us to recall the life of our 33d President on this, the centennial of his birth. Harry S. Truman failed as a haberdasher in Kansas City, MO; he succeeded brilliantly, however, as a world leader in this town against all political odds. After he left the White House we realized how long a shadow he had cast.

Winston Churchill saluted him as being responsible, more than any other man, for saving Western civilization. He had set the course of rebuilding Europe and containing Soviet aggression after World War II; his was the deciding authority that ushered in the nuclear epoch. Had we as a people heeded his counsel and example in civil rights nearly 40 years ago we might have been spared much of our national strife of a more recent period.

Yet he was a most unlikely figure for these roles. The credentials he brought to the Oval Office scarcely impressed the media of his day. Indeed, the public's regard for him was achieved in the flesh from the rear of cross-country trains that bypassed a hostile press and overrode polls and doubting punditry. His was an election victory before the dawn of our video age: Before imagery assumed dominance in the selection of national leaders. Only in retrospect was his greatness recognized by the communications channels and opinion molders of the time.

Certainly he was a late bloomer. Limited to a high school education, he worked as a railroad timekeeper and bank clerk before returning to his parents' farm; he gained his first leadership experience in his midthirties as an artillery officer in World War I. After that war he and an Army buddy borrowed money to open a clothing store but were unsuccessful. He then entered politics, but after a single 2-year term the voters turned him out of office at the age of 40. Undaunted, he ran again 2 years later for an even higher county office; under the tutelage of a dubious patron, he won. At 50, he came to Washington as a Member of this body.

In his second term he gained national prominence as a president, effective chairman of an Oversight Committee for the massive national defense program on the eve of our entry into World War II. This exposure helped to propel him into the Office of Vice President in 1944. Three months after being sworn into that Office, as he himself described it, "the Moon, the Stars, and all the planets" fell upon him, and he became President of the United States on the death of Franklin Delano Roosevelt.

The enormity of the position gave him pause but he took charge in short order. Behind a modest demeanor was an innate ability for statecraft which soon surfaced. It has often been said that he grew into the post, and this may be true to some extent. It is probably more accurate to say, however, that at age 60 Harry Truman brought to the Presidency abilities and strengths his contemporaries had not fully appreciated before. His was only a high school education in a formal sense, but he was nonetheless the most widely read person to occupy the Oval Office in recent times, with the possible exception of John F. Kennedy. He was steeped in knowledge of history and this was reflected in his wise and forceful decisions. He also brought administrative depth to the Office, fashioning modern management techniques for the White House and Cabinet that brought discipline and organization to the entire executive branch. This was a legacy to all those who followed him in that Office.

His decision to employ the atomic bomb in World War II was a fateful one that remains controversial to this day. But it was his judgment that it would save more lives for both sides than it would claim by bringing the war in the Pacific to an end. He forged a bold postwar foreign policy highlighted by the Truman doctrine; he is credited with saving Greece and Turkey from Soviet domination; he implemented the Marshall plan, which revived Europe's economy, and the Berlin airlift, so critical to all Western Europe in that period.

At home he was no less bold, if less successful. He abolished segregation in the armed services and proposed strong civil rights legislation that the country was not then prepared to accept. Nevertheless, he laid down stepping stones to end racism in our society by establishing a Federal Civil Rights Commission and appointing Supreme Court Justices who helped dismantle racism's trappings. He stood for fair play for everyone and called for statehood for Alaska and my own State of Hawaii, as early as 1946.

On a more personal note, this sense of fair play regardless of skin color or racial ancestry, I recalled only yesterday in a speech saluting Asian-Pacific American Heritage Week. Upon presenting the all-Nisei 442d regimental combat team, of which I was a proud officer, with its 7th Presidential Unit Citation and greeting the Nisei veterans at the White House, President Truman said to them:

> You fought not only the enemy, but you fought prejudice—and you won. Keep up that fight, and we will continue to win—to make this great republic stand for what the Constitution says it stands for: "The welfare of all the people all the time."

These words have inspired many veterans of that most highly decorated "go-for-broke" combat unit to become better Americans for a greater America.

The man from Missouri was a bold innovator in other fields of social legislation as well, notably health and education. But the record shows that he also recognized the limits of what was doable, both in foreign policy and in the domestic economy; not all his successors were as gifted in this regard. Above all, he recognized his own limitations yet never allowed his self-knowledge to deter him from doing his damndest and doing what was right.

His humor and humility tempered a brusque, blunt-spoken personality. Whether one agreed with him or not, he inspired confidence among voters as a leader whose image was a valid reflection of his true character. When his term of office ended he was more than content to become once again, a plain citizen of Independence, Mo. He may not have been a charismatic leader, Mr. President, but he did give us confidence in our own greatness as a people by his own example. We could identify with him no matter what our walk of life.

It is well for all Americans to reflect on the qualities Harry S. Truman brought to the Presidency of this great country of ours during this centennial anniversary of his birth, especially in this Presidential election year. Ours is a greater country because Harry S. Truman served as its President.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, will my able colleague yield?

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. President, I am happy to yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, what our friend from Hawaii is saying is entirely appropriate and fully deserved by Harry Truman, who was, of course, a Member of the Senate, being sworn in 1935. It is not important except to say that I had been sworn in on Capitol Hill in the House of Representatives 2 years earlier, and I came to know the man who was not only from Missouri but the man who was from the people during the years that we were in the Senate.

In the period of his service in the Senate and then when he took over the reins of the Presidency on the death of Franklin Roosevelt and then later when in his own right he was elected President of the United States in 1948, he was a man from Missouri who had grown up in the responsibilities to which he was committed. And in that election of 1948 I am glad that the citizenry of West Virginia voted for him in the majority rather than in the minority.

I believe that today's programs, the breakfast, the joint meeting of Congress, and then the graciousness of President Reagan at the White House in a later luncheon were essential to the official Truman Centennial observance. These events took place under the Truman Centennial Commission. Many Members of the Senate and House worked together on the program. Former colleagues like the Senator from Missouri, Stuart Symington, came back today to talk of Harry Truman at the joint congressional meeting.

I am privileged to join my colleague from Hawaii in this timely tribute.

Harry Truman was truly not just a man from Missouri; he was a man for the people, and that is certainly the hallmark of the years of public service that he gave. I shall always remember him, as will those who have served in the Senate and in positions within our Federal Government.

It is not enough to say he was either a great man; that might have a differing connotation in the minds of some, or that he was a good man, and yet to speak of him we must remember he was a man of character, a man of courage, a man committed to the country which he led during a most difficult period in a shrinking world.

I thank my colleague for yielding to me.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. I thank the senior Senator from West Virginia for his contribution to this day of celebration. Being the only Senator who served with Harry Truman when he was a U.S. Senator, the word of the Senator from West Virginia carries certainly more weight than any other Member of this body, and I again join with him in the praises of that great man from Missouri.

EL SALVADOR

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, today's Washington Post contains an editorial which I feel sets a very positive tone on the relationship between the United States and El Salvador.

For several weeks, we have been awaiting the outcome of the Presidential election in El Salvador. This election process has been the demonstration of democracy at work—a free and open election of the top Government officials for this Central American country. But more importantly, it signals a clear choice and a clear mandate to bring together the extreme elements in El Salvador and mold them into a cohensive, working Government unit.

I hope now that we in Congress are prepared to move forward and grant the President's request for additional aid in El Salvador.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the editorial be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A PRESIDENT TO BET ON

In Jose Napoleon Duarte, the United States has a Central American leader worth betting on. It is not just that he is El Salvador's first president with an authentic democratic mandate, and a man of high personal courage and integrity. He is committed to social reform, the eradication of human rights violations and the reconciliation of all Salvadorans interested in a peaceful and productive society—all goals of American policy.

The tasks before Mr. Duarte are formidable. To offset the continuing threat of the extreme right, he must settle down the moderate conservatives, who are important in the Salvadoran economy—without alienating his labor and peasant support. To counter the continuing war of the extreme left, he must start up his promised "dialogue" and draw in opposition elements open to democratic persuasion—without bringing on a coup. To reassure a champing American Congress, he must not only see that death squad activities keep diminishing, he must also bring to early justice those who killed the American nuns and land reform consultants.

In recent months, Congress has frozen American aid. It was waiting to see whether Mr. Duarte would beat Roberto d'Aubuisson, of the far right, and it was distracted by the furor over the mining in Nicaragua. On Nicaragua, difficult questions must still be resolved. but on El Salvador, there is no further reason for delay or, for that matter, for nickel-and-diming. A good man has won as valid an election as a realistic person can imagine in a country torn by war and social revolution. Now American policy should focus on what will help Mr. Duarte hold off the guerrillas' expected "final offensive," control his military and move toward dialogue.

Meanwhile, there is Costa Rica—democratic, poor, neutral, and lacking an army. For some time it has been the unoffending victim of Nicaraguan-sponsored subversion. Last month San Jose protested Nicaragua's "serious military attacks," conducted apparently to force the Costa Ricans to stop giving the same sanctuary to the Sandinistas' guerrilla challengers as they gave Sandinistas in their day. Now the Costa Ricans, unable politically to kick out the Contras, unable militarily to protect themselves from the Sandinistas, seek emergency aid in Washington for their border guard. they deserve it. But their appeal should also be met by an intensified diplomatic effort to keep the Central America war from getting wider.

BARBARA BUSH

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, I would like to take this opportunity to bring to the attention of my colleagues an article which appeared in the New York Times on Sunday, April 6 about the very active life of Barbara Bush, the wife of the Vice President. Barbara Bush is a very special woman and many of us are honored to call her a close friend.

In spite of the many responsibilities she faces as the wife of the Vice President, Barbara Bush has dedicated much of her time and energy to the fight against illiteracy, a fight which she has taken up with tireless devotion. Barbara Bush has done much to bring to national attention the problem of illiteracy in America. And through her work with outstanding organizations such as the Literary Volunteers and Reading Is Fundamental, she is working to develop solutions to this multifaceted problem.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that "The Active Life of Barbara Bush" be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times, Apr. 8, 1984]

THE ACTIVE LIFE OF BARBARA BUSH

(By Enid Nemy)

WASHINGTON.—Barbara Bush is almost convinced that if not for the Secret Service men who accompany her, she would be just another face in the crowd. But when she is recognized as the wife of the Vice President, which is more often than she cares to admit, people are, she said, "very nice to me."

"I'm not a threat to them," she said, her blue eyes twinkling. "I'm not going to steal their husbands."

Mrs. Bush was working on her needlepoint in a sunny alcove in the Vice Presidential residence, on the grounds of the Naval Observatory here, when she made the remark, and both the needlepoint and the statement are typical of her style. At the age of 58 she is relaxed, humorous and direct, and when she prefers not to discuss a subject she is likely to say, "I'm not going to answer that," rather than skirt the issue.

She is also a practiced diplomat. The interview had been delayed because of backed-up airline flights, but she brushed aside apologies. She was, she said, grateful for the postponement because it had given her a morning off.

Although her activities are not widely publicized, Mrs. Bush is probably one of the busiest spouses in the Administration. Her schedule since her husband was sworn in has taken her to 53 countries and the equivalent of 16 times around the world.

HER WORK AS EDITOR OF A DOG'S LIFE

Occasionally, her travels are of a more personal nature. Her visit to New York last week, for example, was to attend a reception at the Public Library at Lincoln Center. The party celebrated the publication of "C. Fred's Story, a Dog's Life" (Doubleday & Company), a book that was supposedly written by C. Fred Bush, the family's golden cocker spaniel. Mrs. Bush is given credit for editing "slightly."

Now, with an election coming up, she is prepared to do her share of campaigning, both with her husband and on her own. "I would rather talk about a cause," she said. "But I have total faith in the President so I feel very good about campaigning for him."

She did not agree with every position taken by the President, she said, but the differences were minor. "I don't agree with George Bush about everything, but I don't talk about it," she said.

One of the issues on which she was known to differ with the President in the past was the proposed Federal equal rights amendment, which both she and her husband supported. She is still in favor of it, she said, "but I'm not as excited about it as I once was."

"I'm mature enough to back off and look at it," she said, as she added that women's struggle for equality "had done wonderful things" but had also, in some cases, been divisive.

"I don't think men and women should have children and not take responsibility," she said. "Men are going to have to take a lot more responsibility. They will have to do more as their share. But women are also going to have to learn that they have to have priorities, that they have to make choices and that they can't have everything. You can't, in my opinion, be a bank president and a full-time mother."

She realized that there were women who could not afford to stay home, she said, but she was "getting to be more conservative." She said home was so important that sacrifices should be made, perhaps for the first four or five years of a child's life. "We can't turn our backs on children," she said.

On the other hand, she added, "I thoroughly expect to vote for a woman President in my lifetime."

Did she think that her husband would be a candidate for President in 1988? Her immediate reaction was, "No, he's done that, I don't see it," but the answer was modified rather quickly to, "He'd never lose in the fall and run in 1988, but if we win, I don't know."

"It's been a very satisfying job," she said, describing her husband's term as Vice President. "This President has surprised me. We've been around Washington a long time but no President has ever carried the Vice Presidency to such a fascinating level, in my opinion. George sees the President two and three times a day and he has lots of responsibility."

Her own responsibilities have included acting as host at more than 590 events at the Vice Presidential residence and attending at least 715 others, a good many of them at the White House.

On the subject of clothes, she said that although she was interested in them, they were not a major concern. "I spend time and effort but no one thinks of me as well-dressed," she said. "It takes a lot of strain off you."

The Bushes spend perhaps two nights a week at home, when they are not traveling, and both take work upstairs with them after dinner. She works on the third floor, he on the second and, she said, "We leave the doors open and yell."

Her morning routine includes an hour of exercise. She later goes over her letters (many of which ask for recipes), plans and schedules and keeps abreast of her principal interest, wiping out illiteracy.

"Really the worst problem we have in this country is illiteracy," she said. "It's not only humiliating but costly."

She was a "cheerleader," rather than an expert, she said. She said she believed that teachers were overworked, underpaid and underpraised and she agreed with the President that criteria should be set by local boards rather than the Federal Government.

She believed, too, she said, that "every single American citizen should have to speak and understand English—otherwise they will become second-class citizens." This did not, she hastened to add, preclude learning Spanish.

What would she do upon returning to private life? Her dream, she said, is to spend six months in Texas and six at their home in Maine, where her five children and four grandchildren could visit. "It will take me about a day and a half to get used to it," she said with a laugh.

UNDERWRITERS LABORATORIES CELEBRATE 90TH YEAR

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, I join with all Illinoisans in saluting Underwriters Laboratories Inc., on the occasion of its 90th anniversary.

A pioneer in product testing, the UL label on a product has become the definitive symbol of safety for the American public. UL testing of products used in the home, as well as in business and industry, has protected the lives of millions of Americans.

A world leader in product safety, UL was established in 1894 to help reduce or prevent bodily injury, loss of life and property damage. This independent, not-for-profit corporation has maintained these goals through wars, recessions, changing Government administrations and consumer needs, and rapid technological advances.

If UL's founder and first president, William H. Merrill, had not had the foresight to create UL in 1884, it would be necessary for us to do so now.

DAVID P. RANSBURG—ILLINOIS SMALL BUSINESS PERSON OF THE YEAR

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, 2 weeks from today the friends, colleagues, and associates of Mr. David P. Ransburg are going to gather at the Hotel Pere Marquette in Peoria, IL, to honor his designation as the "Illinois Small Business Person of the Year." Unfortunately, a commitment I have in Chicago that same evening will preclude my being able to attend. However, I did want to join with those who are able to be in Peoria that evening in paying tribute to a remarkably able, professional, and intelligent businessman. This is a great honor, not only for Dave and his family, but for the entire Peoria business community, as well.

I first came to know Dave Ransburg shortly after his move to Illinois in the early 1970's. He struck me almost immediately as a man of tremendous entrepreneurial ability. Dave is willing to get involved, he is willing to share ideas and opinions, and he is obviously concerned about his community, his State, and his Nation. In addition to being a successful and capable businessman and community leader, Dave is also a fine husband and father. It has been my pleasure to spend time with Zan Ransburg and to see young David, Jr., and Emily grow. They share in the tribute being held in Peoria.

Dave Ransburg is a great believer in the free enterprise system. He believes, as I do, that we have built a worthy and often noble society and that we must sustain it. It is a cause worthy enough to warrant the expenditure of all of our energies. Dave Ransburg is doing more than his share and is justly being recognized for his endeavors.

Dave Ransburg's life and reputation are testimonies to this vision and his ability to make things happen. He believes that the future is a place we can create—that plans are our path and actions are our vehicle. Dave's mission is and has been to move his company, his Nation, and his world into a better future.

Dave is the president and chief executive officer of L. R. Nelson Corp., of Peoria, IL. He purchased the company in 1972 and has built it into one of the world's leading manufacturers of quality lawn and garden sprinklers, nozzles, couplings, and accessories. Nelson also sells a complete line of underground sprinkling equipment for residential and commercial applications. Nelson has manufacturing facilities in Princeville, Ill., and distribution facilities in Peoria, IL, Gainesville, FL, and Garden Grove, CA.

Dave serves as chairman of the Governor's Small Business Advisory Commission (Illinois), was founder and first president of the Independent Business Association of Illinois, and member of the Executive Committee of Illinois State Chamber of Commerce Small Business Council. He has served on seven boards of directors for community service organizations and works actively for State and national political candidates and causes.

He has a BS in engineering science from Purdue University and an MBA from Harvard University.

THE COMPANY HISTORY

The history of L.R. Nelson describes how Dave took a low growth, highly leveraged commodity business and led it in new directions. In his 11 years as the owner and chief executive officer he has achieved above average growth in the firm's basic industry—lawn and garden. He has successfully established it in a new area of that industry—landscape and turf—and he has built a strong export business. Through Dave's leadership Nelson has focused primarily on productivity of the organization using state-of-the-art technology in product development, manufacturing, systems, and marketing. This productivity has been made possible by Dave's strong regard for and belief in the people who work for him.

INVESTMENT PHILOSOPHY

Nelson actively invests in projects which will strengthen its product offerings and improve productivity.

This philosophy has served the company well. Under Dave's leadership Nelson has more than doubled its sales per dollar of invested capital. He has provided the leadership and resources required to introduce more than 60 significant new products or product enhancements in 10 major product categories.

MARKETING AND DISTRIBUTION

Nelson sales department is organized into three divisions—lawn and garden, landscape and turf, and export. The U.S. divisions utilize 73 salesmen located nationally to serve all key market areas.

The lawn and garden division has almost tripled in volume and profits in the past 10 years and continues to be the largest segment of Nelson's business. Its compound growth rate of 18 percent far exceeds the industry average rate of approximately 4 percent.

A period of investment in the landscape and turf division was started by Dave soon after he purchased the company. Sales have grown approximately 30 percent each year while the industry CGR is only 10 percent.

The export division serves the Middle East, Europe, Australia, South Africa, and South America through commissioned representatives and headquarters staff.

Export sales began in 1977 and reached 6 percent of total sales in 1981. This market has remained relatively strong through the years.

PRODUCTS

Nelson markets products which provide convenient and controlled distribution of water. It works to provide customers with proprietary, high value, reliable products with unique features.

Products introduced since 1972, the year Dave purchased the company, now account for 72 percent of total sales. Dave has worked to create an environment that encourages creativity by expecting success but recognizing the right to fail.

When Dave acquired the company there were 10 active patents—all but 1 due to expire by 1980. To date, the corporation holds 18 patents and has 7 pending to issue by 1984.

TECHNOLOGY

New technology in product design has been coupled with new technology in manufacturing equipment, processes and systems.

The result has been more consistent quality, a greater capacity to respond to seasonal pressures, lower costs, lower inventory, and higher ROI.

In spite of major inventory reductions, Nelson has managed to increase its service level. At the end of fiscal 1983, the company had a 92-percent service level exceeding its own objective of 90 percent. Sales per employee, has increased more than 300 percent since Dave took over in 1972 while sales per employee in similar U.S. industries increased only 30 percent.

CUSTOMER SERVICE

Nelson is proud of its reputation for excellent customer service and reads with pride the approximately 400 "love letters" received each year from satisfied customers.

Nelson is also regarded by its suppliers as a firm committed to ethical business practices and a leader in establishing partnerships and long-term relationships. It hosts vendor seminars each year to improve communications and cooperation.

EMPLOYEES

L. R. Nelson's success can be attributed largerly to Dave's concern not only for the company, but for its people. He believes that a positive future can be created by productive, cooperative employees who plan, act, and grow together. He plays an active role in employee training and development; 70 percent of Nelson managers, supervisors, and technicians have been promoted to their current positions.

During the peak manufacturing months of January through March, Nelson employs approximately 310 people. These include 210 full-time employees, 80 salaried, and 130 hourly, plus 100 part-time workers.

PHILOSOPHY

Dave and his company have been successful over the years because they have built strong long-term relationships with employees, customers, and suppliers. Their philosophy simply stated is "Nelson People Care."

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a résumé of David P. Ransburg be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the résumé was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HARVARD WINS NATIONAL RUGBY TITLE

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, this past Sunday the Harvard College Men's Rugby Club won the National Collegiate Championship by defeating the University of Colorado by a score of 12 to 4 in the finals at Monterey, CA. On Saturday they had defeated the Pacific Coast Champions, California State University at Long Beach, 15 to 11. I am proud of Harvard's team, especially since my oldest brother Joe and I were both members of the Harvard Rugby Club.

This marks the first time Harvard has ever won the national championship and it has been a long time coming. Harvard Rugby, founded in 1872, is the oldest rugby club in America. It also is the first time in modern history that an eastern club has won the championship, and the Harvard victory breaks a string of four championships by the University of California at Berkeley.

I am proud to take this opportunity to commend these outstanding athletes for their achievement and I join with rugby fans from Cambridge, New England, and the entire United States in saluting them for their victory.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, because of the memorial ceremony for former President Harry Truman, neither the managers nor a number of other Senators are available to proceed with the pending business at this time. I would not wish to proceed without them, obviously. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that the time for the transaction of routine morning business be extended until 11 a.m. under the same terms and conditions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

SCANDAL AND THE SYNTHETIC FUELS CORPORATION

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, on April 27, it was announced that Victor M. Thompson, Jr., resigned his position as a member of the Board of Directors of the U.S. Synthetic Fuels Corporation. Mr. Thompson's resignation from the SFC Board of Directors came only 1 day after he resigned as SFC President, and left the Board without an operating quorum. According to press accounts, Mr. Thompson's resignation was prompted by a report by the SFC's ethics officer, which found that Mr. Thompson had violated SFC ethics policy.

When he was appointed to the SFC Board in 1981 by the President, Mr. Thompson was the chairman and chief executive officer of Utica Bankshares Corp. When the SFC Board elected Mr. Thompson as SFC president in early 1984, it had not been disclosed by Mr. Thompson that Utica Bankshares had been under investigation by the Securities and Exchange Commission since mid-1983 for allegedly overstating its profits and failing to report sizable loan losses.

It is also alleged that Mr. Thompson attempted to sell Utica bank stock to an investor who was also one of the sponsors of the Chaparrosa Ranch tar sands project, which had applied to the SFC for $400 million in loan and price guarantees. Despite this relationship, Mr. Thompson did not recuse himself from participation in SFC Board actions to advance that project through the Corporation's evaluation process.

Unfortunately, there is a postscript to this sordid story. Even though the Chairman of the SFC Board of Directors had been apprised of the allegation against Mr. Thompson, he went ahead and held a Board meeting on April 26. At that meeting it appears that Mr. Thompson participated in Board actions on projects before it.

This is only the latest in a series of scandalous revelations for which this administration has become renowned. It is not the first time that an important program has been crippled under this administration. This is not the first time an agency's credibility has been seriously undermined in this administration by the actions of high-level officials.

I am sure that many of my colleagues share my deep distress at the damage done to the Nation's synthetic fuels program by this latest scandal. I feel sure that many of my colleagues share my conviction that the Synthetic Fuels Corporation is as important today as when it was established by the Congress in 1980. Despite the short-term world oil situation, establishing a domestic synthetic fuels industry is still a key to the Nation's long-term energy security. The Synthetic Fuels Corporation should play a leading role in achieving that goal.

Decisive and immediate action is required by the President to clean up the mess at the SFC. The agency and its program are far too important to the future of this Nation to allow the current situation to continue. The President should act as quickly as possible to reestablish public confidence in the Synthetic Fuels Corporation. This can only be accomplished through new leadership on the Board of Directors. Therefore, the President should nominate a new Chairman of the Board as quickly as possible. The nominee should be of impeccable integrity, and should have broad experience and credentials in the energy industry. The President should make it clear that the new Chairman's first priority is to get the Nation's synthetic fuels program back on track.

We cannot allow another important agency to be crippled by scandal. We must not allow the legitimate and vital mission of the SFC to be jeopardized by individuals whose actions do not meet the highest standards of professionalism and integrity.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD two editorials relating to this matter.

There being no objection, the editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post, Apr. 29, 1984]

THE SYNFUELS FIASCO

The affairs of the unfortunate Synthetic Fuels Corporation have gone from bad to ludicrous. Now its president, Victor M. Thompson, Jr., has resigned in response to allegations of improprieties. That leaves it once again in a state of paralysis, since its board of directors no longer has a quorum. It lacked a quorum through most of the Reagan administration's first year in office and, to no one's surprise, has never picked up much momentum.

Shortly before Mr. Thompson's resignation, the board voted on two major projects with the bare minimum of four votes legally required. Another of those votes was cast by Mr. Thompson's predecessor, Victor A. Schroeder, who had resigned last summer as president—although not a director—in an earlier dispute over ethics. A third vote was that of the board's chairman, Edward E. Noble, an associate of both Mr. Thompson and Mr. Schroeder for some years, who had helped pick first one and then the other for the corporation's presidency. The most useful service that Mr. Noble and Mr. Schroeder can offer the Synfuels Corp. at this point is to follow Mr. Thompson's example and resign, allowing the White House a free hand in reconstituting the board.

The ultimate responsibility for the state of the Synfuels Corp. belongs, inevitably, to the White House. All of these people were appointed by Mr. Reagan and it is up to Mr. Reagan to bring a different kind of direction to the agency.

The Synfuels Corp. was established after the 1979 oil crisis to develop systems for producing synthetics on an industrial scale as insurance against further disruptions in foreign oil supplies. So far it has accomplished very little. But its purpose remains as valid today, and as relevant to national security, as it was five years ago.

The Reagan administration is spending very large amounts of money to provide arms for the military forces, but it has never shown much interest in the closely related question of energy security. The administration is currently cutting the rate of filling the strategic petroleum reserve, although slack oil markets and last year's drop in oil prices make it a highly opportune time to proceed rapidly. Similarly, the administration has given very little attention to synthetic fuels or to the agency that is supposed to be developing a national capacity to produce them. There is a pattern here that reaches well beyond the internal troubles of one obscure agency and its successive president's conduct.

[From the Philadelphia Inquirer, May 7, 1984]

SYNFUELS' SYNTHETIC LEADERS

Twice now within a year the Synthetic Fuels Corp., created by Congress in 1980 to build a base for lessening U.S. dependence on foreign oil, has been thrown for a loop by a cloudy resignation of its president.

With only two months on the job, Victor M. Thompson, Jr. quit April 26 after an internal report found that he had violated ethical standards by failing to disclose that an Oklahoma bank he formerly headed was being investigated by the Securities and Exchange Commission. Mr. Thompson said he would remain on the corporation's board of directors, but the following day had the good sense to resign from the board, too. His predecessor in the $135,000-a-year post, Victor A. Schroeder, a former Atlanta real estate developer, resigned last August amid charges that he mismanaged the agency, but he has remained on the board of directors.

Thus the Synfuels Corp.'s condition goes from bad to worse. In three years of management by Reagan administration appointees it has made little progress toward its original goal, which was to spur commercial production of substitutes for natural gas or oil from oil shale, coal and tar sands.

Entrepreneurial interest in synthetic fuel has fallen in recent years because development involves risky, high-cost technologies, because oil prices have plummeted, and for other complex reasons. But the allegations of improprieties and mismanagement have unduly hobbled the agency. Board chairman Edward E. Noble, who was instrumental in selecting Mr. Thompson and Mr. Schroeder, served on President Reagan's transition team and in that capacity had urged that Synfuels Corp. be terminated.

Congress has become impatient with the agency's performance to the point that bills to suspend its authority to commit federal funds are gaining support in both the House and the Senate. Nevertheless, Synfuel Corp.'s mission is an important part of the nation's effort to achieve energy independence and remains as vital today as it was when the agency was created in response to the 1979 nationwide shortage of gasoline.

Mr. Noble and Mr. Schroeder would do the nation a distinct favor by quitting the board, and President Reagan has a clear responsibility to nominate new directors who are sound on ethics, strong on effective management and committed to furthering development of synthetic fuel.

HARRY E. DUGAN

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, Harry E. Dugan has been chosen as the West Virginia Small Business Person of the Year. Mr. Dugan is the founder of Dugan Enterprises, Inc., which now includes three retail grocery stores in the eastern panhandle of West Virginia. I take particular pleasure in Mr. Dugan's selection because of my own experiences in the same line of business. I know, firsthand, the long hours and hard work that a retail grocery business requires if it is to be successful.

We in the Senate are often reminded of the importance of small business to our economic progress. Small business has created almost all of the additional employment that we have achieved over the last 3 years, and Mr. Dugan has played his part. He opened his first store in Berkeley Springs, WV, in 1970. Since then, Dugan Enterprises has opened two other stores, one in Romney and another in Hedgesville, WV. Last year, the business grossed $5 million and employed 60 people. I congratulate Mr. Dugan on his success and the recognition he has deservedly received.

Despite the significance of small businesses to our overall economy—they represent 98 percent of 11 million businesses in the United States and produce over 40 percent of our gross national product—despite the importance of small business to our Nation's employment problems—small business accounts for over one-half of the country's business employment—despite these things, the current administration has generally ignored small business problems. During the recent recession many of them went bankrupt and many of those that survived still face problems.

A year ago, the National Federation of Independent Business (NFIB) received almost 5,000 responses to a questionnaire sent to the membership asking owners of small businesses to rank the seriousness of the problems facing them. Interest rates were judged the most severe of 72 possible problems. Over 26 percent of all respondents termed interest rates a critical problem, the most extreme rating in the questionnaire. What has this administration done about this problem most critical to small business? It has set in place a combination of fiscal and monetary policies that have given us the highest real rate of interest in memory. No. 3 on the list of small business problems is the cost of natural gas, gasoline, and fuel oil. What has the administration done? It has asked for deregulation of natural gas. No. 4 is the cost of telephone service, and this administration's FCC sought a plan that would have added surcharges to already high telephone costs.

In "Jobs for the Future," a program Senate Democrats proposed last fall and upon which we will soon submit enabling legislation, we proposed a number of aids to small business. Part of our program would support the transfer of training technology from the Department of Defense to the small business sector, thereby addressing a serious problem of small manufacturing concerns. We would also fund State development agencies that typically finance new small business firms. Our programs for innovation, education, and training would also be supportive of small business.

Last year, I said that Democrats had begun a serious effort to review and reform our small business programs. We are continuing that effort.

ISRAEL'S 36TH ANNIVERSARY

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, on May 7, the State of Israel celebrated its 36th anniversary as a modern-day, sovereign nation. I want to take this opportunity to extend to the people of Israel my congratulations for achieving this milestone as the only democratic state in the Middle East.

With the exception of NATO, there has not been a more enduring relationship in the post-World War II era. than the one between the United States and Israel. For 36 years, the maintenance of the security, territorial integrity, and independence of Israel has been one of the pillars of U.S. foreign policy. It must continue to be so.

Why do I say this? The desire of Jews to return to what is to them their rightful homeland was first expressed during the Babylonian exile and became a universal Jewish theme after the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans in 70 A.D., and the diaspora that followed.

The establishment of the modern-day State of Israel was facilitated by the horrors of the Holocaust perpetrated upon the Jewish people by Nazi Germany. That was reason enough to allow the Jews of the world to reestablish their own homeland. But that is only part of the reason for insuring the security of that homeland.

Israel is a functioning, robust democracy in a world plagued by totalitarian and authoritarian dictatorships.

Israel, through the amazing creativity and energy of her people, has turned deserts into gardens.

Israel, through the entrepreneurial and technical innovativeness of her people, is a land of impressive technological and industrial achievement.

Israel, through the toughness, ingenuity, and perseverance of her people, has built one of the most effective defense capabilities in the world.

Israel, a stable and vibrant democracy, is the one reliable ally we have in the Middle East.

Yes; modern-day Israel is a nation of remarkable attributes, strengths, and accomplishments. We share so many common values and concerns. That is why the relationship between our two countries has been strong and unwavering for the past 36 years, and will continue to be so in the future.

As the people of Israel celebrate their 36th anniversary, I want to salute them for the impressive achievements they have attained in such a short period of time.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll. The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MATTINGLY). Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, it is clear, I think, that we are not going to be able to get anything done on the pending question, which is the Chiles amendment, until after the regular Tuesday recess, which begins at 12 o'clock noon.

The reason for that is, of course, that the memorial for former President Harry Truman was conducted this morning in the Hall of the House of Representatives, which took away some of our Members. Another reason, I suppose, is that we already have a unanimous-consent agreement that we will vote on the Chiles amendment at 3 p.m.

I have done my best to check around and see if anyone wishes to talk about the Chiles amendment or anything else. I extended morning business until 11 a.m. It is now past that.

It seems to me the best thing to do is to face reality and to simply acknowledge that nothing is going to happen until 2 p.m., which is understandable. And may I say that the minority leader is aware of this and has no objection, I believe.

RECESS UNTIL 2 P.M.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, in view of these circumstances, I ask unanimous consent that instead of recessing at 12 noon today, as we usually do on Tuesday, the Senate now stand in recess until the hour of 2 p.m. today.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 11:29 a.m., recessed until 2 p.m.; whereupon, the Senate reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer (Mr. EAST).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina suggests the absence of a quorum.

The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Morning business is closed.

MISCELLANEOUS TARIFF, TRADE, AND CUSTOMS MATTERS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the unfinished business.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 2163) to amend the Federal Boat Safety Act of 1971, and for other purposes.

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill.

Pending:

(1) Baker amendment No. 3027, to further reduce deficits by including reconciliations and appropriations caps for defense and nondefense discretionary spending for fiscal years 1985, 1986, and 1987.

AMENDMENT NO. 3044

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. DOMENICI. Is there any time allotted between the proponents and opponents?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time is not divided, no.

Mr. DOMENICI. I do not desire to take a lot of time, Mr. President, but so that I will be able to properly account for the time, let me yield myself 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is yielded 5 minutes.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I rise in opposition to the amendment the distinguished Senator from Florida has pending. I think it is fair and proper to call it a Democratic amendment. If it is not that, my good friend from Florida can tell us that it is not.

I think it has been the subject of a number of discussions on that side of the aisle, and I also think that a number of Senators, who heretofore have never voted to do away with indexing of the Tax Code, are apparently prepared to do so, now in a party line vote.

I do not make this statement because I wonder why these Senators have changed their minds, or whether they were right the first time or the second time, but it does appear to me that everyone should know that that seems to be the situation.

Basically, this proposal by my good friend from Florida would, indeed, change the tax indexation for the people of this country. It would do so by modifying tax indexation for calendar years 1985 and 1986, modifying it in a substantial manner, a significant manner. The distinguished Senator can explain in more detail what exemptions or exceptions he has in mind with reference to tax indexation, but I remind the Senate that basically this or something similar to it has been voted on a number of times now as part of various packages.

Second, we worked very hard together to come up with some language on the appropriated accounts of our country which would send the message that we are serious about budget restraint. In principle we have used caps in budget resolutions. We have also used the concept of caps in the reconciliation process and we have from time to time used the enforcement mechanisms in the Budget Act itself for aggregate spending levels.

But basically the Senator from New Mexico believes that the proposal submitted by Senator BAKER in behalf of the leadership and supported by the President for the first time has a very significant enforcement mechanism that should send the message that we are rather serious about trying to keep our fiscal house in order with respect to the appropriated accounts. The cap language includes an actual budget authority cap, setting for each of the next 3 years a cumulative amount we can spend as a nation for appropriated nonentitlement accounts. This is a dollar number. The Baker amendment language includes enforcement that clearly says if and when we breach that cumulative total a point of order will lie against the bill on the floor of the Senate. Hopefully, if it becomes law, this language would apply in both bodies.

The cap in the current amendment is a key provision. It says that there will be no growth this year in the appropriated domestic accounts except appropriated entitlement. However, everyone should know that these programs are not frozen at the lowest possible level. We are assuming supplementals that should be passed are going to be passed before we put that cap on.

Do not forget that all the appropriated discretionary accounts are within the jurisdiction of the Appropriations Committee so that, for example, if they save money in housing, they could increase spending in another area and still remain within the aggregate cap. But if the total is breached, a point of order would lie and every Member of this institution will know that they are going to vote to set aside a point of order in order to spend more money than was agreed to in a substantive law of the land. A rather good approach, in this Senator's opinion, to making some sense out of where we are going in 1985 and for 2 years thereafter.

The reason I took some time to explain this is that, I do not believe it has been explained in any detail, and because I have not had to do so until this point.

One might say, let us do away with the caps because they are not going to become law this year. I do not know about that. They might. But the point is that this amendment would say that we do not want to establish a sense of discipline on ourselves and we do not want to interfere with the Appropriations Committee. We are just going to make it nice and easy and say it is the sense of the Senate that we should not breach an aggregate cap figure. I do not say this because I do not think the sense-of-the-Senate language is any good at all. It has some merit.

I say it only in comparison with an enforceable situation that is in the amendment that the Senator from Florida wishes to amend. I really think they are as different as night and day. The kinds of problems we have in trying to keep things under control surely are not going to be met by setting some caps and then saying it is the sense of this institution that that is what we should do.

So, I think everybody should know that there is a patent difference between the two proposals. They are the same on all appropriated accounts for domestic as they are for the military expenditures of the country, albeit the caps on the defense are growing and the caps on domestic are frozen next fiscal year and grow at 5 percent in each of the two following years. All Senators can find the numbers in the amendment, and we can attempt to describe some of the assumptions for the various accounts assumed within the aggregate caps.

The distinguished Senator from Florida does something on the appropriated accounts that I should mention. The amendment that is pending will add about 2-percent growth for the year 1985 to the appropriated accounts.

Remember, the leadership uses a freeze next year. Interestingly enough, the leadership amendment then says 5 percent increase in 1986 and 5 percent increase in 1987. But do not forget that it also makes them binding—the freeze, 5, 5, and the point of order I have just described.

The amendment we are going to vote on says let us add 2 percent this year and that will take care of some of the concerns people have, and maybe we will get more money in some of these programs. But in the outyears, it is 2 and 2, which is less than the leadership wants—less, but not enforceably less.

So, it seems to me that with this amendment we are talking about save now and spend later on the appropriated accounts. It might be said here—or a "Dear Colleague" letter might say—that on appropriated accounts, this is a pretty tight budget, too, because we only grow at 2 percent in the outyears, 1986 and 1987. But do not forget, that is a nice target with the sense of the Senate that we will do it. The leadership amendment, if it is adopted and becomes law, will have some binding language to make it subject to a point of order, if and when it is breached.

I could talk about some other changes. There clearly are some significant reductions in the leadership proposal with reference to defense. I should like to address those, if the distinguished Senator from Texas does not care to do so; and if he is not here, I will do that.

For now, let me say that the defense for 1985 in budget authority in the Chiles substitute is reduced by about $8.2 billion, and nondefense is added to by $2.7 billion, for a net saving, all of which is attributable to defense cuts, of $5.5 billion in the first year. I have done the same for all 3 years, and there is a $46.5 billion savings that would come about.

Again, there is no cap.

The changes are basically getting rid of the mandatory caps and adding 2 years of indexation deferral on the tax side.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida is recognized.

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, my good friend from New Mexico has spoken about some of the distinguished features between the leadership plan and the amendment now proposed by the Senator from Florida. He has identified the amendment of the Senator from Florida as the "Democratic plan."

I say to the Senator from New Mexico that I hope it is. It is hard to say whether we will get everybody on this side to vote for it, but I am certainly trying. I hope that before the vote is over, it will be identified as the "Senate's plan," because I find a lot of people on the side of the Senator from New Mexico want to vote for it. I hope that today their consciences will allow them to vote for it, and overcome the frustration triggered by the strong partisan loyalties pulling them to not vote for it.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHILES. I yield.

Mr. DOMENICI. If it is not yet your plan, I surely do not want to be a party to making it such. So, I should like the Senator to know that I am certainly unsure about that.

Mr. CHILES. I say it is my plan. I hope it is the plan of all the others. I have no objection to being the parent of this plan. I am not ashamed of it at all.

The Senator from New Mexico has talked about indexing as something repudiated many times before in the Senate.

We had a vote earlier on an indexing plan that originated on the Senator's side of the aisle, and some seven or so Republicans voted for that plan. I did not know that they were to be totally repudiated because they voted for that plan. A number of Democrats supported the plan for indexing, but I know of no vote that has ever been taken on an indexing plan similar to the one proposed by the Senator from Florida.

We are saying that two-thirds of the indexing would be allowed to stand, including one-third that covers those at the zero bracket, those people at the very bottom end of the economic ladder, so that they would not have to pay higher taxes simply by virtue of inflation.

Also, that portion of indexing that deals with personal exemptions would be allowed to go into effect.

So, we are talking about affecting one-third of indexing and affecting that part for 2 years. The reason is simply that I do not know how much of a favor we are doing people in granting them indexing, because we are doing it all out of borrowed money. We seem to have been saying to people, "We are going to give you this great indexing, but we are going to borrow money from the Treasury to do it."

Well, my plan would modify that, and, I think, allow us to get the deficit down.

The most interesting argument that I heard from the Senator from New Mexico, though, was that his plan has these binding caps and that they are historic. They are supposedly intended to prevent the "runaway Appropriation Committee" that cannot be trusted from violating the budget resolution. Consequently, the argument is that we have to make these caps binding.

Mr. President, if we survey the Appropriation Committee over the last several years, I think we find that it has been responsible. If we look at the spending for last year, we see that the Appropriation Committee stayed under the amount in the budget resolution for defense and under the amount proposed in the budget resolution for the domestic accounts.

So what is the fuss about some alleged necessity for binding caps? Well, I find it interesting, Mr. President, that the leadership program calls for defense at 7 percent while the Appropriation Committee last year had defense growing at a rate of 3½ percent. Talk about a difference. It is a considerable difference. The leadership plan is raising defense. But, at the same time, the leadership plan says we are capping defense because we want to protect it from the Appropriations Committee.

Now who needs to be protected, Mr. President? It seems to me these caps have to be there, in part, because of the rose garden deal. To get the blessings of the President, to get the blessings of Mr. Weinberger, and to get the blessings of others who want the higher number for defense, we had to raise the defense number very high—7 percent. But at the same time we consoled ourselves by saying:

> The Appropriations Committee will save us. They will not spend all of that money on defense. But, wait a moment, we have to make sure they do not spend it somewhere else.

So, Mr. President, I would say to you, I think those caps had to be there. I think the conscience of the Senator from New Mexico and others worked on them. We cannot put all this money in defense only to risk spending it somewhere else. We can be a little irresponsible, but not that irresponsible. So we better cap defense and we will cap the other programs, too, and then at least the money cannot be transferred. So then if we put more than we think we should put in defense—and it is certainly more at 7 percent than the distinguished Senator from New Mexico felt was necessary when we talk about what his plan was going to be for defense—well, we will protect ourselves and put in the cap.

Mr. President, if somebody is going to vote against my plan because of the nonbinding caps, I believe that argument is a Trojan horse. The Appropriation Committees have not spent more. If you want to worry about not having the caps, look at the plan of the Senator from Florida, because we reduce the numbers.

Mr. President, finally, there is an interesting difference we have not talked about. Really, what are we about here? I think the bottom line is how we are going to reduce the deficit. And I think the difference between the leadership plan or the Rose Garden plan and the plan of the Senator from Florida comes clear on the bottom line. One, the Rose Garden leadership plan, reduces the deficits about $89 billion. The other one, the Chiles alternative, reduces the deficits $150 billion. If Senators are searching for the best reason on which to base their vote, I think they better look at the bottom line, Mr. President. Do you want to vote for something that will reduce the deficits $89 billion and that is all? Then vote against the Chiles plan, because it goes further than that. It reduces the deficits $150 billion.

Do you want to vote for a plan that has deficits going from $180 billion to $204 billion in 1987, growing every year? Then vote against the Chiles plan, because it has deficits going the other way. It has deficits actually declining to $168 billion. That kind of comparison gives you a good guideline to make up your mind.

If you want to vote for a 7-percent defense number, vote against the Chiles plan, because it contends that defense is too high at 7 percent. It says 4-percent real growth on top of inflation, on top of the growth we have already had, is sufficient.

The domestic discretionary numbers come out about equal. They are a wash. You can decide if you want to have a total freeze, if you think a total freeze is realistic. If you think you can freeze all the domestic accounts 1 year, then vote against the Chiles plan. If you think the Appropriation Committees are not going to be able to do that, and are not going to freeze veterans disability payments, are not going to freeze WIC and childhood nutrition programs, but that we should still impose the same restraint, then you might want to look at the Chiles plan. What we have determined is that it is unrealistic to think that you are going to freeze everything in 1 year. So over 3 years my plan makes the restraint. It comes up with the same amount of dollars, but does it over a 3-year timespan.

Mr. President, I think those are some of the basic differences between the plans.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, might I first say to my friend from Florida—I think he already knows this without my saying it here in the RECORD publicly—that I have the greatest respect for him. I did not intend, in anything I said, to cast aspersions on his fiscal policy or his approach to what is best, nor did I intentionally misstate anything.

Let me summarize the choice as I see it. I think it is a very simple proposition. The Senator is correct that if the entire package, as he suggested, became law and if the economic assumptions were as he suggests during the next 3 years, the deficits would decline as he has indicated.

But I think it is also obvious that there are only two policies that go beyond the leadership amendment to achieve this result larger defense cuts and bigger tax increases. And I do not raise this issue because I am trying to detract from the Senator's plan nor would I say that under no circumstance, at no time, should we ever look at anything like this. I am merely trying to summarize the difference. The difference, in essence, is cutting defense more than the leadership plan and increasing taxes substantially more than the $48 billion already as contained in the leadership plan.

Having said that, let me suggest that the language pertaining to the caps was intended to be understandable, and enforceable and was also intended to make sure that the appropriated levels for defense and for nondefense were clean and separable. This language is not intended to imply that the domestic appropriated accounts have not done their share, but rather to try to put a package together that was clearly balanced. Even with this language, we still have deficits that are too large. This language assures that the package shares the burden: a third taxes and about a third defense and about a third of all of the other programs of Government.

There is not much debate here in this body that we could get more out of entitlements this year. If that is not a possibility, then you have to reduce other nondefense Government programs. The cap language in the leadership amendment is an attempt to do just that, to get just a little bit more out of the nondefense appropriated accounts—about $13 billion over 3 years.

That seems realistic to this Senator. Even the plan that the good Senator from Florida proposes does not attempt to reduce entitlements beyond the levels in the leadership package. This is why the cap language, essentially freezing the level of appropriated programs, is when you take the entitlement savings and the cap on nondefense appropriated programs together, you get about one-third of the savings in the total package. Then the other part of the cap language achieves the savings in the appropriated defense programs. And this is another third of the savings.

That is the reasoning behind the caps. That is why they are important because the symmetry is based both on size and on certainty. Entitlements that are changed save money over the years. The cap, if enforced each year, will also save money over several years, and we will not have the uncertainty in the outyears that is normally attendant to appropriated accounts.

Having said that, I want to take a moment to talk about what the deficit might look like in 1987. Frankly, it is pretty tough to say. I do not want to imply that things are rosy. No. Only that it is just pretty tough to predict what the 1987 and 1988 deficits are going to be.

Frankly, had there been more time to have the Budget Committee consider the current economic situation, I think we would have voted to change the economic assumptions significantly—not because the early CBO and OMB ones are wrong, but because we now have better information. The economic assumptions that yield a deficit trend line going up instead of down after the leadership package is adopted, are based on economic information that is 3½ to 4 months out of date.

I refer the Members of the Senate to the views that the Senator from New Mexico has put in the first concurrent resolution on the budget for 1985. They are not directly relevant to this bill because the resolution will follow this bill. However, on pages 117, 118, 119, and 120 of the first concurrent resolution report, Calendar No. 779, is a discussion of this Senator's views on the economy and the effects that this changed economic outlook would have on the budget. This discussion in no way reflects committee decision, but just what the chairman of the committee, the Senator now speaking to the Senate, would have asked the committee to do by way of changing the economic assumptions. If these alternative economics had been used to estimate the budget effects at the leadership amendment this deficit in the leadership package including the interest savings is on a trend line downward.

The deficit in the leadership plan would decline to about $164 billion in the year 1987.

I ask unanimous consent that pages 117, 118, 119, and 120 and the tables that are spread thereon be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the additional views were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ADDITIONAL VIEWS OF CHAIRMAN PETE V. DOMENICI

I support the Committee's recommended budget resolution as a pragmatic and reassuring first step toward attacking looming Federal deficits. The Committee's ability to report a budget resolution with a deficit downpayment of $144 billion during the fiscal year 1984–87 period is a responsible act. It is even more courageous given this is an election year.

In retrospect, the budget resolutions of the past 3 years were developed using optimistic economic assumptions. This year, the reverse seems true. The underlying economic assumptions used to develop the budget are too pessimistic in my view. This was confirmed by the administration's new economic forecast released on the second day of the Committee's markup, and other recent economic indicators reflecting increased economic growth and lower unemployment.

If the Committee had up-dated the economic forecast upon which it based its numbers for the reality of higher growth and lower unemployment, the deficits remaining after the Committee's deficit reduction efforts would be: $183.1 billion in FY 1984, $166.2 billion in FY 1985, $163.0 billion in FY 1986, and $164.0 billion in FY 1987. I believe that the latter set of numbers more accurately reflects reality and that either during Senate floor action or during conference with the House of Representatives an appropriate update for economic reality should take place. The following table 1 shows Senate Budget Committee staff calculations of a more realistic economic forecast and compares it to the CBO's January estimates. Table 2 shows an alternative baseline deficit using the more current economic assumptions. Table 3 shows the deficit numbers resulting from these economic assumptions and the interest rate reductions resulting from the resolution's budget recommendations.

Finally, I believe that we must make budget recommendations this year recognizing three important facts: (1) that any budget must be one that Congress will enforce and implement; (2) that much of the action that Congress will take to reduce deficits is underway in the House and Senate; and (3) that more fundamental changes may have to occur during the rest of the 1980s in the spending and revenue policies of the Nation. Each of these three factors deserve further amplification.

First, I am acutely aware of the problem of passing a budget resolution that simply is out of touch with congressional intent. The Committee's FY 1984 budget recommendations were eventually rejected by the Senate and replaced with a budget recommendation that proved unrealistic and unenforceable. Indeed, even with action now underway in the House and Senate, the reconciliation instructions and spending and tax policies contained in that budget will not be met. Such lack of realism in the budget this year, I believe, would corrode the budget process. So, above all, the Committee's recommended budget attempts to be pragmatic and realistic. The recommendations are not perfect, but they are good.

Second, the Committee's deliberations were conducted as the House of Representatives passed a major revenue-raising measure, its own budget recommendations, and a reconciliation instruction on spending. In addition, the full Senate began consideration of a revenue-raising measure that almost exactly parallels the Committee's recommendations, after rejecting by large margins efforts to increase the amount of new revenues.

Third, I believe that more needs to be done in reforming the tax and spending policies of the Nation. A large number of the members of the Committee also strongly believe that even larger deficit-reduction actions must be taken by Congress soon. Many of the members wanted such action this year, but recognized that such action seems unlikely given congressional activity to date. I fully believe that further deficit-reduction measures must be part of any congressional agenda starting early next year.

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida.

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, I thank my distinguished chairman and friend from New Mexico for being solicitous about my concern for the plan. He is right. We are very good friends. We will fight a lot here today. But we always remind each other of our friendship, and never forget it. I think highly of him and the work that he has done on the Budget Committee.

I hestitate to make any remarks against his plan. He has, afterall, just had a birthday. I know that is going to make him not older, but wiser, and I trust it will help him see the light. But having said that, I do have a few remarks.

I listened to the symmetry argument of one-third, one-third, one-third. It is interesting because I think it brings to mind the symmetry of a three-legged stool. The distinguished President is aware that milk stools often had three legs, and those legs gave a person a certain amount of balance.

But I hope nobody tries to do the milking from the stool in the leadership plan. I think they would find that, unless they sit forward, they might have a problem because there are only two legs on that particular stool, not three. One leg comes from raising some revenue, and they do that. Another leg comes from making some cuts in the domestic spending program, and they do that. The third leg of that stool is supposed to be defense. That, I am afraid, is the imaginary leg.

If you look at what this Appropriations Committee—maligned to some extent by binding caps in the leadership plan—did last year on defense, you will see they allowed it to grow 3.5 percent. If you look at what the Budget Committee did which was 5 percent, that is the baseline that we use in every other program. But in defense the leadership decided to use the President's wish list, which is what he would like to have. So that third leg is a wish. If you want to sit on a wish, that is fine with me. Then you can try to construct a complete stool out of a wish. But when you are talking about the budget, wishes are not enough.

Mr. President, neither of the pending plans reduces the deficits enough. I do not think anybody can say they do. I do not say getting our deficits down to $168 billion in 1987 is enough. It is not. It is hard work. It is terrible. The only thing that is worse is deficits of $204 billion, and the direction in which those deficits are going. They are going higher, rather than lower under the leadership plan. If you change the economics, if the leadership plan gets a little better, and ours gets better still, we would be getting the deficits down more. If you want to compare the plans under those circumstances, the deficits do not matter.

But, Mr. President, we have all talked about why we needed to make this down payment, and why we needed to do something this year. We said the reason we need to do it this year is because we are afraid, if we do not do it, interest rates would go up.

Mr. President, we do not have to worry anymore about whether interest rates are going up. They have already gone up. If you look at the business and finance section of today's paper, Treasury bills have risen for the second week in a row. The next thing you will see is the VA raising the loan limit ceiling to 13.5 percent. Mr. President, the VA is controlled by this administration. They do not have to raise that rate unless they decide it is necessary. Mr. President, they knew they had to raise that rate.

We are talking about guaranteeing Federal rates. The Federal Government guarantees that mortgage. Yet, it has gone up to 13.5 percent. What is the long-term loan rate? We have a figure on that, or the fixed rate of interest; 14.11 percent, Mr. President, up from 13.8 in the last 6 months. Within 6 months we have gone from 13.8 to 14.11 How long can the housing industry go on? Mr. President, there is your new economic forecast. It is better evidence than the predictions of any economic. The market is saying it is frightened by the evidence.

Look a little further in today's paper, and you find this: "Trade Deficit Hits a Record $25.8 Billion in One Quarter."

So, Mr. President, we have now gone over $100 billion a year in trade deficits. Why? Because our interest rates are so high. We have priced ourselves out of the international market. It means a 30-percent premium for someone trying to buy American goods. Mr. President, to top that off, the prime interest rate went from 12 to 12.5 percent. This is all today. All that happened just when we are getting ready to vote on the garden plan. Just when we are worried about whether interest rates will climb, we find they are already several steps up the ladder.

What the Members of this body have to concern themselves about in around 10 minutes is whether they want to vote for deficits that are causing these rates to go up. Henry Kaufman said interest rates are going to go up appreciably by the end of this year. The market fell off 11 points after his statement. This already happened.

Henry Kaufman usually forecasts something in the future. What he ended up doing was telling us today's headlines.

Mr. President, in a way what we are going to be voting on shortly is how well we can read the paper. Do we want to break off this recovery, or will we make a statement about the rose garden plan? It has been described by some economists as chicken feed. Are we going to have a little more chicken feed? Or are we going to do something more effective about these deficits.

Mr. DOMENICI addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico is recognized.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, my good friend, the Senator from Florida, raised an issue here that I will take a couple of minutes to talk about.

He says interest rates have been going up and they went up a little bit again today. I guess by implication he is saying if we pass the Chiles plan they will stop going up, but if we pass the leadership plan they will keep going up.

Frankly, in all honesty, I do not think anybody knows that. I have been through this so many times I just do not believe that to be the case.

Let me give you a number. If you believe that to reduce the deficit of the United States by $33 billion in 1985—$33 billion in 1985—instead of reducing it by $26 billion in 1985, if you believe that such a small difference is going to cause dramatic change and alleviate the interest problem we face, then vote for that plan.

This is not the total picture because the Senator will say, "Well, what about 1987?"

I remind everyone here that the principal plans that have been offered on the floor of the Senate to date are a response to the leading economists of the country and the Federal Reserve Chairman, and the others who have said that what we need is very large budget savings in the first year. Several of these plans have almost twice the fiscal year 1985 savings as the leadership plan and, yet, they were soundly defeated.

By comparison we have very, very insignificant difference between $33 billion in savings in the Chiles plan compared to $26 billion in the leadership plan.

I just do not think that in an economy approaching $3.6 trillion this is a meaningful difference. This economy grew 8.3 percent in real terms in the last quarter. We have just experienced a quarter with one of the highest number of housing starts in any quarter in the last decade. Inflation is supposed to be going through the roof, but it has not even broken the 5-percent mark of late. I just do not think we are going to fix the interest rate problem with $7 billion extra deficit cut in 1985.

On the other hand, one might say, "Look out there in 1987. The leadership plan is $66 billion and the plan of the Senator from Florida is $100 billion. That is pretty good."

Most of it is indexing on the Tax Code. I really do not believe elimination of indexing is going to fix the interest rate problem. As a matter of fact, it appears to me that we have to ask ourselves the question, is eliminating the only insurance that the average American has against higher taxes really going to solve the problem? I do not think so.

Defense? Defense is part of it. I submit we have not heard the last word on that. We will try to establish our budget position here on the floor of the Senate and then again in the next 5 or 6 months.

But, frankly, I do not believe this is going to have that much impact on the financial marketplace. In fact, I am beginning to wonder whether those who control the money supply in this country really know what kind of a budget package will have an effect. Frankly, I am willing to take the risk that a $150 billion deficit reduction package that is doable and achievable is far preferable to a larger package which cannot be enacted into law.

I will say more on that subject as we move through the debate on the leadership package.

For now, let me close by by saying what I said a while ago.

If the Senate feels comfortable in getting rid of 80 percent of benefits of tax indexing, if my colleagues really feel that is really going to help the economy solve the problems that are discussed here, in spite of this buoyant and growing economy then vote to get rid of indexing.

If you want to get all the rest of the money you are attempting to save out of the defense of the country, then vote for this plan and reduce the defense budget yet further. I assume you would do that for one of two reasons: that you think defense is spending too much or that you think that further reduction will have some kind of a noble, dramatic effect on interest rates and thus keep the American economy going.

Frankly, I do not think either cause is a just cause. Therefore, I will choose not to vote for this when it come to a vote shortly in about 2 minutes.

I yield the floor.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, huge Federal Government budget deficits—by far the largest in the history of our Nation—pose a serious threat to the economy of the United States and to the well-being and prosperity of all Americans.

It is essential that we in the Congress act to reduce significantly the size of the budget deficits, and to get our fiscal policy on a path leading to a balanced budget.

I was seriously concerned in 1979 and 1980 when the budget deficits rose to a level of $60 billion. But the budget deficits now of nearly $200 billion, and increasing as far into the future as economists can see, are nothing short of alarming.

In my view these burgeoning deficits are the direct and predictable result of faulty economic policies followed during the past 3 years. In keeping with administration policies, military spending has been vastly increased, while Government revenues have been slashed by excessive tax cuts that have benefited primarily the well off. The combination of the defense spending increases and the tax cuts has more than offset the very significant cuts that have been made in nondefense Federal Government spending, resulting in growing deficits.

We must reduce the deficits as quickly and as effectively as possible. In reducing the deficits, we cannot ignore the policy mistakes that have produced the deficits. In my view, to reduce deficits we must—

Slow significantly the runaway increases in defense spending;

Begin to restore some of the revenue lost through excessive tax cuts;

Restrain nondefense spending, but avoid placing an unfair burden on programs that already have suffered deep reductions;

Reduce extravagantly expensive agriculture support programs; and

In restoring revenues, try to improve the fairness of our tax system.

For all of these reasons I am supporting the Chiles-Democratic Caucus deficit-reduction proposal. This proposal will:

Reduce the deficits by $150 billion over 3 years, instead of the $89 billion reduction proposed by the administration.

Provide for 4-percent real growth in defense spending, instead of the 7-percent increase proposed by the administration.

Allow an inflation-adjustment increase in nondefense spending in each of the next 3 years, instead of allowing zero growth in 1985 as proposed by the administration.

Increase revenues by $81 billion over the next 3 years instead of the $48 billion proposed by the administration.

Provide for a fairer tax system by deferring indexing of income taxes for 2 years, while preserving inflation adjustments for the individual personal exemption and for the zero bracket amount.

In my view, this proposal makes a bigger, and fairer, reduction in the deficit than would the administration proposal and for that reason I support it.

Mr. President, the Senate this week has also considered other deficit-reduction proposals, including the proposal to simply freeze all spending at the 1984 levels for 1 year. Although that proposal was appealing in its simplicity, I voted against it because of two basic and serious flaws.

The freeze plan would have unfairly penalized social security recipients by eliminating their cost-of-living adjustment (COLA) scheduled for January 1, 1985. Only last year we restructured that social security program to make it solvent and self-supporting.

Cutting social security benefits now does nothing to cut the real budget deficit—it merely increases the surplus in the social security trust fund, and hides the real deficit in other Government accounts. And it is unfair.

In addition, the freeze proposal did nothing significant to restore Federal Government revenues, and that must be a major part of any fair and effective deficit-reduction proposal. In short, the freeze would have frozen in place many of the inequities that exist in our fiscal and spending policies.

With some reluctance, I also voted against the amendment proposed by the distinguished Senator from South Carolina, Senator HOLLINGS, primarily because it, too, would have eliminated the social security COLA through a 1-year freeze.

The amendment before us—the Chiles-Democratic Caucus proposal—is the most effective and fairest deficit reduction proposal presented to the Senate.

It will reduce the deficit by $150 billion over 3 years, slow the increase in military spending, avoid additional punishing reductions in essential nondefense spending, and preserve the rightful benefits of retirees.

Reducing the awesome Federal deficits is essential. Doing it the right way is important. I believe this amendment provides the most effective, and the fairest, deficit reduction.

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a brief description of the Chiles deficit-reduction plan. I also ask unanimous consent that tabular material and a brief explanation of the tax-indexing adjustment included in that plan also appear in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE DEMOCRATIC ALTERNATIVE

In sharp contrast to the White House plan, the Democratic alternative looks at the budget to see what is really there, and determines it will simply have to be less.

It begins with an accurate financial statement, the estimates of CBO. Like anyone who's ever sat down to balance a check book, we know you've got to use official numbers. If you don't, if you use your own wishful-thinking numbers, you can fool yourself into thinking you're better off than you really are.

This plan levels with the Nation about what must be done about the deficits.

Over the next four years, the plan, according to CBO estimates, will actually cut the deficit by a true $150 billion as opposed to the net $89 billion CBO says is the best to be expected from the White House plan. In fact, using accounting of the White House, the Democratic plan would slice the deficit by $200 billion.

Under the Democratic plan, the deficits would decline to $174 billion in 1985, and to $169 billion by 1987. As a percentage of the gross national product, the deficit would decline from 5.2 percent of GNP to 3.6 percent. Those figures are still too high. But they are real steps in the right direction, not steps backward prescribed under the White House package.

The Democratic defense plan permits a 4 percent real growth per year. That amounts to a $27 billion increase over the 1984 appropriations level. It will protect combat readiness accounts and require savings on weapons procurement. This is a far more sensible approach, and just the reverse of the White House plan. The average real growth for defense spending could amount to 6.8 percent a year, measured from 1981 through 1987.

The Democratic plan allows partial inflation adjustment in each year from domestic discretionary appropriations. It also protects programs like WIC, education of the disadvantaged, and job training where a flat freeze would reduce the number of persons served, while protecting actual program operations where a freeze would mean cutting the number of people required to provide the services in programs like veteran hospitals, law enforcement and scientific research.

It would require some restraint in lower priority programs to live within the aggregate appropriations cap. Yet the three-year total outlay savings is roughly the same as provided in the White House package. If some programs can be reduced from current levels, even more than the $2.7 billion we add would be available to cover increases for essential programs if that becomes necessary.

On revenues, the Democratic plan would cut spending $119 billion to raise $81 billion in revenues. That's about $3 in spending for every $2 in revenues. The Democratic plan would leave the tax burden as a percent of income well below the level the President said was acceptable last year when he set it at 20.3 percent of GNP. Under the Democratic plan the level would be 19.4 percent. It would delay indexing for two years, while protecting low and moderate income families from a higher tax burden.

In summary, the Democratic plan is based on the kind of realistic estimates designed to win credibility in the financial markets. Under the Democratic plan, the deficits actually fall, rather than measurably rise after the fashion of the White House plan.

The Democratic plan makes some clear policy changes on military spending, it would require some procurement decisions. But if those decisions are not made—and the White House plan makes none of them—the General Accounting Office tells us we would have to increase spending by 31 percent to pay the real bill implicit in the current buildup.

On revenues, delaying indexing will make it very clear that Congress is serious enough and determined enough to cut the deficit in a way that would win the confidence of the financial markets and on domestic programs the Democratic plan makes no promises that cannot be kept. There is no sleight of hand here. Rather it would protect the needy, and pay for that protection.

EXPLANATION OF PARTIAL DELAY OF INDEXING PROPOSAL IN THE CHILES ALTERNATIVE DEFICIT REDUCTION PLAN

The Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981 provided for the indexing of income brackets, including the zero bracket amount, and the personal exemptions. Current tax law allows each individual taxpayer a flat deduction amount called the zero-bracket amount (ZBA). This amount replaces the "standard deduction", for each taxpayer status, which was in effect up to 1976. It is the maximum deduction allowable for taxpayers who do not itemize deductions, and is built into the tax rate schedules issued to the public by the IRS.

The personal exemption is the amount deducted from adjusted gross income, for each dependent. This amount is $100 per dependent, and is deductible whether or not one itemizes deductions.

For low income persons who do not itemize deductions the sum of the zero-bracket amount and the allowable personal exemptions determine the maximum amount of income for which there is zero tax liability.

For example, the ZBA is $2,300 for a single return and $3,400 for a joint return. A single individual under age 65 can have income of $3,300 ($2,300 plus $1,000) without paying taxes while a family of four can have income of $7,400 ($3,400 plus $4,000) without paying taxes.

The current proposal guarantees that these individuals will continue to pay no taxes as long as their income grows by less than the inflation adjustment allowed under indexing. The current proposal delays indexing for two years on all income tax brackets except for the zero-bracket amount, and retains indexing of personal exemption.

All taxpayers benefit from indexing of the zero-bracket amount and the personal exemption. But 95 percent of the benefit from indexing of zero-bracket amount is received by income groups below $40,000. For those with itemized deductions, indexing the ZBA reduces effective tax rates at any given income level by shifting tax brackets upward.

● Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I will vote in support of the Chiles budget alternative, not because I agree with every element in it, but because it is clearly better than the budget plan put forth by the Republican leadership with the support of the President. First and foremost, the Chiles plan will result in a deficit that is $30 billion lower in fiscal year 1987 than the Republican leadership plan. But beyond mere numbers is the fact that the Republican leadership plan will result in a deficit which is larger in fiscal year 1987 than the deficit in 1985. So, although the Chiles plan may not make enough progress in deficit reduction, it does make some progress. It does offer some hope that we will be able to reverse the rising tide in interest rates and prevent the economic recovery from stalling out.

I am concerned that the Chiles plan contains a 2-year partial delay in indexing the Tax Code. Although it would allow indexing of the personal exemption and the zero bracket amount to go into effect on schedule, the Chiles plan would defer the indexing of the tax brackets for 2 years. This is difficult for me to accept in light of my belief that indexing represents wise and honest tax policy. Only because the partial deferral of indexing is part of a budget reduction program which cuts spending as much as it increases revenues, and only because the Republican alternative is a budget plan which increases the deficit and increases defense spending, can I vote for the Chiles package with its partial indexing provision. The Chiles package would be much more acceptable if it allowed for an effective minimum tax so that we would not have the situation which we have now that thousands of people are making hundreds of thousands of dollars and not paying any taxes. And tens of thousands of profitable corporations pay no taxes because of legal use of tax loopholes and tax shelters.●

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, there was a soap opera entitled "As the World Turns." I am reminded of that today on the floor, "As the world turns." Is it not strange, Mr. President, that here we find the leadership plan, a plan endorsed by the majority party—the Rose Garden plan—proposing less deficit reduction while the "old-spending-Democrats" are opposed, and want more deficit reduction? The Democrats are not supposed to be concerned about the economy, but here we are, fighting for lower deficits than those on the opposite side of the aisle.

We cannot say for sure that either one of these plans would help keep interest rates from going up. But I think we understand that the one that makes the deficits lower certainly has the better chance to restrain interest rates.

We are talking about differences in the deficits of between $89 billion on one hand and $150 billion on the other.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair wishes to advise the distinguished Senator that the time has expired. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Florida and I each have 2 additional minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas is recognized.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I certainly commend the distinguished Senator from Florida for the intent of this amendment, deficit reduction.

The prime interest rate went up to 12.5 percent today. We should have passed this package 2 weeks ago. But all this amendment does is defer indexing, raise taxes for the working people in this country, and cut defense spending. There are not any other cuts in this package, to my knowledge, no effort to further reduce nondefense spending.

It does not take any imagination to raise taxes on the working people and cut more out of defense. We are talking about all these courageous actions. I hope we can defeat all these amendments that are going to be coming up; and pass the leadership package, whatever we finally end up with. We should go to conference and try to complete action by the Memorial Day recess, which starts on May 24.

I know everyone wants to reduce the deficit, and they all have some painless way to do it. But it is not painless if you want to raise taxes on the working people. All the Chiles amendment does is defer indexing for 2 years, giving the people who make between $30,000 and $50,000 a big tax increase. I do not really believe that is the way to reduce deficit.

In my view we ought to cut spending. We do that to some extent in the leadership package and so does this proposal, but in the final analysis it is going to take a bipartisan effort to get meaningful spending restraint. Certainly the Senator from Florida should be commended for his willingness to try to bring something together. When it is all over, I hope we are in agreement, Democrats and Republicans, that we ought to act and act quickly. I thank my colleagues. They have a tough job on the Budget Committee.

Mr. DOMENICI. I thank the Senator.

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from Kansas for his kind remarks. If you look at the overall plan on which we are about to vote, it will reduce spending for defense and domestic appropriations $20 billion more than the leadership plan.

Mr. President, the historian Livy wrote a history about a Spanish town threatened with invasion by Hannibal. He said:

> The crowds had been gathering outside of the town Senate until it had become something like a general assembly of the population. The leaders of the Senate left their places, collected all the precious metal from the public buildings and private houses that they could find, flung it all into the fire and then they lept in behind it.

Mr. President, I hope the Senate, in trying to do something about the deficit, is not going to collect all of the precious metal and jewels of the city and throw it into the fire. We will not have to leap in behind it if we do not do something about these deficits, Mr. President. I think the people will throw us into that fire. So I hope we will take a step now to appreciably reduce these deficits and give us a better chance to sustain the recovery.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DENTON). Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Ohio (Mr. GLENN) and the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. HOLLINGS) are necessarily absent.

The result was announced—yeas 49, nays 49, as follows:

So Mr. CHILES' amendment (No. 3044) was rejected.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the previous amendment failed.

Mr. DOMENICI. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I understand that, consistent with some previous negotiations, the Senator from New Jersey, Senator BRADLEY, is prepared to offer an amendment but also is prepared to enter into a time agreement of 1 hour, equally divided. Am I correct?

Mr. BRADLEY. That is correct.

Mr. DOMENICI. I do not know if there is any objection to that. The distinguished Senator from Florida has no objection and the Senator from New Mexico has none.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, may I say that we would have to run a line on this side.

Mr. DOMENICI. I understand then there will be no time agreement but, in short order, we may discuss it again. Is that correct?

Mr. BYRD. Yes.

Mr. DOMENICI. I thank the distinguished Senator from West Virginia.

AMENDMENT NO. 3048

(Purpose: To modify certain Medicare provisions, and to adjust the appropriations caps)

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

> The Senator from New Jersey (Mr. BRADLEY) proposes an amendment numbered 3048.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of the matter proposed to be inserted, add the following:

PART B PREMIUM

SEC. . (a) Notwithstanding the provisions of section 901 of this Act, the amendments made by such section 901 shall not become effective, and the provisions of the Social Security Act shall remain as though such section 901 had not been enacted.

(b) Section 1839(e) of the Social Security Act is amended to read as follows:

"(e)(1) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (a), the monthly premium for each individual enrolled under this part for each month after December 1983 and prior to January 1987 shall be an amount equal to 50 percent of the monthly actuarial rate for enrollees age 65 and over, as determined under subsection (a)(1) and applicable to such month.

"(2) Any increases in premium amounts taking effect prior to January 1987 by reason of paragraph (1) shall be taken into account for purposes of determining increases thereafter under subsection (a)(3).".

(c) Section 1839 of such Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(f)(1) If no cost-of-living increase becomes effective under section 215(i) in December of any year, the monthly premium of each individual enrolled under this part for the succeeding year shall (except as otherwise provided in subsection (b)) be the same as the monthly premium (disregarding subsection (b)) of the individual for such December.

"(2) If paragraph (1) does not apply to the monthly premiums for a year, if an individual is entitled to monthly benefits under section 202 or 223 for November and for December in that preceding year, and if the monthly premium for that December and for the following January is deducted from those benefits under section 1840(a)(1), the monthly premium for that individual for that January and for each of the succeeding 11 months for which he is entitled to benefits under section 202 or 223 shall (except as otherwise provided in subsection (b)) be the greater of—

"(A) the monthly premium amount determined under subsection (a)(2) or (e) for that January reduced by the amount (if any) necessary to make the monthly benefits under section 202 or 223 for the January after the deduction of the monthly premium (disregarding subsection (b)) for that January at least equal to the monthly benefits under section 202 or 223 for the preceding November after the deduction of the premium (disregarding subsection (b)) for that individual for that November, or

"(B) the monthly premium (disregarding subsection (b)) for that individual for that December.

For purposes of this subsection, retroactive adjustments or payments and deductions on account of work shall not be taken into account in determining the monthly benefits to which an individual is entitled under section 202 or 223.".

PHYSICIAN FEES

SEC. . (a) Section 1842(b) of the Social Security Act (as amended by section 904 of this Act) is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(13)(A) During the 24-month period beginning July 1, 1984, the Secretary shall monitor physicians in order to determine—

"(i) The proportion of physicians, by specialty and geographic area of practice, whose claims under this part are not pursuant to an assignment under paragraph (3)(ii), grouped as follows: fewer than 25 percent, 25 percent to 49 percent, 50 percent to 74 percent, 75 percent to 89 percent, 90 percent to 99 percent, and 100 percent, of the claims submitted by such physicians. or for such classifications of physicians as the Secretary may deem to be more informative;

"(ii) the average difference between the actual charges and the reasonable charges recognized for purposes of this part, for each classification of physicians referred to in clause (i); and

"(iii) any changes in the per capita volume and mix of services provided to beneficiaries under this part by each classification of physician referred to in clause (i).

"(B) Information on changes in the elements monitored pursuant to subparagraph (A) shall be provided to Congress every sixth month beginning with January 1985 and ending with January 1987.".

(b)(1) The report which the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall submit to Congress on January 1, 1987, shall include recommendations in sufficient detail to serve as the basis for legislative action which Congress can take to assure that any burden of effectively constraining the growth of costs in the medicare part B program, which Congress intends to be borne by providers and physicians, is not transferred (in whole or in part) so as to become an additional burden on part B beneficiaries in the form of increased out-of-pocket costs, reduced services, or reduced access to needed physician care.

(2) Such report shall also include analyses of other methods of payment which might be utilized under part B to constrain the costs of the part B program, including prospective payment systems such as fee schedules (both global and per service), capitation payments, case management, and the use of preferred provider organizations.

(c) In addition to any funds otherwise provided for fiscal years 1985, 1986, and 1987 for payments to carriers under agreements entered into under section 1842 of the Social Security Act, there are transferred from the Federal Supplementary Medical Insurance Fund such additional amounts for payments to such carriers under such agreements as may be necessary to conduct monitoring of physicians under section 1842(b)(13) of the Social Security Act.

PART B DEDUCTIBLE

SEC. . Notwithstanding the provisions of section 916 of this Act, the amendments made by such section 916 shall not become effective, and the provisions of the Social Security Act shall remain as though such section 916 had not been enacted.

In section ——, relating to limitation of the aggregate total budget authority for national defense and non-defense discretionary activities for the fiscal years 1985, 1986, and 1987, add at the end thereof the following new subsection:

(f)(1) Notwithstanding subsection (a), or any other provision of this Act or of any of the amendments made by this Act, it shall not be in order to consider any measure making appropriations in the Senate or the House of Representatives, if the enactment of such bill or resolution, as recommended by the respective committee on appropriations, would cause the aggregate total budget authority for function 050, National Defense, to exceed $293,600,000,000 in fiscal year 1985, $327,700,000,000 in fiscal year 1986, or $365,800,000,000 in fiscal year 1987.

(2) Notwithstanding subsection (b), or any other provision of this Act or of any of the amendments made by this Act, it shall not be in order to consider any measure making appropriations in the Senate or the House of Representatives, if the enactment of such bill or resolution, as recommended by the respective committee on appropriations, would cause the aggregate total budget authority for non-defense discretionary activities to exceed $141,400,000,000 in fiscal year 1985, $148,000,000,000 in fiscal year 1986, or $155,600,000,000 in fiscal year 1987.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to this deficit reduction package that will restore some balance between defense and nondefense spending. My amendment differs from the proposal offered by the majority leader in at least four respects——

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, may we have order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi is correct. The Senator from New Jersey is entitled to be heard. Please remove conversations from the floor.

The Chair recognizes, again, the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, as I said, my amendment differs from the proposal offered by the majority leader in four respects. First, defense spending is reduced from 7 percent real growth to 5 percent real growth, a reduction in budget authority of $5.4 billion in 1985.

Second, two-thirds of the $5.4 billion to be cut from defense is added to the budget freeze for high priority nondefense discretionary spending, including education, medical research, and environment programs. This $3.6 billion restoration represents overall roughly a 3-percent nominal increase for nondefense discretionary programs.

Third, a restoration of $600 million of the $9 billion in medicare changes that are included in this deficit reduction package.

Fourth, the amendment reduces the Federal deficit by nearly $3 billion more than the proposal offered by the majority leader and the chairman of the Budget Committee.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a table be printed in the RECORD at this point comparing my amendment to the proposal offered by the majority leader.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BRADLEY AMENDMENT COMPARED TO LEADERSHIP PLAN

[In billions of dollars]

	1985		1986		1987
	BA	O	BA	O	BA	O
Reduction in defense spending	−5.4	−2.2	−6.0	−4.1	−6.2	−5.2
Increase in nondefense by approximately 3 percent (⅔ of defense reduction)	+3.6	+1.7	+3.8	+3.0	+4.2	+3.5

	1985		1986		1987
	BA	O	BA	O	BA	O
Restoration of about 7 percent of the medicare proposals	+.05	+.04	+.1	+.1	+.5	+.5
Further reduction in deficit	−1.7	−.5	−2.1	−1.0	−1.5	−1.2

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, as I stated, the first element of my package is a reduction in the defense buildup from 7 percent real growth to 5 percent. Previous votes this week have demonstrated that Members of the Senate known to be among the strongest supporters of defense spending can support levels of expenditures below that of the Domenici-Baker budget. Indeed, many have supported budget packages that constrain growth in defense spending to rates below what I am now proposing.

The rationale for a 5-percent real increase in defense spending rests on two important points: efficiency in military planning and public support.

Like any organization attempting to plan capital expenditures for years into the future, the Defense Department could make best use of its resources if it can count on a steady, relatively predictable flow of funds. Battleships, tanks, and planes must be modified and eventually replaced. The schedules for this refurbishment may not coincide with the feast or famine moods of the President and Congress. In the post-Vietnam era, our investment in weapons, military construction, and defense research fell dramatically. This was not because tanks did not need replacement or bases did not need refurbishing. No, it was because the mood of the budgetmakers was unsympathetic to the needs of national defense.

The backlog of maintenance, the aging of weapons, the pause in research and—most damaging to our national security—the drop in morale of our soldiers and sailors due to declines in pay and support were the result of these years of famine for defense. Indeed, these years of declining military investment increased the need for and size of the subsequent buildup that began in 1977.

But by the same token, Mr. President, the 13-percent real increase proposed by this administration is just as unhealthy. Years of feast inevitably lead to less well-thought-out strategies and expenditures. Given sudden large budget increases, service secretaries have proposed their own pet programs that, with more deliberate planning horizons, could have been more carefully thought-out and estimated.

What is needed, Mr. President, in contrast to feast or famine, is a sustained and sustainable defense budget, a budget that military planners can have some confidence in, that will allow them to rationally and carefully plan for our national defense. In last year's budget resolution we adopted a 5-percent increase for fiscal year 1985. By actually providing that increase this year we add credibility to our attempts at consistency. A stronger defense will result at a lower long-term cost.

The second reason that 5 percent is important is that the American people are likely to support it. The importance of this support cannot be over emphasized. The generals and admirals know this lesson well: Public support is the single most important component of our national defense. I have been concerned, however, that this administration is undermining this resolve. Support for the necessary rebuilding of our defenses was strong when this administration took office; but 3 years of inordinate high requests and rigidly clung to demands has begun to erode that support. A steady, determined rebuilding of our national defense is required to maintain our defense capability and resolve. The risk for the military and thus for the Nation is that more years of famine could follow these years of plenty.

So, Mr. President, a 5-percent increase in defense spending will encourage a more efficient and a more careful thoughtout defense buildup and at the same time, maintain the support of the American people for a strong national defense. The Reagan defense budget jeopardizes the single most important national security asset that this country possesses: The resolve of American people.

Mr. President, the second component of this plan is to increase spending by $3.6 billion in 1985 for high priority nondefense discretionary spending, including education, health research and environment programs. This represents an increase roughly of 3 percent for overall nondefense discretionary spending over the freeze level in the Baker proposal. A freeze on all nondefense discretionary spending will undermine our efforts to meet pressing national priorities.

Why do we need additional funds for high priority social programs? Because some programs have simply been cut back too deeply. Total outlays for human resource programs relative to prior law have been reduced by about $100 billion over the fiscal year 1982–85 period. In percentage terms, the largest cuts are in employment and training programs, which have been reduced by almost 60 percent. In just the past 3 years, outlays have been reduced over 20 percent for education and social service programs, and needs-based income security programs have been cut about 10 percent. Many of the budget cuts made since 1981 affect lower income families. About 40 percent of the budget cuts affect families with incomes under $10,000 and another 30 percent are from households with incomes between $10,000 and $20,000. We need to make some targeted restorations.

My amendment assumes an increase of $1.3 billion for education. The need for more education aid is compelling. According to recent statistics, the Federal share of funding for elementary and secondary education this year dropped to 6.4 percent, a 20-year low. Federal funding for elementary and secondary education programs in 1980 was $200 million higher than it will be in 1985 if a freeze is adopted. The recent reports on education have emphasized that education is indeed a critical national priority. We need to provide additional funding to strengthen the ongoing programs and we need to provide aid for new education initiatives including aid to help the talented and gifted, aid to help high school students in need of upgrading their basic skills and initial funding for the science and math bill to improve the teaching of science and math in our schools.

According to a recent College Board study, the amount of financial aid available to college students, after two decades of growth, has dropped by $2 billion in the 1980's. During this same time period, the median undergraduate tuition has increased by about a third. A freeze in funding for student aid simply provides too little aid; it robs too many young people of a chance to succeed. We need a modest increase to reverse this erosion in funding.

In the area of environmental protection, I believe it imperative to restore the ability of the Environmental Protection Agency to protect the public health and natural resources of this Nation. My proposal would enable us to fund EPA at the level requested by Mr. Ruckelshaus, the EPA Administrator, and the level recommended by the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee. This is approximately $0.6 billion over the freeze level. My proposal would enable us to fund the Superfund at its fully authorized level next year. Without such funding Superfund sites across the country that are now scheduled for cleanup next year will not be cleaned up. One hundred sites in New Jersey await Superfund action; hundreds more have not even been designated. We must clean those sites up without further delay.

Mr. President, the environmental protection—and hazardous waste cleanup in particular—must be placed in the highest category of domestic spending priorities.

We also need increases in health research. The Nation's expenditure for health care tripled in one decade. In 1975, the burden of illness claimed 12 percent of the national GNP. That percentage may double by the year 2000 unless substantial gains are made in our ability to prevent and control diseases. We are on the edge of major developments in understanding of brain function, immunity, transplantation, gene mapping, infectious diseases, and yes, even cancer. Discoveries in these areas can save millions of dollars in costs of treatment and lost productivity, not to mention offering our citizens a better quality of life. We need to increase funding for these activities. A freeze of the NIH budget when we are clearly on the edge of major developments might save us money this year, but will cost us money in the future.

Mr. President, the third part of this amendment relates to medicare. In the past 5 years the medicare part A deductible has risen 123 percent. The part B coinsurance has increased 100 percent. Charge reductions from unassigned claims passed on to beneficiaries have increased 198 percent. Since medicare covers only 45 percent of the elderly's health care bill, even these reductions understate the elderly's rising health costs. The average elderly person is paying out of pocket as much for health today as when medicare began, about 15 percent of their income. Under current policy and trends, the average elderly person will be spending 19 percent of their income for health care by the year 2000.

Mr. President, I am firmly committed to reducing this intolerable deficit and have so voted. But we cannot ask the elderly to shoulder an unfair burden of the savings. This package contains almost $9 billion in modifications to medicare. Of this $9 billion, elderly beneficiaries are required to contribute a significant share of the savings. The medicare portion of this amendment is identical to an amendment I am cosponsoring with Senator BAUCUS that reduces the elderly's share of the burden by restoring $0.6 billion of the savings in the bill by, first, striking the proposed increase in the part B deductible; second, reducing the proposed part B premium increase in 1987, so the premium will only increase that year by the rate of general inflation instead of the higher rate of medical cost inflation; and third, requiring the Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services to monitor physician behavior and report periodically to Congress during the 2-year physician fee freeze period so we can examine whether additional costs are being shifted onto medicare beneficiaries.

This is a modest proposal that restores some balance to the medicare package.

In summary Mr. President, I believe that my budget package restores some balance between defense and nondefense spending. Further, this budget plan assumes nearly $3 billion in lower deficits than the majority leader's proposal. But I need to point out that neither this budget plan nor the budget plan proposed by the President and the majority leader is truly sufficient to restore stability to Federal budget policy. But my proposal is a step—a first step—toward a more rational policy.

The Congressional Budget Office recently estimated that Federal budget deficits are projected to climb from $200 billion a year to roughly $300 billion a year by the end of the decade. CBO projects that unless changes are made, by 1990 the interest payments that we make on the national debt may be larger than last year's entire defense budget.

If the same policies persist into the future, the Government will be competing with the private sector for limited quantities of capital and credit. In the 1970's the Government deficits consumed a little over a quarter of savings; if deficits continue without abatement, deficits will consume over three-quarters of savings over the 1983–86 period. This may very well be a recipe for rising interest rates, a strengthening dollar, decreased exports, and increased imports. We clearly cannot follow this course. Changes need to be made in Federal budget policy. Using the administration's estimates, my proposal reduces the deficits by $147 billion over the fiscal year 1985–87 period.

This amendment is, therefore, a step in the right direction. I urge my colleagues to support my amendment.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPECTER). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, this amendment is, in many ways, just another repeat of something we have voted on around here two or three times.

I am beginning to wonder how long it takes to put together a deficit reduction package. I am beginning to think that maybe some do not want a deficit reduction package unless it can be tailored to their own specific desires.

It would seem to me, with the prime increasing today to 12½ percent, and with a lot of concern about interest rates and what Congress is not doing, that we would try to move very quickly to put this package together and go to conference. We could send a signal to the American people that we do not suffer total paralysis—maybe 90 percent paralysis, but not total paralysis.

I sympathize with the managers of this bill, the chairman and ranking member of the Budget Committee. It may be that two or three all night sessions is one way to bring this thing to a close. Otherwise, as long as the staffs are awake we are going to have more amendments. The best way is to stay up all night, let the staffs go to sleep, and suddenly you find a reduction in the number of amendments. Everybody wants to put out another press release and make just one more shot at saving America. But since we have started, our record is not too good.

We completed about half the package 3 weeks ago. We have been voting on numbers ever since that time. Everybody has a new package to bring down the deficit and interest rates. That is commendable.

But there are certain parameters that I think we must deal with. Of course, if it is the will of the Senate to do otherwise, then, obviously, we will do otherwise. But it is one thing to talk about reducing spending, reduce it in the committee, and then come right back to the floor and take it away.

Now, we passed in our committee, by a vote of 20 to 0, a deficit reduction package of about $72 billion. That same package passed the Senate by a vote of 76 to 5. But now we are here faced with an amendment that contains a portion that deals with very minor changes in medicare. Yet we are told by the experts that if we do not deal with medicare we are going to have real problems in the late 1980's.

All we are trying to do amounts to just a little band-aid. Maybe someone will say, "You are not doing enough," but you have not seen anybody suggesting specific ways that we can do more.

This is an effort to pick away at what little we have done in the committee, even though it was approved unanimously in the committee.

This amendment would strike the provision which calls for indexing of the part B deductible; it would hold the part B premium at 25 percent of program costs for only 1 additional year; and finally, it would call for a monitoring of the reaction of physicians to the freeze on their fees.

I suggest to my colleagues, who insist on chipping away at all the savings on the Senate side, that there are no savings on the House side. If we are going to have any savings at all, you have to give us some flexibility when we go to conference. But if you keep pushing, pushing, and stripping out the savings on the Senate side, we can forget about any real savings. If we are going to end up with only taxes and defense spending cuts, I doubt that the President would swallow that package—and I would not suggest that he do so. I would suggest that I think the American people deserve more.

Maybe we have reached the point where it is too near the Democratic and Republican Conventions. Maybe we ought to adjourn, come back and deal with these sticky problems after the election; or after the conventions. Everybody is trying to prove they have a better idea than someone else and a better idea than the leadership. But it is important to note that the part B premiums have increased by less than 270 percent since 1970, while there has been an increase of 1,720 percent in the Government's share of the cost of the part B program, and an increase in overall part B program costs which exceeds 960 percent. The committee proposal was drafted very carefully. We had one proposal that was going to raise the part B premiums to 35 percent over the next 3 or 4 years. It passed our committee by a vote of 17 to 3. It was a bipartisan vote because a clear majority understands that we cannot help fooling the American people. We are not going to have a medicare program, if we listen to some people who want to take it away and not do anything. It seems to me that we are chipping away, trying to get another $500 to $600 million in what I call minimal spending reductions compared to some of the freeze amendments that have been offered. This is miniscule when it comes to affecting senior citizens, and an impact on senior citizens.

The amendment which we adopted in committee allows a balance between the general revenue and premium financing to continue to tilt toward increased Federal financing after 1986. Rather than a year-to-year fix, as happened before and is being proposed again, we should stand by the committee's proposal, which holds the Government subsidy of this program at the 75 percent forever. It used to be 50 percent. Then it went up to 82 percent. Now we are saying we ought to get it back to 75 percent.

We are not asking anybody to bear a lion's share of the program costs. We are looking at physicians, we are looking at hospital costs, and we are also looking at more costsharing.

The original Finance Committee proposal would be for 3 years only. The 1981 Reconciliation Act increased the part B deductible by 25 percent from $60 to $75. Prior to this amendment, the deductible remained at $60 since 1972 despite a more than 430-percent increase in total program benefit payments between 1972 and 1981. I suggest we are not doing anything that cannot be justified.

With respect to the provision which calls for monitoring of the reaction of the freeze on physicians fees, the Senator from Kansas has no objection to that proposal. If you want to offer that proposal, we will take that proposal, although we would want the opportunity to make some suggestions for changes in the language. The medicare amendments which are contained in the Finance Committee provisions represent an attempt on our part to spread the burden of deficit reduction over the largest possible population.

I am not going to address the other portions except to indicate that I hope the Senator from New Jersey might at least eliminate this portion of the amendment. We are willing to accept an amendment on the monitoring. That makes a great deal of sense. But let us not take away any power we have in conference to bargain with the House because they do not have any spending reduction to speak of in the House Ways and Means Committee. By trying to chip away, take away $588 million, you are in effect saying go ahead and give up another $200–$300 million in conference, and we end up with virtually no savings. If that is the will of the Senate, obviously we will abide by that. Again, I hope—and I am in total sympathy with the distinguished Senator from New Mexico and the Senator from Florida—if there is any real desire to complete this bill, that we do it.

Finally, I say we have to pass a debt ceiling extension before the 24th of May. I hope we figure out some way that the Senate Finance Committee and the House Ways and Means Committee can go to conference. It is obvious to this Senator that, with all the amendments pending, we could be on this bill this week, and maybe next week. If there is some way we can separate the Senate Finance Committee package, and add a debt ceiling increase which would take us up to next July 1, and permit us to go to conference starting next Monday, then I think we could accommodate the desires of the Budget Committee, the leadership, and the Appropriations Committee. We could probably report back to the Senate a completed conference action on the tax portion and the debt ceiling by the 20th or the 21st of May, and maybe complete action on that part of the package before the Memorial Day recess. That would take care of the revenues, and the Finance Committee savings. The President has already signed one bill for $7 billion in savings. He signed an agriculture bill for $3 million in savings.

That would total up to $10 billion and maybe $14 billion in the Finance Committee package, $24 billion in savings, $46 billion in revenue changes plus whatever you get from debt service, which would indicate before we leave for a week that we are on the road to $150 billion or more in deficit reduction.

I suggest to my colleagues from Florida and New Mexico, that if somehow you can work that out, it would be appreciated by members of the Senate Finance Committee and by members of the House Ways and Means Committee. It is our understanding that it may be a long time before—even if the leadership amendment were adopted—there would be agreement with the House Appropriations Committee on caps and how they might respond to caps. But in the meantime, I think the best thing to do would be to defeat all of these amendments hanging around here and go to conference that way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. First, Mr. President, let me say to my good friend, the chairman of the Finance Committee, that I have no disagreement with what he said. I hope in a couple of days we would be in the position to see our way clear for you to be able to go to conference with a package most of which would be in your jurisdiction. In any event, there are a number of committees involved in this package, and it certainly is partially budget, partially appropriations, partially armed services, and certainly substantially finance.

I wish the Senate could find its way clear to do this kind of package. If we put debt service on it, we would have accomplished a major feat for the entire year.

Having said that, I was absent unavoidably, and I did not get a chance to ask the Senator from New Jersey. Could we agree on a time certain in 5 or 6 minutes, if the Senator from New Mexico only has 2 minutes?

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the vote occur on the Bradley amendment at 5 minutes until 5.

Mr. BRADLEY. If the Senator will yield, I have no objection to your request. The last time you proposed that, I had no objection to it. I was told the minority leader was willing. We could have a vote without the need for a unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. DOMENICI. Let us not request a unanimous consent.

Mr. President, let me make two points. The distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee has given us adequate reason not to vote for this amendment because of the medicare provisions. We ought to certainly vote against it in terms of the medicare provisions. There will be many other medicare amendments offered here today, tomorrow, and the following day. But in any event, that is not the principal reason to be for or against this. It is obvious to the Senator from New Mexico. If that is not, let me say the rest is very simple. In my opinion, there is no justification to vote for it. Defense is reduced by $5.4 billion. We turn around, and add $3.6 billion to the domestic programs. It seems to me that even those in the U.S. Senate on both sides of the aisle who think defense is too high, that even though they feel that way, the compelling majority would not want to take $5.5 billion out of defense, then turn around, and put almost $4 billion back into domestic. That is not saving an awful lot. Obviously it is reducing defense, and obviously it is increasing domestic expenditures.

I do not think that is what the Senate wants to do. I could be wrong. We seem to be voting in all different patterns in the last 5 or 6 days. So, frankly, I am not sure what anybody wants to do. But this amendment does not seem to me to be the approach that moves us in the direction of significantly less deficits, which some want; less for defense, which some want; slightly more for domestic programs, which some want. It does not seem to be any of these things. Because of that, I would hope the Senate would not adopt it.

I move to table the amendment and I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BRADLEY. Will the Senator yield first?

Mr. DOMENICI. I withhold on my motion to table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, this amendment is an attempt to find a balance—something that we can agree on so that we can enact a deficit reduction package. It is true that my amendment reduces the defense appropriation from 7 to 5 percent real growth. The question is, does the Senate want to increase the defense budget by roughly 5 percent, rather than 7 percent? The amendment does take some of these savings and spends them on high priority non-defense programs, such as $1.3 billion for education, $600 million for environment programs and $600 million from what would otherwise be increased costs to senior citizens in medicare. And then to take a small but nonetheless significant step by reducing the deficit by an amount larger than the current pending budget plan offered by the majority leader and the Senator from New Mexico.

The amendment is this Senator's attempt to try to find some balance—to try to find some common ground upon which the Senate can agree. I hope the Senate will adopt it.

If the Senator from New Mexico is prepared to make his motion to table, I am prepared to vote.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I move to table the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey and ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New Mexico to lay on the table the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey.

The yeas and nays have been ordered and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. BAKER. I announce that the Senator from Florida (Mrs. HAWKINS), the Senator from Nevada (Mr. LAXALT), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. STEVENS), and the Senator from Virginia (Mr. WARNER) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Nevada (Mr. LAXALT) and the Senator from Virginia (Mr. WARNER) would each vote "Yea."

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Ohio (Mr. GLENN) and the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. HOLLINGS) are necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HECHT). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who desire to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 51, nays 43, as follows:

So the motion to lay on the table amendment No. 3048 was agreed to.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the motion to table was agreed to.

Mr. DOMENICI. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, according to the informal understanding between the managers of the bill, I believe that the next amendment is the Gorton amendment. It is my understanding, from conversations with Senator GORTON, that it may take 1½ hours or thereabout to complete the debate and reach a vote on this measure. I do anticipate that we will have a record vote on this measure tonight. Therefore, 7 or 7:30 p.m. would be my best estimate of the next and perhaps the last vote. Members should not depend on that. That is the best estimate I can make at this time.

While I have the floor, Mr. President, I inquire of the minority leader if he thinks there is some possibility that in order to put this thing in final form, we might be able—either tonight or tomorrow or at some other point—to get a list of amendments that might be offered on this subject and a unanimous-consent order that no other amendments will be in order. That is the same procedure we followed on the Finance Committee side, and it produced a result, even though it took until 5 o'clock in the morning.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, we on our side can run a line to see if we can learn what amendments remain, but I am sure we will have a problem so far as today is concerned, and I do not think I can speak optimistically with reference to tomorrow, but we will continue to check.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I appreciate the minority leader's remarks. I am doing the same on this side. I am compiling a list of amendments of which we know.

If the minority leader and I could meet sometime tomorrow, perhaps on the floor or elsewhere, we can compare notes.

It is the hope of the leadership on this side that we can identify the amendments and get an order that no other amendments would be in order. That would not set a time certain for disposition of this section of the bill.

Mr. BYRD. We will look at the matter on this side. As of now, I have my doubts that we could reach an agreement on the Baker amendment, which is reconciliation. We are talking about a reconciliation shell here. There are caps and various other things about it that concern us. Nevertheless, we will continue to study the situation, and I will talk with the majority leader whenever he wishes.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the minority leader.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, is the Senator from Washington ready to proceed?

Mr. GORTON. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington.

AMENDMENT NO. 3049

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, I have an amendment at the desk, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Washington (Mr. GORTON) proposes an amendment numbered 3049.

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

Beginning on page 19, line 1, strike all through the end of amendment 3027 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. . (a) It shall not be in order to consider any measure making appropriations in the Senate or House of Representatives, if the enactment of such bill or resolution, as recommended by the respective committee on appropriations, would cause the aggregate total budget authority for function 050, National Defense, to exceed $297,100,000,000 in fiscal year 1985, $328,600,000,000 in fiscal year 1986, or $366,800,000,000 in fiscal year 1987.

"(b) It shall not be in order to consider any measure making appropriations in the Senate or House of Representatives, if the enactment of such bill or resolution, as recommended by the respective committee on appropriations, would cause the aggregate total budget authority for non-defense discretionary activites to exceed $140,500,000,000 in fiscal year 1985, $144,200,000,000 in fiscal year 1986, or $151,400,000,000 in fiscal year 1987.

"(c) For the purposes of this section, budget authority shall be determined on the basis applicable for fiscal year 1984.

"(d) The provisions of subsection (a) or (b) of this section may be waived or suspended in the Senate by a majority vote of the Members voting, a quorum being present, or by unanimous consent of the Senate.

"(e) It is the sense of Congress that the unprecedented magnitude and persistence of current and projected Federal budget deficits must be addressed in a comprehensive strategy to moderate increases in defense spending while continuing the effective constraints on non-defense discretionary programs. To assure the success of such an initiative, the foregoing procedural restraints, in addition to the total aggregate spending limitations pursuant to the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, as amended, are necessary on budget authority both for defense and for non-defense discretionary programs for fiscal years 1985, 1986, and 1987."

COST OF LIVING ADJUSTMENT LIMITATIONS

SEC. . (a) Paragraph (3) of section (1)(f) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 is amended to read as follows:

"(3) COST-OF-LIVING ADJUSTMENT.—For purposes of paragraph (2) the cost-of-living adjustment for any calendar year is—

"(A) for calendar years 1985 through 1987, the percentage (if any) by which—

"(i) the CPI for the preceding calendar year, reduced by three percentage points, exceeds

"(ii) the CPI for the calendar year 1983, and

"(B) for calendar years after 1987, the percentage (if any) by which—

"(i) the CPI for the preceding calendar year, exceeds

"(ii) the CPI for the calendar year 1983."

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall be effective as of the date of enactment.

SEC. . (a)(1) Any increase in benefits which would occur by law under any of the provisions of law described in subsection (b) during the period beginning on October 1, 1984, and ending on September 30, 1987, on the basis of any increase in Consumer Price Index, shall be limited as though the relevant increase in Consumer Price Index was equal to the actual increase in such index minus three percentage points.

(2) The provisions of paragraph (1) shall apply only to the increases in benefit amounts, and shall not be applied in determining whether a threshold CPI increase has been met or in determining increases in amounts under other provisions of law which operate by reference to increases in such benefit amounts.

(3) Any increase in benefit amounts which would have occurred but for the provisions of paragraph (1) shall not be taken into account for purposes of determining benefit increases occurring after September 30, 1987.

(b) For purposes of this section the applicable provisions of law are the cost-of-living adjustments for—

(1) old age, survivors, and disability insurance benefits under section 215(i) of the Social Security Act (but the limitation under subsection (a) shall not apply to supplemental security income benefits under title XVI of such Act);

(2) armed services retirement and retainer pay under section 1401a of title 10, United States Code, retired pay and retainer pay of members and former members of the Coast Guard, and retired pay of commissioned officers of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration or the Public Health Service;

(3) civil service retirement benefits under section 8340 of title 5, United States Code, foreign service retirement benefits under section 826 of the Foreign Service Act of 1980, and Central Intelligence Agency retirement benefits under part J of the Central Intelligence Agency Retirement Act of 1964 for certain employees;

(4) Federal workers' compensation under section 8146a of title 5, United States Code;

(5) Comptroller General Annuities under section 777 of title 31, United States Code; and

(6) Cash Relief Payments under section 1245 (c) of the Panama Canal Act of 1979.

(c) Section 1817 of the Social Security Act (as amended by section 918 of this Act) is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(1) Within 60 days after the end of calendar year 1987, the Secretary of the Treasury shall transfer from the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Fund and the Federal Disability Insurance Trust Fund, into the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund, an amount equal to the amount which the Secretary of the Treasury determines to be the amount by which the total amount of benefit payments made from the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Trust Fund and the Federal Disability Insurance Trust Fund were reduced by reason of the limitation on cost-of-living increases required by subsection (b) of the section which enacted this subsection.".

SEC. . In the case of any cost-of-living adjustment which is subject to the provisions of section 301 of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1982, the percentage by which the annuity or retired or retainer pay is increased with respect to any increase occurring by law during the period beginning on January 1, 1985, and ending on December 31, 1988, shall be the percentage increase as determined after the application of such section 301, minus three percentage points.

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the names of the following Senators be added as cosponsors of the amendment: My distinguished colleague from Washington, (Mr. EVANS); both distinguished Senators from Oklahoma; the distinguished Senator from Arizona (Mr. DECONCINI); and the distinguished Senator from Missouri (Mr. DANFORTH).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, we are now engaged in the 5th week of debate of reduction of the huge budget deficits approaching or exceeding $200 billion a year for as far as the eye can see. A number of Members have become impatient over the length of this debate, but I should like to observe that I do not think it has been too expansive or too detailed, when compared with the importance of the issue with which we are dealing.

This opportunity, even in the face of a Presidential election less than 6 months away, is absolutely critical to the economic strength and vitality of the United States and of the American economy.

As a consequence, I think every Member of this body is deserving of congratulations for recognizing that the debate during this year, 1984, has not been over whether or not we need to take decisive steps to reduce budget deficits; not over whether or not there should be a downpayment; but simply over how great, how significant, that downpayment should be; and, of course, at the same time, over the pattern——

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, may we have order? The speaker is entitled to be heard.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. GORTON. I thank my friend, the distinguished senior Senator from Mississippi for his help in bringing the Senate to order.

Mr. President, I should like to go to say that, in addition to the debate over how much the downpayment for the next 3 years and this year should be, it is also over its distribution—its distribution among the defense budget, the expenses for entitlement programs, nondefense discretionary programs, and of course changes in our laws relating to revenues.

I regret to say, however, that the Nation and the Nation's money markets have already judged the effectiveness of the leadership proposal and have found it wanting. Since the leadership proposal was made as a result of an agreement between the President of the United States and the majority leadership of this body, we have seen several increases in rates of interest, both the prime rates and mortgage rates, that clearly indicate that what we have before us in this amendment is too little and too late to have the positive effects on the economy, on economic growth, on interest rates, and on jobs which is the desire of all of us in this body.

The reason for that failure is not difficult to determine. In the first place, the leadership proposal does not, in fact, by all of the economic theories on which we are operating, result in a decline in deficits in 3 fiscal years beginning in 1985 and ending in 1987. In fact, even assuming the passage of that leadership proposal in toto, 1987 deficits would still exceed those for 1985.

Second, it has been the message of the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, consistently delivered to numerous committees of both the Senate and the House of Representatives and the numerous individual Members, that in order to have a positive impact on interest rates we needed a downpayment which included an up-front reduction in the budget deficit, that is to say, a reduction in fiscal year 1985 of approximately $50 billion. The leadership proposal provides for barely half that.

Other leading and distinguished economists have joined in with a similar message, the message that to do nothing at all will be absolutely disastrous for the economy, the message at the same time that to do only so much as is proposed in the leadership package is to be inadequate in dealing with the demands for credits which are facing a relatively healthy economy here today.

Even though the leadership package is larger than many expected had any chance of passage at the beginning of this calendar year, I should emphasize, Mr. President, that it is not enough. It has been judged by the country to be not enough. It provides insufficient discipline in at least three of the four major areas which it covers.

It is with that background, Mr. President, that I introduced the amendment which is before you at the present time.

This amendment does not undercut the leadership proposal. It does not step backward significantly with respect to any of the value judgments which are included within that proposal. It does, on the other hand, build on it. It builds on it an additonal $85 billion in deficit reductions over the next 3 years, which makes the difference between increasing budget deficits during that period of time or decreasing budget deficits during that period of time.

It does so, I submit, Mr. President, in a way which is fair to all elements of the American population.

The first difference or change between the leadership proposal and this one is that this proposal caps cost-of-living adjustments in nonmeans-tested entitlement programs at 3 percent less than the increase in the Consumer Price Index for each of the next 3 years. Those programs are social security, railroad retirement, civil service and military retirement, including several small miscellaneous Federal retirement programs, such as those for the Foreign Service and the Central Intelligence Agency, together with Federal workers' compensation. No other programs would be affected by this cap. Specifically, veterans compensation programs, which are voted on each year, are not affected, nor is either supplemental security income or food stamps, the programs for which eligibility is created by poverty, by a means test.

Second, in order precisely to balance the proposal which will cut benefits for many millions of recipients of Federal benefits, not below their present level, but below what they will be if they are uncontrolled, this amendment caps personal income tax indexing at a level of 3 percent below the Consumer Price Index for the same 3 years.

I must hasten, Mr. President, to say in the presence of my distinguished colleague from Missouri that this is far from an original provision. This well-balanced proposal has been known for the course of the last year as the Danforth-Boren proposal, one which I found appealing a year ago and find at least equally appealing today, for two reasons: First, its effectiveness in lowering budget deficits and, second, its inherent fairness.

Third, this amendment also requires the Secretary of the Treasury, at the end of the 3-year period, to estimate the amount of savings which have accrued to the Old Age and Survivors Trust Fund as a result of the social security COLA cap and to transfer those savings into the medicare hospital insurance trust fund.

Fourth, this amendment reduces the defense function appropriations caps from the figures contained in the leadership proposal to figures representing the CBO baseline budget authority estimate.

This is particularly important, Mr. President. One of the frustrations of this Nation with the actions of this body is our apparent inability to make decisions for more than 1 year in advance.

This precise subject was debated last year, and after extensive debate both the budget resolution and the ultimate defense authorizations bills and defense appropriations bills, we charted a course of action at an increase in the budget for national defense of approximately 5 percent more than inflation over a 3-year period.

This amendment simply incorporates the agreement which this body and the House of Representatives and, for that matter, the President, by signing those bills, made last year. It increases and enhances the ability of the Department of Defense to plan for the future, rather than lurching from the extreme of a 13 or 14 percent increase 1 year to a freeze the next year, to something in between the year after.

A comparison between this proposal and some on which we have already voted is best illustrated by the fact that the leadership proposal reduces by some $40 billion over the next 3 years the President's original request for national defense. The Kassebaum-Grassley-Biden proposal for a 1-year freeze reduced that number by $121 billion, some three times as much. This proposal shifts the $40 billion reduction over the next 3 years to some $49 billion. That is to say, it is much closer to the leadership proposal than it is to the freeze which was voted on last week but is, I think, a responsible attempt to see to it that our planning for national defense is long range in nature.

Finally, this amendment increases nondefense discretionary appropriations caps for fiscal year 1985 by $2.7 billion over the leadership figure.

You will remember, Mr. President, that the proposal of the leadership is for a zero-percent increase in such programs for 1985, followed by 5-percent increases for 1986 and 1987. This shifts that only to be a 2-percent increase for 1985, with the same budget authority increases for 1986 and 1987 which are included in the leadership proposal.

If this amendment should be adopted, Mr. President, the deficit will decline to approximately $158 billion in fiscal year 1987, compared to almost $204 billion under the leadership plan. Cumulatively, over that 3-year period, this will reduce budget deficits by almost $230 billion, some $85 billion more in deficit reductions than the leadership proposal.

Mr. President, I must say that when I was elected to this body and first spoke here in 1981 or, for that matter, in 1982 and 1983, I did not believe that I would have had the gall to stand before the distinguished President and other Members of this body and claim great credit for a budget proposal which, 3 years out into the future still retained a deficit of over $150 billion.

This is a a shocking number. It is something which was intended by no one from the President through Members of the House of Representatives and Members of the Senate to the people of the United States as a whole.

It is a mark of the hole which we have dug for ourselves, however, that my proposal is a more realistic and more balanced and more successful attack on the budget deficit than almost everything with which we have dealt heretofore in this body and certainly more successful and more decisive than that proposed by the leadership.

I must emphasize, however, that no matter what proposal is adopted in 1984, we are at best dealing with what can be described as a downpayment. This proposal, as difficult as it is to accept, is not a solution to the problem created by budget deficits to the economy of the United States. It is not a solution. It is only a beginning. And we will hear significant criticism of this proposal, because of its allegedly draconian nature, during the course of this debate.

We cannot hide from the fact, however, Mr. President, that it is mild in comparison with the proposals with which we are going to be faced 1 year from right now. It is, however, so much more significant than any other proposal which has had a chance at passage that I am convinced that Chairman Volcker is right, that its acceptance by the Congress and by the President would in fact result in a reduction in interest rates of approximately 2 percent over the balance of the year, even though, I must emphasize once again, it is only a beginning and must be followed by even more significant changes during the course of next year.

Mr. President, I have a table describing the fiscal impact of this proposal and comparing it both to the so-called hybrid baseline estimates and to the CBO baseline estimates. I ask unanimous consent that that table be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SENATOR GORTON'S PROPOSAL COMPARED TO "HYBRID" AND CBO BASELINES

[All figures in billions of dollars, by fiscal years]

	1984	1985	1986	1987	Total, 1984–87

Note.—Details may not add to totals due to rounding.

Mr. GORTON. For the record, Mr. President, I should like to point out that figures for this table are slightly different from those in the table included in my "Dear Colleague" letter of last week. The differences are due to the correction of a mistaken accounting for the effects of COLA delay which we adopted before the recess. The total deficit reduction in my plan is approximately $229 billion-plus, whereas in the earlier table I had described it as being $234 billion. I point this out simply because I wish that there be no misunderstanding, and to indicate that these budget estimates have been prepared by the Congressional Budget Office.

As I have already pointed out, Mr. President, the significant difference between this and the leadership proposal is that pursuant to this proposal the deficit will decline, though modestly, during each of the next 3 years. Under the leadership proposal, it will increase over the next 3 years, though obviously at a far lower rate than would be the case should we take no action at all.

This plan includes a deficit reduction of $46 billion more than that of the leadership plan for fiscal year 1987, but even more important, $43 billion of the deficit reduction will take place before the end of fiscal year 1985; 50 percent more than is the case with the leadership proposal.

I think a second point which it is important to make is that this proposal is a fair one. The burden of this deficit reduction idea is spread across virtually the entire population, except for programs affecting those who are poverty stricken, which are exempted from the COLA cap. With that exception, no area of the budget is exempt from budgetary restraint.

Third, this proposal is consistent with a prudent and responsible Federal fiscal policy in general. Most particularly, it does not ignore the crucial entitlement programs, the largest and most rapidly growing parts of our budget. We deceive ourselves if we believe that serious deficit reduction can be accomplished without some discipline on these programs.

Next, by adopting the same defense spending figures we adopted last year, we are avoiding unpredictability in defense spending in outyears, which as I have already discussed, not only impairs our national defense but also contributes to unnecessary increases in defense costs by requiring uneconomical procurement schedules and contracting procedures.

Finally, the modest fiscal 1985 increase in nondefense discretionary programs will provide a measure of much needed breathing room to the Appropriations Committee in dealing with what is obviously a difficult situation.

I know that this proposal has unattractive features in the eyes of many Members of this body. Capping COLA's on retirement programs is not popular. Nevertheless, I am convinced that it is not an unreasonable or unfair request to put to those who benefit from those programs. They, as much as anyone else in our society, are adversely affected by inflation, high interest rates, and a lack of increased productivity in our economy. Furthermore, I should emphasize once again that any social security savings which occurs as a result of this proposal will not be treated like general revenues. Instead, they will be specifically earmarked for the medicare hospital insurance trust fund, where they will continue to finance the social security program for the beneficiaries of OASI and medicare as well.

I would remind my colleagues that the medicare hospital insurance trust fund is projected to be in serious financial trouble within the next few years. We are going to have to come up with a rescue package somewhat akin to that which was created for the retirement program last year. And anything we can set aside against that inevitable rainy day will make that task easier.

For other Senators, the least attractive part of this proposal will be the cap on income tax indexing. I must say, Mr. President, that I include myself in this group. I have voted to this point against every attempt to change or to modify tax indexing. It was the central feature of my own campaign for the Senate in 1980.

And yet, Mr. President, I know that you share with me an experience during the course of the last year. A year ago almost every Member of the U.S. Senate was talking about budget deficits. Almost every Member felt that they were unattractive; that they would have an adverse effect on our economy. But I noted, Mr. President, a large degree of political cynicism running through those arguments.

I must say, Mr. President, that many Members of my party were delighted to reduce budget deficits but they wanted to do so basically by reducing social programs for Democrats. And I must say, Mr. President, that very many Members of the party across the aisle were happy to reduce budget deficits only by taxing Republicans. That is not a formula for success in dealing with the most serious problem with which this Nation is faced today. We can only do it by meeting on some middle ground which treats everyone with equity and with fairness.

As a consequence, the token of what I consider to be my good faith in producing this amendment, is that while it calls for very significant and very decisive cuts in the growth rate of many spending programs, it also deals with the single tax reform of 1981 which I felt to be most important and most vital. And I commend that kind of approach to all Members of this body on both sides of the aisle because I believe it to be the only way in which we are likely to succeed in this vitally important task.

As a consequence, there is certainly a reason, or more than one reason, in this proposal for opposition on the part of every Member of this body. I cannot claim that I regard it as perfect, even from the point of view of carrying out my own political philosophies, much less those of other Members. I can claim, however, that it will be effective. I can claim that it decisively changes and reforms a number of our spending programs; that, in fact, the ratio of spending cuts to tax increases in this proposal is greater than that in the leadership package.

I can claim that this, more successfully than the leadership package, will actually have a positive effect on the economy of the United States, pushing off the day of increased inflation, not only slowing down, but arresting and reversing, the disturbing increase in interest rates with which we have been inflicted for the last 2 years; providing for more and better employment for the people of the United States, and a more rapid growth in our gross national product. It is after all, Mr. President, exactly those goods, those favorable responses for which we seek through reduction of budget deficits.

I ask my colleagues to join with me in what I am convinced will be a more successful, a more daring, a better and a more complete down payment on these budget deficits through the adoption of this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, the Senator from Washington, as a member of the Budget Committee with the least seniority has certainly grasped the concepts and understands the makeup of the Federal budget. I have a lot to say about this proposal from the distinguished Senator from Washington, but I want to make a couple of points now.

First, I have never seen a voting pattern go on in this Chamber as I have seen the last 10 or 12 days. I tend to think there will be a lot of people voting for this proposal who are going to vote, cross their fingers and say, "I voted for it. I sure hope it does not pass." I do not think they really want to have a social security package passed with their vote, that will reduce the expectation and entitlement of social security recipients by $30 billion in 3 years, especially following the social security reform package just adopted in 1982.

I am not going to talk an awful lot about cutting. I am going to make it clear that this is a significant cut in social security, everything from the ordinary social security to disability recipients. Later on when we have more time we will talk a bit about how much. I want to talk in some gross figures: $28.5 billion, to be exact, in social security reduction. The Senator from Washington is correct. He found a way to make sure that the Senator from New Mexico was not saying you are going to balance the budget on the backs of social security. So he says no, we are going to take it from them.

We are going to put it in medicare. So it is not really balancing the budget. It is just taking it from their checks, saying we are going to put it in medicare because that program by 1992 has some problems, and this seems like a nice way to fix it. Take away your cost of living, and put it in the other one. For military retirees, it is only $2.8 billion; for civil servants, it is $3.5 billion. I am not telling the Senate these things because I am trying to make the program harsh that the distinguished Senator from Washington and others propose. I am not saying this because this Senator, the Senator from New Mexico, is not worried about deficits—I am. But I am saying it because somehow or another the people who are voting in the U.S. Senate, and our constituents who are out there listening to what we are doing, seem to apply different standards for some reason. They do not understand yet that this is $28.5 billion reduction in social security, $2.8 billion in reduction in military retirees, $3.5 billion in civil servants.

Sunday somebody that works for the President talked about maybe fixing up social security in 1990, if I read the story right. He did not say how. He said maybe we will have to means test it. Did you see what happened? Every leading media in the country had him on last night already cutting social security. I did not see any lead person in the other party, including the distinguished leader of the minority here, let even 10 hours escape without saying the Secretary of the Treasury is talking about cutting social security. I would almost bet that $30 billion cut out of social security by this plan is more than anybody has ever put down on a piece of paper regarding direct cuts that might result from something like means testing of social security which is what I understand the Secretary of the Treasury was talking about.

The other day we had another vote here on social security. It got 38 votes. I read most of the accounts. I say to my good friend from Washington, as far as social security is concerned, that he did not cut it quite as much. His is only $28 billion—over 3 years. The one over 5 years was $78 billion to my recollection. You are doing one better. You are putting the savings in medicare. The cuts you are taking from their checks, would be placed in medicare. I did not hear anybody talk about the $78 billion much, other than it was a good reduction package.

I repeat to my friends in the Senate, I am one who has been through this battle. The Budget Committee 3 years ago said social security was $40 billion in the red. We put out a resolution saying fix it. We did not say how. Taxes? Benefit changes or what? It barely hit the exterior door of that committee room, and it was all over the country that we were proposing cutting social security. We were pretty much right, the $40 billion assumption turned out to be $38.8 billion in the reform package in order to make it solvent.

Why do I say all of this? I say this because the Senator from New Mexico wants to pass a deficit reduction package in the next couple of days. I would like to get it finished, let it go to the House, and pass something.

Let the American people and those who do not believe we are going to do anything of any significance in an election year find out that we are. That we are going to raise taxes about $47 to $48 billion by loophole closures, and no significant substantive changes in the Tax Code until we look through the rest of this year, but take $47 to $49 billion in taxes out of loophole closures. That will reduce defense substantially, get about $40 to $44 billion in entitlement savings, and have roughly a $150 billion deficit reduction package.

A number of Senators think we ought to do better. We ought to do better. But I submit we are not going to do better by attempting to reform social security again, and take roughly $30 billion out of that program in the name of a package that does more than the $150 billion suggested by the leadership.

I do not believe it is going to happen. Some Senators do not like the Senator from New Mexico to argue against this kind of amendment on the basis that it is not going to happen. I am sorry. I think it is terribly relevant for every Senator in here to understand when you are voting to modify a major program affecting 36 million Americans, that you ought to have some hope that your vote will be meaningful. I repeat that what I heard today within 24 hours after a mild statement about social security in the 1990's leads me to believe that there will be no major changes in social security this year, be it in the name of reform, solvency, deficit reduction, or whatever name you want to put on it. It is not going to happen.

I am opening myself up to my friend's getting up and saying, Are you interested in deficit reduction or not? Why should we not vote for something that will help, whether or not it is going to pass this year?

I leave that clearly in their hands. They can all look at it as they see fit. They can decide if they want to do this or want to get on with defeating this amendment, passing a deficit package that has a real chance of becoming reality within the next 2 or 3 months, and of sending a message that we are significantly reducing the deficit. We can also decide not to do things like for all practical purposes, passing a 3-year freeze on all of the entitlement programs, including social security, military pensions, civil service pensions, and some others.

I said practically, because I understand the CPI minus 3 is not a freeze. But I submit if we are as successful on inflation as we have been, it is practically a freeze. With inflation at 4, the CPI minus 3, means you get 1 percent in all of those programs.

The Senator from New Mexico does not think this is the best approach to deficit reduction if we have to do a bigger package at some point in time. I will quickly tell you that is absolutely true. I do not believe an approach to the entitlement programs of this country based upon treating them all the same and some kind of partial freeze for anything like 3 years is anything close to the best package you can come up with. If you have to do something next year as part of a major 5-, 6-, or 7-year plan, I submit that to say a 3-year freeze is to acknowledge that you just do not want to work on the programs in a meaningful way and you found some easy way to do it that you assume is equitable.

I used to think freezes on cost of living did not amount to much until I started looking at what 3-year freezes do to a lot of people who are hurting in this country. I have the numbers on what it is going to do to the average person in terms of checks they are expecting, many of them living on that and nothing else. I am just not sure that is what we ought to be doing as party of a deficit reduction package.

I am not critical of the Senator from Washington because for all practical purposes when you get to this point, where the committees have already debated it, they are not going to do it, the Finance Committee said, "We are not doing any more on entitlement savings," it is pretty difficult to do any more than some kind of formula adjustment to the programs.

For that reason, I am not suggesting that a Senator offering a package should do it by some kind of major reform, but, nonetheless, I do believe it is serious business to be taking this kind of action on civil service pensions, on military retirees, on social security recipients.

Having said that, let me suggest that there are many other things to talk about with reference to this amendment. I am not sure that I am going to address each and every one of them today, but, frankly, I hope every Senator understands that it could be their vote that says we are going to do this to these programs, and that each one who votes for it clearly ought to understand that that is precisely what they have in mind. I do not know how we can all think it is not going to amount to anything, that we are going to vote for it but we are really not doing it. I hope nobody is suggesting that. I am not suggesting that my friend from Washington is approaching his amendment in that manner.

I would like to make just one further observation. I really do not believe that the economists, the people working with Paul Volcker at the Federal Reserve, really can tell us what we ought to pass this year that is enough. I do not think they can tell us what it is that we pass up here that will not be enough. But I can tell you that $150 billion off of current policy trend lines in our budget, made up basically of about one-third from defense, nondefense, and revenues with some kind of an assurance that the appropriated part will also come through, which is the so-called leadership package, is not a trivial deficit reduction package.

For those who insist that it is trivial so long as it does not bring the bottom line down to their figure in 3 or 4 years from now, I submit that in our society there are certain realities of the marketplace. Those who study us look at those realities. I think on the one hand they are wondering whether we are going to do anything very significant. On the other hand, I truly believe that if they could imagine that 2 or 3 months from now we would truly put that $150 billion to bed and have it before the President for signature on various bills and say it is done, I think most of them would say we probably did not even think that could happen in this year and it is good. It is effective. It gives us renewed hope that the problems will be addressed.

Having said that, I also want to take 1 minute to tell you that I think the American economy is in pretty good shape today, and I am not one who thinks it is going to stop being in good shape next week or next month. I think clearly we are going to have to fix the deficits, but I think we have learned a number of lessons. Deficits are vitally important, but we have learned that a $3.6 trillion economy can stand more deficits than we thought. We have learned that the American people live with slightly higher interest rates than we thought. We have learned that an 8.3 percent growth in the American economy is possible without rekindling inflation. We have learned that we can put more people to work without any Government program putting them to work, like CETA, in an 11-month period than almost any other period since the Second World War.

We have learned that inflation is down and it might stay down; that optimism is up, and that there is a chance it will stay up. We have one thing left that is pretty tough, with all those goods, all those pluses, and that is the deficit. We do not have to address it all this year. If we take one big step, that is going to be enough and people are going to believe it. I think that step is the credible one that is found in the leadership package. I do not believe we are going to have major surgery on social security; I do not think we are going to have a major reform package for Federal or military retirees; I do not think we are going to de-index the indexed tax code this year. So you can understand why I do not think this package is going to have a dramatic effect on reducing interest rates, because I do not think any of those items that I just ticked off are going to happen. If they are not going to happen, I do not see how they are going to have an impact.

I am saying it as plain as I can. I do not believe there is a chance that kind of package is going anywhere, even if it passes here by a couple of votes. So how can it have such an impact on the deficit?

I know some will say if it passes why do we not make it law? I am just trying to read what I see out there. I regret to say, as strong and as powerful as we think we are, we do not yet run the country here in the Senate. We have a House of Representatives, and we have a President. I do not see all these things that I have just described as being in the cards. I would rather pass what I think is in the cards and can be signed into law and can make a dent.

I will close by saying for anyone who wonders where the deficit will be in 1987, I would submit that if you believe my economics, the deficit under the leadership package will be just about the same place it will be under the amendment of the Senator from Washington. It is just that I am more optimistic for the next 6, 8, 9, or 10 months. In any event, we ought to lower the deficit under his or my optimistic 3-year assessment. I give you that because it has some relevance. If you are voting because you think you know precisely what this is going to do for the deficit in 3 years, I would submit you can look at the proposal that the leadership made and assume that set of economics and you would be very close to where this proposal will get you. Obviously, you would be in better shape if everything worked right under the proposal of the Senator from Washington on the single issue of deficit reduction.

Having said as much as I want to say on this amendment, Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. DANFORTH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NICKLES). The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, the distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee used the word credibility in his criticism of the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington. I think the word credibility is a very good one on which to focus as we debate this matter.

I think that what is at stake here is whether or not we in Congress, we in Washington, have any credibility in dealing with the problem of deficits of $150 billion or $200 billion a year. I submit, Mr. President, that we do not have credibility in the Congress of the United States, and any Senator who has been back to his State in the last month or so knows that we do not have any credibility with our people. The American people do not believe that we have the will to deal with large deficits. The American people are certain that deficits of $150 billion or $200 billion a year, year after year, representing a tripling of the national debt in one decade, have a profound effect on the future of this country.

The American people know it. Urban people, rural people, old people, young people—all of them know that deficits of this size are bad for America; not just bad for the next year or so; not just bad for economic conditions in 1984 and 1985, but bad for our children and bad for our grandchildren. It is not responsible to run up deficits of this size and the American people know it.

Where does the question of credibility come in, Mr. President? The question of credibility arises when the Congress of the United States suggests to the American people that deficits of this size can be solved in a painless fashion, that all we have to do is award a few "golden fleeces," close a loophole here and there in the Tax Code, do a better job of collecting some debts, pay a lower price for Allen wrenches that are acquired by the Defense Department, and, painlessly, we shall solve our problems. People would like to believe that, but there is no credibility whatever in that position.

The chairman of the Committee on the Budget used the argument which has been used repeatedly for the past 3 or 4 years whenever we have debated anything on the budget—the magic words, "social security."

Do not do anything to social security; do not do anything to the entitlements. Any time the entitlements are mentioned, press releases will be turned out by our political foes. It is poison to talk about the entitlement programs.

"We are not going to do it," we tell ourselves. This is May 1984, and we say, "We are not going to touch the entitlement programs in 1984," and we have heard the same thing every year in the past and I am sure we shall continue to hear the same argument in the future. Politically, it is said that we cannot touch the entitlement programs.

Mr. President, I have great respect for the chairman of the Committee on the Budget. He is a great Senator and a great chairman of this committee. But he is not a magician. I submit to the Senate that the notion that we can get the deficit under reasonable control absent a balanced program is magic. That is magic, it is not reality, and it is not credible. If we are going to get the deficit at a reasonably low level, we are going to have to do precisely what the Senator from Washington suggests we are going to have to do: We are going to have to trim the defense budget. Not hack away at it; but we are going to have to trim it a little more than we would like to. We are going to have to raise taxes a little more than we would like to raise them.

I have to raise taxes. Ever since I have been in the Senate, I have been for cutting taxes. The first fight I ever got into on the floor of the Senate was on a tax reduction proposal.

Senator GORTON has proposed raising taxes over what they otherwise would have been because that is what changing the indexing formula minus 3 percent does. So we are going to have to raise a little revenue. And, yes, Mr. President, hold on to your hat, but it is absolutely true, we are going to have to address the entitlements.

I suggest to the Senate that the argument that we are not going to touch these programs and cannot touch these programs and still we are going to deal responsibly with the deficit—that is a magical argument. It is not a credible argument.

Mr. President, the non-means-based entitlement programs consist of something like 35 to 40 percent of the Federal budget. I ask anyone who cares to explain to come forward and let us know how we can simply rule out any consideration of 35 to 40 percent of the budget and say we are going to get a $200 billion a year deficit under control. It cannot be done; it is magic.

Mr. President, I do not know; maybe I am done for politically. I almost was in 1982, that is for sure. Maybe I have had it. But I know that for the last year or so, I have traveled all over the State of Missouri talking about CPI minus 3. I am told that in our State, we have the fourth most elderly population in the country. I have traveled all over the State talking about CPI minus 3.

I have talked to audiences of predominantly retired people, and I have explained to them exactly what CPI minus 3 is. I have told them that the concept of CPI minus 3 means that, for a limited period of time, entitlement programs, COLA adjustments, will be less than the cost of living by 3 percent and the same is going to be true with tax indexing.

I can tell the Senate that when this concept is explained, the response of my constituents, including elderly constituents, is overwhelmingly supportive. I ask for shows of hands in the audience, "How many of you would be willing to go along with a program like this?" The overwhelming majority of the hands in the audience go up. Why? Because it is fair. Because it says to taxpayers and the recipients of benefits alike, "You have a role to play in solving this terrible problem of the country. We are going to pass the hat to everybody and you are going to be called on to chip in. Are you willing to do it?"

The answer to the question is, "Yes, we are."

Mr. President, it is conventional wisdom in politics for us to go from one interest group to another and tell them what they want to hear: "We are going to do things to help your group; we will not do anything to affect your group in a negative fashion." So we go to working people or we go to retired people or we go to civil servants or one group or another, and we tell them absolutely everything they want to hear: "You do not have any sacrifice to make in your group," we tell them. "We do not want your group to sacrifice. Why, you have no role to play in saving your country. You have already done enough. We are not going to call on you for anything at all."

Mr. President, I believe that we have gone too far in treating the people of this country as though they are retired Americans or working Americans or black Americans or white Americans or Hispanic Americans or any other kind of Americans. They want to think of themselves as Americans. They are still patriotic. They still believe in their country. They still believe that they have a contribution to make to their country. People 65 and over have children and grandchildren. They have not written off the future of America. They have not resigned from the country. They are still contributing people in America and they want to contribute to the answer. If we present to them a program which is fair, which treats everybody the same, recipient and taxpayer, the overwhelming majority of people will say, "Count me in; I'm proud to be part of the answer."

That is precisely what the Senator from Washington has suggested—some trimming of defense spending—not hacking, but trimming—and an adjustment of the cost-of-living formulas for both tax purposes and spending purposes—equity, fairness, even-handedness; everybody contributes to the welfare of the country.

Mr. President, I am absolutely convinced that something very like what the Senator from Washington has proposed will have to be addressed by the Congress of the United States after the election if we are going to solve this terrible deficit problem. There is no doubt in my mind that we cannot put together a balanced program while leaving out either entitlements or the revenue side or leaving out the defense side. It cannot be done. And if we are going to address this issue sometime after the election, why not now? The prime rate went up half a percent today. Why not now? Why delude ourselves any longer? Why delude ourselves and delude the country that our problems can be solved by magic? This is the time for credibility, not magic. The Senator from Washington has offered a credible answer.

Mr. DECONCINI and Mr. EVANS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona is recognized.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, for the past couple of weeks now I have listened with great interest to many of my distinguished colleagues on the Senate floor discussing the details of the various deficit reduction proposals that are being offered to the pending budget measure. During those same 2 weeks or so I have struggled with my staff, myself, and my own voting record. As the Senator from Missouri points out, we always want to please everybody, and I am no exception. All of the deficit reduction plans call for some very tough, unpleasant fiscal medicine over the next several years. But there appears to be one particular plan. That is the plan that has been offered by the distinguished senior Senator from Washington (Mr. GORTON), and I urge my colleagues to support it.

I want to explain why I am doing so. Mr. President, before I go to the merits of the proposal of the Senator from Washington, I want to say at the outset it was with some heartburn that I reached my conclusion on this plan. So sensitive is a discussion of the cost of living that it sends reverberations through many of my good Arizona citizens who are willing to bear their share of the cost but feel like they have been picked on. Indeed, they have. We saw early in this administration an effort to reduce those COLA's and outright benefits. I do not like to see veterans' compensation and other benefits held back. Quite the contrary. Serving on that Veterans' Committee I have worked hard to keep them and to replace the cuts that were made in 1981 and 1982 by this administration. But the taste of this bitter pill is tempered somewhat by the specter of $200 billion deficits next year and a projected $308 billion deficit in 1989 if we do nothing to curb the freight train of red ink that is rolling down the track at an immense speed headed right for us.

Mr. President, why are we now faced with this dilemma? Why are we now faced with this unsavory task of having to vote for an emergency reduction package that goes against the grain of programs, activities, and people that we fought so long and so hard for? Many of our political careers rest on the support of these people. But as the Senator from Missouri said, if you explain a program that is fairly balanced, that is equitable, they will accept it, if they really believe everyone is going to participate. But someone always escapes. We know that from our hard work. The answer to the problem is that we no longer can stay the course through the stormiest economic squall since the Great Depression.

The combination of the largest defense buildup in our history, the largest tax reduction package of the President's, and the increase in interest payments needed to pay for the money borrowed by Uncle Sam to cover the cost of the President's defense buildup has triggered a 4-year deficit that exceeds the budget deficits of the Truman, Eisenhower, Kennedy, Nixon, Ford, and Carter administrations combined. That is why we are on the verge of adopting emergency legislation to roll back the damage. Can we wait until the election? Oh, sure. And perhaps we will. Can we wait another 10 years? I guess we could wait until hell freezes over if we had to. But the time to do something is now. Therefore, after searching my soul and reviewing all of these programs as carefully as I can, I am convinced the Gorton deficit reduction plan offers a balanced, reasonable, and equitable approach toward putting our fiscal house in order over the next 3 years. First, with the exception of the Hollings-Exon-Andrews plan, which I voted against, the Gorton deficit reduction plan reduces the deficit to a lower level by fiscal year 1987 than any of the plans that are currently on the table. Through a combination of spending cuts in defense, income tax indexing modifications, and cost-of-living reductions the Gorton plan reduces that deficit to $156.5 billion, if my observations are correct, by the year 1987, a $47.5 billion reduction below the projected Republican leadership deficit the same year, which is $204 billion. It would reduce the deficit to a level that is $5.5 billion below the much heralded Biden-Kassebaum deficit plan as calculated through 1987. So this plan accomplishes what every one of our colleagues has been saying we should accomplish with respect to budget reduction plans. We have one.

The Gorton plan also brings defense spending down to a realistic growth level that will allow us to strengthen our military forces without resorting to the inflated budget-busting defense numbers recommended by President Reagan on February 1.

Imagine, a budget that called for real growth of over 13 percent next year. Fortunately, the President has finally seen the light and on May 3 sent us a revised defense budget. I compliment him for doing that. I wish it had been sooner. But at least he is willing to bear some of the burden of these huge deficits that he certainly has helped create. The Gorton package will force our military to achieve economies in low priority activities without touching the major procurement and conventional force improvement initiatives which are needed in order to maintain our overall defense strength. Forcing the Defense Department to live with a budget of $297.1 billion, an increase of $31.8 billion over last year, is hardly going to set back our efforts to rebuild our defense posture in any of our armed services.

Furthermore, the 3-year total for defense spending contained in this plan is virtually identical to the 3-year defense spending plan adopted by Congress last year in the budget resolution of 1984.

Furthermore, the Gorton plan provides a small amount of relief in the nondefense discretionary spending program by raising the nondefense spending cap, I believe, by a modest $2.7 billion, or 1.9 percent over the pending Republican leadership plan for fiscal year 1985. The caps contained in that leadership plan for fiscal years 1986 and 1987 would not be changed. By making a small adjustment in the nondefense discretionary accounts next year, this plan would allow our law enforcement agencies, our small, personnel-intensive commissions and agencies, our health and science agencies, and our important domestic programs to prepare for the rigid restrictions that are coming down the road in fiscal years 1986 and 1987. Surely, a 2-percent increase over current baselines for nondefense discretionary programs is a bargain.

I compliment the Senator from Washington for realizing that there is need for a small, modest increase in some of these vital services, notwithstanding how everybody likes to condemn "social programs."

Fourth, the Gorton plan would cap personal income tax indexing at the Consumer Price Index less 3 percent for the next 3 years. This is very difficult for me to support. I have been one who has joined the Senator from Colorado (Mr. ARMSTRONG) for a number of years, along with others; and when the President finally put his tax package together with indexing, I raved and chanted, "Hooray! Hooray!" But the time has come to realize that if we want to be fair, as the Senator from Missouri just said, everybody has to participate. Some cuts, some reductions, everyplace. Some increase in revenues without overtaxing our people.

I recommended a similar proposal in my recent newsletter. Yes, I have had some letters and some calls objecting to it. But I also had a flood of support realizing that it calls for a balanced program such as offered here.

This brings me to perhaps the most troublesome piece of the Gorton package, but a piece I am willing to support as part of an overall deficit reduction strategy. I am referring to the provision which calls for capping cost-of-living adjustments—I say it again, capping cost-of-living adjustments—in non-means-tested entitlement programs at CPI minus 3 percent for the next 3 years. That is a tough one in Arizona, because the people who receive these cost-of-living increases have already given plenty, and they have paid for it many, many times. It is tough to ask them to give any more.

This controversial portion of the Gorton plan would save $40.6 billion. I believe that with that figure, you can propose to anyone, if you have a balanced budget, that, yes, I will give more, even though I have already given once or twice at the office and once or twice at home. I will do it again as long as everybody is going to give.

Let me say up front that any reduction in COLA's next year is not going to set well in Arizona, but it is time we do not just think about what is going to go well at home or on the front pages of the newspapers. Frankly, it is not popular with the junior Senator from Arizona. I have fought long and hard for Arizona's senior citizens, Federal workers, and civilian, postal, and military retirees. I have a lot of them living in Arizona. I think some of them depend on us to be sure that they do not receive unfair treatment in any budget, tax program, or other Government entitlement programs. But if we are to really come to grips with the deficit, we must begin to look at ways to bring the non-means-tested entitlement programs into the battle of fighting the budget. The approach recommended by the Senator from Washington is a fair way to address the issue of non-means-tested entitlements, without taking the draconian steps of eliminating COLA's as contained in other amendments that have been offered, or freezing at the 1984 level, which is the leadership amendment as I read it.

Although no one can accurately predict what the 1985 CPI will be, assuming that it stays relatively flat, beneficiaries still would be receiving a small cost-of-living adjustment under this plan. If it increases substantially, which many economists predict, the Gorton plan will allow additional relief for those non-means-tested recipients.

I have no doubt that we will be hearing from good people who say, "Why me?" The explanation has been put out here by a number of distinguished Members of this body who feel as I do, that it is time to offer a plan, to put up or shut up, to say what we are going to do and to support it clearly, to realize that we must act now.

Finally, this Gorton package will take savings derived in the old age and survivors' trust fund in the social security program which result from the COLA adjustments and direct them into the medicare hospital insurance trust fund, where the need for an additional infusion of cash is most acute. This approach makes sense when viewed in the context of the goals of the Senator's amendment and the tremendous needs to make the medicare fund solvent.

Mr. President, this has not been a comfortable couple of weeks for this Senator or for any other Senator. These are tough times, and they are becoming tougher. We have seen the worst recession since the Depression, and we are on the brink of getting out of that, some people say, but some people are suffering.

In all candor, there is much Congress could and should have done over the last 3 years to rein in the President's program. We could have and we should have done something about the third year of that tax program when we realized it was not going to work. I was one of the Senators who voted for it, believing that the President was entitled to his opportunity, to his economic program. We tried it, and we know what it has brought us. It has brought us the worst deficits ever.

There is no escaping the raw data on the deficit which shows, without a shadow of a doubt, that the unprecedented deficit built up in the last 4 years can be laid at the feet of the present administration. Congress has to take the blame, too. We have the final authority. We can stop it. But it takes a leader in the White House who is prepared to offer a balanced budget, not just at election time.

The American people demand that we act on the deficit and do it now. If the mail flowing into my office is any indication of a national trend, I believe that the American people are willing to hunker down and share in the sacrifice, as long as Congress shows the courage and the will to develop a permanent, long-range solution to the budget problem which does not single out any one group to absorb all the cuts. We owe it to our senior citizens, our veterans, our blue-collar workers, our men and women of the armed services, our businessmen and women, and to ourselves to attack the deficit problem head on this year, not next year. The program of the Senator from Washington for deficit reduction does just that. It is an honest first step for doing just what I have urged, and I urge the adoption of this plan.

I thank the Senator for the work he has put in on this matter.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. President, I join my colleague the senior Senator from Washington in endorsing the amendment he has proposed.

We have heard a lot of words during the last couple of weeks regarding deficit reduction packages, but I think they all can be capsulized in just a few words. We have heard constant reference to fairness. We have certainly heard a lot of talk about credibility.

Of course, there has been a good deal of discussion about adequacy. That really capsulizes what this debate is all about. Are we or are we not going to have the courage to provide a program which is credible to the American people, fair to all those affected, and adequate to do the important job these proposals are set out to do?

Unfortunately, in listening to the comments of the Senator from New Mexico, the chairman of our Budget Committee, it almost sounds like the real question is: In a political year can we include any entitlement changes at all in the budget deficit reduction package? Or are we simply going to ignore that portion of the budget and quietly say to ourselves we will wait until after the election is over and take it up in 1985?

I do not think that is the real question. I think the real question is the one I posed earlier and others have posed, and that is: We need a program which is adequate, fair, and credible.

It seems difficult for me to understand how 45 percent of the budget, all of the entitlement programs, and the 36-plus percent of the budget which are the non-means-tested entitlement programs can be ignored and still develop a program which is adequate, fair, and credible.

I have had the privilege, or the experience, at least, of having run a race for the Senate more recently than anyone else in this body. We had a hotly contested Senate race in the State of Washington in the fall of 1983. And much of the debate during that Senate race revolved around the question of deficits, how to correct deficits, and more particularly what were the elements of a successful budget deficit reduction package.

It was an intense campaign and I spoke as often as I could; in as many places in the State as I could; and as clearly as I could that an adequate, fair, and credible package simply would have to include the entitlement programs. You could not get it all out of defense. You certainly could not get it all out of discretionary domestic spending. And you obviously cannot get it out of the 12 or 13 percent of our budget which already goes to the interest payments on our national debt.

I do not know whether that resulted as a plus or a minus in the campaign. But certainly speaking out clearly and advocating to audiences, both young and old, that entitlement programs had to share in a budget deficit reduction package was not politically fatal in 1983, and I do not think it has to be politically fatal in 1984.

People are simply smarter than that. If they feel that this Congress and this Senate has done a fair job, and their participation in that fair job makes it adequate and the adequacy makes it credible, then all will benefit.

No one else yet in this debate has mentioned two other facts which I think are important to bring forward.

Since 1970, the entitlement programs—social security, civil service pensions, and/or similar programs—have increased 70 percent faster than the increase in the cost of living. There have been substantial gains, and I suggest that they were warranted gains. This is one small share of slowdown in order to achieve some other important benefits, which again, no one has mentioned during this recent debate.

There are other insidious taxes on the elderly, on those retired, and those receiving disability benefits and everyone else in our society. Those are the taxes which are not levied directly by this body or by any political body in this country, but are certainly levied indirectly. They are, of course, the taxes of inflation and of interest rates, which affect directly or indirectly every citizen in this Nation. They affect directly or indirectly the purchasing power of a recipient of social security and the purchasing power of the American defense establishment.

We sometimes forget that if we were to come forward with a program which is sufficient, we get the benefit of reduced interest rates and the benefit of a continued slowdown in the rate of inflation. If our program is inadequate, I am as certain as I can be, that we will be facing in a year or 2 years, or sometime in the not too distant future, rising interest rates, rising rates of inflation, and we will be wondering what to do to support our people who are facing additional costs.

The chairman of the Budget Committee has emphasized most strongly the effect on social security. He has suggested that this is a 3-year program and we cannot afford to hurt social security recipients for 3 years. We all know that while this is a 3-year program, 3-year programs are subject to change. They are subject to modification. They are always subject to a better idea which comes along later.

I think we all owe a debt of gratitude to the Budget Committee and to the chairman of that committee for having brought us to this point—for having made the debate one of what kind of program we will adopt, instead of whether we will adopt a program.

He has suggested that no one can tell us what will happen with a certain level of deficit reduction, but I reiterate what others have said. If there is one person in this Nation who has some responsibility for the level of interest rates, that person is certainly the Chairman of the Federal Reserve. When he says that a $50 billion deficit reduction package in 1985 will lead to a 2 full percentage point reduction in interest rates, that is worth listening to.

My concern is that we will have debated for 5 weeks and we will have done something if we adopt the leadership package. We will have done something, but the real question is whether it will be sufficient to do the job.

With the best estimates of the future, the deficits 3 years from now under the leadership package will be every bit as high, if not higher, than they are today. And I suggest it will not take long for someone to typify this as a deficit maintenance program rather than a deficit reduction program.

And if so, and if that is the view of the financial markets and the view of the people of the United States, then the debate of the last 5 weeks will have been primarily in vain.

It has been suggested that this Senate does not run the country and that we cannot be sure that the actions we take will ultimately succeed. Of course, that is true. But we can absolutely be sure, that if we do not take action, then we cannot succeed.

I suggest we not try to run the country, but we try to act in the most responsible fashion we can in the Senate. We can make this first step, and I strongly believe that my colleague from the State of Washington has, in fact, produced for this body a program which meets a three-way test of adequacy, fairness, and credibility.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GORTON). The Senator from Oklahoma is recognized.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I will be brief, but I wish to congratulate the Senator from Washington for the introduction of his amendment. I know there are a lot of people who would like to see this amendment go away, but, Mr. President, I think it is time that we have the courage in Congress to step forward and make some difficult decisions. When you are talking about CPI-3 on entitlement programs, that is a difficult decision. Certainly in this Senator's case, and I would imagine a lot of Senators, when you talk about CPI-3 on indexing, that is a difficult decision that needs to be made.

I am interested when we hear people talk about the Federal deficit, well, Paul Volcker thinks we need to do more. Regardless of what Paul Volcker seems to think, I think the American people tell us we need to do more. The deficits under the proposal that either passed the House of Representatives or the one that we are considering today, the so-called leadership package, are too high. I think most everyone would agree if you go back to your constituents and you tell them what those deficits are that we are looking at, in the $180 billion or $200 billion range, they will say they are far too high.

I congratulate the chairman of the Budget Committee, Senator DOMENICI, for his comments. I think he made some outstanding comments. The economy is better. Inflation in 1979 was 13.3 percent. In 1980 it was 12.4 percent.

Last year, 1983, it was 3.2 percent. That is a lot better. That certainly saves senior citizens and everybody else a lot of money.

Interest rates are certainly too high. But if you look at the interest rate of December 1980, it was 21.5 percent prime interest rate, and a lot of people have to pay prime plus 2 percent. Today, the prime interest rate is 12.5 percent. Certainly, that is too high, but it is a lot better than 21.5 percent.

If you look back to 1980, everyone was concerned about what? Inflation rates and interest rates. Both of those are down substantially.

But if you go back, at least to my State of Oklahoma, you will find out the one thing that people are still upset about are these enormous deficits. They want us to do something about these deficits, and they want us to do something about these deficits today.

Mr. DOMENICI. Will the Senator yield for an observation?

Mr. NICKLES. I am happy to yield.

Mr. DOMENICI. I thank the Senator for his comments. I would say, Mr. President, I failed to mention another item when I said things are better. This one is controversial, more so than the ones we have just discussed.

But we build back our defense in that 3½ years in the middle of a recession. And that is better, too. For those that think you get that for free, they just have to understand that the decade of the 1970's is probably the last free decade for military preparedness for the world's great free superpower. So we have had to spend some money.

I add that because the others are all pluses of another type, that were risks of another type and have been resolved. High inflation, which had a big risk, it is down. One risk in better shape. Interest rates, way too high, superhigh risk for America, no growth. Productivity down, terrible risk; everything we stand for, now up.

But also defense neeeded a lot of money, needed modernization, had to pay the people that served and defended this Nation. We did that, too. And so we got rid of a lot of risks. I kind of call it my four-for-one. We had four risks and they have been alleviated dramatically. Now we have one left, the deficit.

All I am suggesting is you are not going to solve that one very quickly. It is going to take a while.

I thank the Senator for his statement. I agree with him that the deficits are too high. No question about it.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I appreciate the chairman's comments. I might add to that, if we are going to talk about it, unemployment. We have 5 million more people working today than we had a couple of years ago. So the economy has rebounded.

But the No. 1 problem remains. We agree the deficits are too large.

In particular, when I mentioned the inflation rate, I mentioned the fact that the inflation rate was 3.2 percent for last year, and yet, you still see a prime interest rate of 12.5 percent. That is too great a difference. That is a 9-percentage point difference.

Why? I would say two things. One, the Federal Reserve—and I think too many people have not been watching what has happened to the money supply—the Federal Reserve expanded greatly the money supply. Basically, if you look at the charts, from about October 1982 all the way through August of 1983, you will see double-digit expansion in the money supply. They have contracted substantially in the last couple of quarters in the growth range of about 4 or 5 percent, about a third of what is was during most of the 1982 and 1983 period which I mentioned.

So, as a result, I think that is what is really pushing the interest rates up today. Most people have ignored that. But we do not control the money supply—that is the Federal Reserve—unless we change the legislation governing the Federal Reserve. We cannot do anything on that today. But we can control Congress and it is responsible for fiscal policy. And Congress has been doing, in this Senator's opinion, a very poor job in fiscal policy. We have not gotten Federal spending under control. One of the reasons why we have not gotten Federal spending under control is because we have not had the courage or the conviction to touch entitlement programs. And the time is now.

The deficits that we are looking at, $200 billion, even under the leadership proposal—and I compliment the leadership because they did come up with a balanced proposal, about a third in tax increases, about a third in defense, and a third from nondefense. I think that is equitable.

But it does not do enough. In this Senator's opinion, I think we need to do more. If you go back and talk to your constituents and say, "We have come up with this package but we are still looking at the deficits that are going to be around $189 billion or $190 billion for the next several years," they will say, "That is not enough." They will say, "Go back to the drawing board and come up with something more."

The proposal that we have, the Gorton proposal of which I am a cosponsor, does more. It takes the leadership savings of $144 billion in deficit reductions and increases that are over 50 percent. It adds another $85 billion in savings over and above that called for by the leadership package. And it does not hurt any one individual that much.

Sure, there are some sacrifices that are involved. Sure, there are some things I do not want to lose like the tax index, 3 percent per year. I think that is something I would like to have.

But we are going to have to start making some sacrifices. I have heard time and time again, "Well, not this year. This is an election year. We have to reelect Ronald Reagan."

Sure, I want to reelect Ronald Reagan. I want to elect a majority of Republicans to control the Senate. I like being in the majority. But I also think we need to be responsible. And the time for being responsible is now. Every other year is an election year. If we are not going to wrestle with difficult problems in an election year, maybe we should not meet but every odd-numbered year.

This is a serious problem and the time is now. We need to address it.

I compliment the Senator from Washington for bringing up his proposal. We are going to be asked to vote to increase the debt limit within the next couple of weeks probably another $200 billion. That means we are going to be borrowing. We are going to go back to the American people and say, "No, we couldn't quite get a package together very good this year, so we are going to have to go into debt another $200 billion."

The national debt today is approximating $1.5 trillion. That is $6,500 for every man, woman, and child in the United States. We are saying that is not enough, that we have to borrow another $200 billion to make sure that we can finance our excess expenditures. We need to make responsible decisions.

This Gorton amendment is not a panacea. It is not a cure-all. It is not going to solve all the problems. But it is significantly better than the $144 billion package. It would take the figures up to $229 billion. So now we are moving up into at least 40-some percent of the forecasted deficit. That is a lot better than 25 percent.

Again, I congratulate my colleagues. I hope the Senate will give serious consideration to this amendment. I hope that we will adopt it today.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NICKLES). The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAKER. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mrs. KASSEBAUM). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Madam President, the unanimous-consent request I am about to propound has been submitted to the principals involved in the debate and to the minority leader and the two managers. I believe it is agreeable on both sides. I hope so.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. BAKER. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate temporarily lay aside the pending question, which is the Gorton amendment, and proceed to the consideration of a Kennedy amendment to the Finance Committee portion of this bill dealing with medicare, which was permitted by a previous unanimous-consent order, which amendment will be sent to the desk.

I further ask unanimous consent that, at the hour of 4:30 p.m. tomorrow, the Senate return to the consideration of the Gorton amendment, at which time there will be 30 minutes of debate, to be equally divided and under the control of the distinguished Senator from Washington (Mr. GORTON) and the chairman of the Committee on the Budget, the Senator from New Mexico (Mr. DOMENICI), and that, at the hour of 5 p.m. tomorrow, the Senate vote on or in relation to the Gorton amendment.

ORDER FOR PERIOD OF TRANSACTION OF ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS AND FOR RECESS UNTIL 11 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. BAKER. I further ask unanimous consent that if this agreement is entered into, the Senate then go into a period for the transaction of routine morning business to extend not past the hour of 7:30 p.m., in which Senators may speak; and that when the Senate completes its business today, it stand in recess until the hour of 11 a.m. tomorrow.

That is the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DOMENICI. Reserving the right to object, Madam President, may I ask the leader, in terms of the Kennedy amendment, it will be laid down tonight, but with no time understanding with reference either to debate of it or vote upon it?

Mr. BAKER. That is my understanding, Madam President.

Mr. DOMENICI. I thank the leader.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 3050

(Purpose: To delete sections 901, 916, which raise costs for median beneficiaries by increasing the Part B premium, and indexing the Part B deductible)

Mr. BYRD. Madam President, on behalf of Mr. KENNEDY and Mr. CRANSTON, I send the amendment to the desk to which the distinguished majority leader has referred, and I ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from West Virginia (Mr. BYRD), for himself, Mr. KENNEDY and Mr. CRANSTON, proposes an amendment numbered 3050.

Mr. BYRD. I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

Strike increase in part B premium (sec. 901): On page 1199, beginning with line 4, strike all through line 17 on page 1201.

Strike indexing in part B deductible (sec. 916): On page 1226, beginning with line 21, strike all through line 4 on page 1228.

In the section of the Baker amendment dealing with budget authority for Defense, delete "to exceed $299,000,000 in fiscal year 1985, $333,700,000 in fiscal year 1986, or $372,000,000,000 in fiscal year 1987" and "substitute" to exceed $298,965,000,000 in fiscal year 1985, $333,226,000,000 in fiscal year 1986 and $370,507,000,000 in fiscal year 1987."

Mr. BAKER. Madam President, has the request been granted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has.

Mr. BAKER. That request also provided automatically for a period for the transaction of routine morning business, did it not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. MATHIAS. Madam President, the Senate is finally sailing in the right direction with the budget amendments to this bill. Only 4 months ago we were talking about appointing a committee to consider what we ought to do, and now we are taking action. We are trying to put our fiscal House in order. In so doing, we are sending a clear signal to foreign and domestic financial markets that will help restore their confidence in the United States. Perhaps, even some of the damage done to our export markets can be reversed if we act decisively.

The path we have chosen is not easy. It will require sacrifice from every quarter and make demands on the personal integrity of each of us that will be especially heavy in an election year. But we have finally come to recognize that a growing economy alone cannot overcome these mounting deficits. Left untended, these deficits, like weeds, will choke off the economic growth we seek to cultivate.

Clearly, there is a tradeoff between the important programs we want to promote through budget expenditures and the consequences of these huge deficits. It is worth our time to pause and reflect on some of the consequences that we will avert by taking deficit reduction seriously.

A few years ago we were alarmed by deficits of $28 billion, but a few years from now our country could easily face deficits 10 times that size. One is reminded of the dire predictions of the 18th century economist Thomas Malthus, except that it is our own deficits whose geometric rate of growth will consume all our productive economic opportunities.

Although much of the domestic impact of the current deficits is yet to be felt, our buying on borrowed money is having drastic international consequences. The large deficits cause high interest rates and the interest rates artificially increase the value of our dollar. Foreign capital is attracted to our country, away from where it is desperately needed by debtor developing nations, oil importing nations, and our European allies. With a $100 billion trade deficit our exports have greatly suffered due to the exorbitantly priced dollar. However, should foreign capital dry up, not only will our exports suffer but everything—food, clothing, and shelter—will cost more. In short, continued long-term deficits will send interest rates soaring, rekindle inflation, depress investment, limit job opportunities, and increase our trade deficit.

These are economic consequences we are attempting to avoid with our deficit reduction packages. It is these consequences that we must weigh against what we are trying to achieve as a nation. This is why I join with Senators CHAFEE, STAFFORD, WEICKER, and ANDREWS in offering an amendment to the leadership plan. Our amendment will provide a single cap on all appropriations for each of the next 3 fiscal years. The total appropriations permitted by this amendment would be $16.7 billion less than the 3-year total of the leadership plan. In making our calculations, we allow for a real growth rate in defense of 4 percent based on economic assumptions of the Congressional Budget Office, or 5.5 percent based on the assumptions of the Office of Management and Budget.

For nondefense appropriations, our amendment adopts the CBO baseline, rather than a 1-year freeze. Our amendment's defense figure is $37 billion less than the leadership plan, while our nondefense budget appropriations are $20.3 billion more than the leadership figure over a 3-year period. We consider an absolute freeze on the nondefense appropriated programs inappropriate because these programs have borne the major burden of the deficit reduction effort over the last 4 years.

We also believe that one cap on all appropriations is absolutely necessary in order to properly evaluate each spending program on its own merits. It is a case of commonsense making economic sense. Economics is the dismal science that teaches us to deal rationally with scarcity. Every decision involves a tradeoff. More of one item means less of another. Indeed, serious efforts toward deficit reduction are themselves a tradeoff—the tradeoff between the consequences of huge deficits and the national priorities reflected in our budget expenditures. Exempting defense from this reasoning process, by placing it under a separate appropriations cap, skews our budget priorities and violates sound economic decisionmaking practices.

Congress and the Nation are weighing the tradeoff between deficit reductions and Government programs; now it is time to set up priorities within the budget itself. Defense constitutes over one-half of what is within our budget power to control. Payments for many items such as social security, interest on the debt, Federal retirement, medicare and medicaid are already fixed. Under our proposal, defense expenditures, education, research, and health programs will all face the same scrutiny. Under the leadership proposal, instead of analyzing dollar for dollar the value of each program to the general welfare, defense programs will only be compared with other defense needs and not with education, science, research, or other vital nondefense needs.

We face many challenges in the coming years—educating our children, keeping the peace and maintaining a strong economy. We cannot do any of these unless they are all done together. If two appropriations caps are allowed, funds for educating our children will have to compete with funds for keeping them healthy. The two appropriations caps change the traditional economic analogy from a choice between guns and butter to a choice between guns and more guns, and a choice between butter and education or health or crime control. Guns and butter are both important to our national security, but developing our human capital is the bedrock of our national security. I support an adequate military budget. But I am occasionally troubled by the thought that someday, unless we reorder our priorities, we could end up with a lot of complicated military hardware and no one literate enough to operate it.

In a time of scarce resources, in a time when the deficits drastically affect the rest of our domestic and international economy, we must make sure that every dollar spent yields a maximum benefit to the general welfare. This can only be done with one appropriations cap, where all programs are evaluated on their merits against one another and against the economic consequences of uncontrolled deficits.

Mr. BAKER. I wish to announce there will be no more rollcall votes tonight.

THE ELECTION RESULTS IN EL SALVADOR

Mr. HELMS. Madam President, last week I called upon President Reagan to recall Ambassador Thomas Pickering for consultations on the role which he and his Embassy officials have played in rigging the election in El Salvador.

Now there is evidence that Mr. Pickering was but a key role player in a behind-the-scenes drama much wider than I could have imagined last week. When I asked the President to recall Mr. Pickering, I based the request on the overt actions which the Ambassador had been taking to enhance the candidacy of the socialist nominee, Jose Napoleon Duarte. Now the evidence is that Mr. Pickering was presiding over a covert plan to funnel U.S. Government funds and other assistance directly into Duarte's campaign.

This covert funding has been going on for 2 years. In other words, the State Department and the CIA bought the election for Duarte. Mr. Pickering was merely the purchasing agent. If Mr. Pickering did not approve of the scheme, he should have resigned.

It has been my understanding that President Reagan's policy is to build democracy in El Salvador. However, the covert funding of Duarte does just the opposite. It is, in fact, a misuse of the democratic process that ultimately will subvert the President's policy as defined by Mr. Reagan. The fact appears to be that President Reagan never himself approved the funding of Duarte. It was the decision of the third-level interagency group on Central America that is supposed to coordinate policy in the executive branch. In 1981, President Reagan reportedly authorized the use of covert action to support parties being threatened by Marxist-Leninist insurgency, a step I consider quite proper. But at no time, according to my information, did the President authorize covert action on behalf of one democratic party to the detriment of other democratic parties. The bureaucrats evidently decided, in effect, to classify Roberto D'Aubuisson, Duarte's chief opponent, in the same category as the Communists.

Madam President, the bias of the bureaucrats in favor of the socialist candidate, Mr. Duarte, was plain for all to see, as was their actual malice toward Mr. D'Aubuisson, who openly espoused the principles of the Republican Party in the United States. Mr. D'Aubuisson was forever being linked—in the jargon of the media—to the so-called right-wing death squads. The cue was taken from slanderous accusations of President Carter's Ambassador to El Salvador, Mr. Robert White.

Yet Mr. White's accusations proved to be flimsy indeed; and when confronted by the attorney for one of his victims before the Western Hemisphere Affairs Subcommittee, he was forced to retract. Lawsuits against Mr. White are pending.

Mr. D'Aubuisson was never given the opportunity by the State Department or the media to confront his accusers. I personally made inquiries of every agency and every high official in the U.S. Government that I judged to be in a position to know the truth. In almost every case, I was told, in effect, that there was no credible evidence, but that it would be impolitic to say so. There were, however, one or two who said that yes, there was evidence linking Mr. D'Aubuisson to the death squads; but when pressed for specifics, they backed down, saying there was nothing that would hold up in court. I am still waiting for any specific evidence, whether it would hold up in court or not. I invite any official of the administration to put it forward.

Nevertheless, the State Department continued an underground campaign of malicious accusations against one of the chief candidates in the Salvadoran elections. Hardly a day failed to go by without unnamed Embassy spokesmen or their similarly anonymous colleagues here in Washington repeating their accusations, or indicating that things would go hard for El Salvador if the voters chose Mr. D'Aubuisson. The faceless spokesmen never failed to point out the symbolic act of refusing a visa to Mr. D'Aubuisson.

We see now that all of this was not just mere bias. The State Department and the CIA were protecting their investment. They had bought Mr. Duarte lock, stock, and barrel, and they did not want the invested capital to be wasted by the Salvadoran voters rejecting the merchandise. They wanted the trappings of democracy to enhance the product, but they did not want to risk a real commitment to freedom.

This was not the policy of President Reagan. I have known the President too long to believe that he would ever support a phony democracy or a crooked election. This was the policy of a small coterie of bureaucrats with their own agenda and their own policies—the permanent government pursuing its own aims in defiance of the President's wishes.

Insofar as the President is responsible, he is responsible, by hindsight for not having been more exacting in insuring that the policymaking slots at the State Department are filled with persons loyal to his principles. Many good friends of the President have tried to warn him that the bureaucracy is out of control; but other advisers of the President have chosen to ignore those warnings. Yet we still see nominations coming forward for key State Department policy slots who represent the views of previous administrations and the bureaucratic establishment. Policy is created by persons; and the President will have to see to it that the persons he chooses are representatives of his aims.

The practical result is that we have the potential for a first-class debacle on our hands, with the prestige of the United States invested in a socialist who is pledged to an economic policy that will bring the country to a halt, and a diplomatic policy that will result in a coalition with the Marxist-Leninists. Mr. Duarte has already intimated that key Marxists will be in his government; and if these Marxists are invited, will the Marxist-Leninists be far behind? Mr. Duarte is without a mandate to rule or the arguments to produce national unity. In assuming power through a rigged election, Mr. Duarte runs the real risk of touching off another conflagration in a war-torn land.

It is a real question just who has been told about the covert funding of Duarte. I have today talked to high members of the administration who were just as shocked as I was to discover what had happened. I have talked to other Senators who were similarly in the dark. I hope that the President is fully briefed on the exact nature of U.S. support for Duarte before he makes his television speech tomorrow.

It is my understanding that not even the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence was informed of the funding of Duarte until last Thursday—the day after particulars I revealed in a speech on the Senate floor were made public. I do not know what went on at that meeting, but I have been given to understand that Senators who heard the news declined to go to El Salvador as election observers because they did not want to be in the position of appearing to approve what has transpired.

All the details of this operation should now be revealed. The whole truth should be told. The only way to make amends is to tell the truth. Those responsible for formulating, approving, and executing the policy should carefully consider whether they can continue to serve our Government with honor.

The whole purpose of our policy in El Salvador was to build democracy in that country, a country where the citizens were obviously yearning to participate in a free and open democratic process. This is a goal which I have strongly supported, and continue to support.

The essence of democracy is to allow the people to make their own choices within a constitutional system. The essence of democracy is to prevent undue pressures which block the free workings of the political system, and which give unfair advantages to one side or the other. This is what I believe in. This is what the American people believe in.

In our electoral system, we believe that democracy cannot flourish if any political candidate is funded from a single, overwhelming source. At the same time, we believe that a broad base of funding, coming in small donations from the people themselves, is an important sign of healthy democracy, and in itself a partial test of fitness to serve.

Instead, what we had in El Salvador was a calculated plan to defeat the working of democracy in El Salvador. It implies a fear that the people in El Salvador do not know what is good for them, and cannot be trusted to make a proper decision. When we see the narrowness of the apparent margin despite the unfair odds, we see that the fears of the opponents of democracy were justified.

The support reportedly given to Mr. Duarte was not just direct funding, but also comprehensive, across-the-board services. The United States provided funds for 400 precinct organizers for Mr. Duarte, set up a model press operation, provided radio and TV studios, gave technical advice and paid for the computer voter registration system that disenfranchise 20 percent of the voters the first time around. If the CIA programed the computers, how can anyone trust the numbers?

It is not my contention that Mr. D'Aubuisson should have won. My contention is that the Salvadoran people should have had the right to choose without undue pressure from the U.S. Government. It is alleged that I am defending Mr. D'Aubuisson; I have met him only once, on a brief occasion when we both happened to attend a dinner several months ago. On the other hand, I have met Mr. Duarte many times; my staff has spent hours with him discussing his political philosophy. We are under no illusions as to his aims and ideas. Only a total perversion of the terms of political dialog can establish Mr. Duarte as a moderate. If Duarte is a centrist, then our former colleague, George McGovern, is an extreme right winger.

However, my reactions to the El Salvadorans candidates are of no consequence. It is not our choice, but the choice of the people of El Salvador that matters. Unfortunately, the people of El Salvador were not allowed to make a free choice.

It is necessary, therefore, to clear the air. The whole truth should come out, so that the people of El Salvador can take whatever steps they deem necessary in the light of the facts.

I would not presume to dictate, or even suggest, what they should now do, if anything—but neither should anyone else connected with the U.S. Government.

SEA-LAUNCHED CRUISE MISSILE

Mr. MATHIAS. Madam President, the nuclear-armed sea-launched cruise missile [SLCM] countdown has begun. Some time between now and June 30, the United States will begin deployment of the nuclear SLCM. Unless something is done soon, some time within the next 53 days the United States will begin the slide down the slippery slope of instability, landing on a heap of broken arms control promises.

Current American arms control efforts are limited to sporadic multilateral activity in the Geneva Committee on Disarmament. These efforts, such as they are, represent steps in the right direction, but they are not enough. We must return to the START and INF negotiations and tackle all the hard issues, including nuclear SLCM's, while there is still time.

Given the current state of world affairs, the United States should be doing everything in its power to bring the Soviet Union back to the negotiating table. But I am not persuaded that the United States is doing all that it could.

The most glaring evidence to suggest that we are not trying our hardest is found in our stated intention to deploy the nuclear SLCM. If we were really pursuing all avenues to achieve arms control, we would think twice before deploying a missile that will undercut all existing American arms control proposals. Once deployed, the nuclear SLCM could make START, or any other accord, obsolete before it is signed. The time to halt nuclear SLCM deployments and get arms control back on track is now, before major deployments occur, and not after the fact. And the best way to achieve these goals is to impose a bilateral moratorium on American and Soviet nuclear SLCM deployments. Senator DAVE DURENBERGER and I proposed just that on May 3, and we invite all interested colleagues to consider our proposed moratorium as a way to bring the U.S.S.R. back to the Geneva talks. It is in our mutual interest to have those talks succeed.

As I mentioned before, time is running out. There are just 54 days before we reach the point of no return signaled by the first nuclear SLCM deployment.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. MATHIAS. Madam President, pursuant to the provisions of rule VI of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I ask leave of the Senate to be absent on May 9, 10, and 11 for the purpose of attending a conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR STAR PRINT—SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 111

Mr. MATHIAS. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that Senate Concurrent Resolution 11 be star printed to correct a printing error on page 3, line 1, of the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE CALENDAR

Mr. BAKER. Madam President, there are a number of items, seven items, on today's Calendar of Business which appear to be cleared on this side for action by unanimous consent. I refer to Calendar Orders Nos. 794, 836, 837, 839, 840, and 841. May I inquire of the minority leader if he is in a position to clear all or any portion of those measures for action by unanimous consent at this time?

Mr. BYRD. Madam President, there is no objection on this side of the aisle.

Mr. BAKER. Madam President, I may also say to the minority leader that one other item is cleared on this side. That is Calendar Order No. 707, H.R. 3240. However, I am advised that the distinguished Senator from New York (Mr. MOYNIHAN) wishes to be present when that measure is taken up.

What I propose to do now, and indeed I will make this request for the consideration of the minority leader and other Senators, I ask unanimous consent that Calendar Orders 794, 836, 837, 839, 840, and 841 be considered en bloc.

Mr. BYRD. Madam President, I have no objection to that request. The distinguished Senator from New York (Mr. MOYNIHAN) is present. Since he had indicated his desire to be present at the time Calendar Order 707 is taken up, the majority leader may want to proceed with that immediately or following the six calendar orders to which he alluded with reference to voting en bloc.

Mr. BAKER. Very well. Since it would be dealt with en bloc and the Senator from New York is on the floor, I wonder if he has any objection if we take the 15 seconds necessary to dispose of the other items?

Mr. MOYNIHAN. No objection.

Mr. BAKER. Then I put the request, Madam President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BYRD. No objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Hearing no objection, it is so ordered.

SALE OF AMMUNITION FOR AVALANCHE CONTROL PURPOSES

The bill (S. 2100) to authorize the Secretary of the Army to sell ammunition for use for avalanche-control purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

S. 2100

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That subject to the needs of the Army, the Secretary of the Army may sell ammunition for military weapons which are used for avalanche-control purposes to any State (or entity of a State) or to any other non-Federal entity that has been authorized by a State to use those weapons in that State for avalanche-control purposes. Sales of ammunition under this Act shall be on a reimbursable basis and shall be subject to the condition that the ammunition be used only for avalanche-control purposes.

Mr. BAKER. Madam President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

NATIONAL SAFETY IN THE WORKPLACE WEEK

The joint resolution (S.J. Res. 258) to designate the week of June 24 through June 30, 1984, as "National Safety in the Workplace Week," was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

The joint resolution and preamble are as follows:

S.J. RES. 258

Whereas the National Safety Council statistics indicate that workplace accidents accounted for eleven thousand employee deaths and one million nine hundred thousand employee injuries during 1982;

Whereas such accidents caused immeasurable pain and suffering to victims and their families;

Whereas the cost of occupational accidents amounted to over $31,000,000 in losses to American industry during 1982;

Whereas the American Society of Safety Engineers and other safety and health organizations continue to promote occupational safety in all industries; and

Whereas this endeavor is worthy of support and cooperation so that the toll of workplace injuries and deaths will be reduced: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the week of June 24 through June 30, 1984, is designated as "National Safety in the Workplace Week", and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation commemorating the efforts of organizations which promote safety and health for the American worker and calling upon all government agencies and the people of the United States to observe the week with appropriate programs, ceremonies, and activities.

Mr. BAKER. Madam President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

NATIONAL BLOOD PRESSURE AWARENESS WEEK

The joint resolution (S.J. Res. 260) designating the week beginning on November 11, 1984, as "National Blood Pressure Awareness Week," was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

The joint resolution and preamble are as follows:

S.J. RES. 260

Whereas diseases resulting from hypertension cause needless mortality and morbidity which can be reduced if hypertension is discovered through blood pressure screening;

Whereas sixty million Americans are hypertensive;

Whereas hypertension is a major factor in five hundred thousand strokes and one hundred and seventy-five thousand stroke-related deaths annually as well as more than one million five hundred thousand heart attacks and five hundred and sixty-seven thousand heart attack-related deaths annually;

Whereas twenty-nine million workdays, representing $2,000,000,000 in earnings, are lost each year because of cardiovascular diseases;

Whereas the risk of the major cardiovascular diseases is directly related to hypertension and even mild elevation in blood pressure may result in substantial risk of illness;

Whereas much of the 30 per centum reduction in mortality between 1970 and 1980 for stroke, hypertension heart disease and other cardiovascular system disease can be partially attributed to increased awareness and better control of blood pressure; and

Whereas increased blood pressure screening will identify greater numbers of Americans at risk for hypertension-related cardiovascular disease and encourage these Americans to seek treatment to control their blood pressure: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the week beginning on November 11, 1984, is hereby designated as "National Blood Pressure Awareness Week", and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe such week with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

Mr. BAKER. Madam President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

NATIONAL NURSE RECOGNITION DAY

The joint resolution (S.J. Res. 274) to authorize and request the President to designate May 6, 1984, as "National Nurse Recognition Day," was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

The joint resolution and preamble are as follows:

S.J. RES. 274

Whereas nurses constitute the largest single health care group in the country;

Whereas nurses are the ones who are always there—providing care in our Nation's hospitals twenty-four hours a day, seven days a week—and in community clinics, schools, nursing homes, industry, physicians' offices, and patients' homes;

Whereas nurses play a crucial role in health education and disease and injury prevention;

Whereas nurses support of patients and families is essential to rehabilitation and restoration of health;

Whereas nurses require a high level of scientific knowledge, specialized skill, empathy and compassion; and

Whereas nurses provide cost-effective, quality and underutilized services: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation designating May 6, 1984, as "National Nurse Recognition Day", and calling upon the people of the United States to observe the day with appropriate programs, ceremonies, and activities.

Mr. BAKER. Madam President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

WOMEN IN AGRICULTURE WEEK

The joint resolution (S.J. Res. 279) to designate the week of November 11, 1984, through November 17, 1984, as "Women in Agriculture Week," was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

The joint resolution and preamble are as follows:

S.J. RES. 279

Whereas farm women contribute substantially to the stabilization of family farms in the United States;

Whereas more than one million women are engaged, either solely or jointly, in the operation of farms in the United States;

Whereas farm women are involved in all aspects of farming operations either as accountants, machine operators, veterinarians, crop specialists, businesswomen, mothers, or other occupations;

Whereas farm women also make significant contributions to agriculture, the leading employer in the United States, by virtue of their motivation and pride;

Whereas farm women are committed to the preservation of their families and farming operations and to the prosperity of our nation's agricultural economy; and

Whereas the appropriate recognition of the contributions made by our nation's farm women is long overdue: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the week of November 11, 1984, through November 17, 1984, is designated as "Women in Agriculture Week" and the President of the United States is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe the week with appropriate programs, ceremonies, and activities.

Mr. BAKER. Madam President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

NATIONAL ARSON AWARENESS WEEK

The joint resolution (S.J. Res. 283) to authorize and request the President to designate the week of May 7, 1984, as "National Arson Awareness Week," was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

The joint resolution and preamble are as follows:

S.J. RES. 283

Whereas one of every four fires is of suspicious origin, according to statistics of the U.S. Fire Administration;

Whereas death caused by arson has increased dramatically over the last ten years;

Whereas no other fire cause has exceeded arson in total dollar loss;

Whereas the crime of arson is associated with high profits and a low risk of apprehension and imprisonment;

Whereas the complexity of arson makes it a difficult crime to recognize and prevent; and

Whereas we need to create an awareness of arson, its impact on each of us, and the community resources available to us in the event that we are victims of arson: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation designating the week of May 7, 1984, as "National Arson Awareness Week," and to call upon Federal, State, and local government agencies, and the people of the United States to observe the week with appropriate programs, ceremonies, and activities.

Mr. BAKER. Madam President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

SPECIALLY STRUCK MEDAL IN HONOR OF ROY WILKENS

Mr. BAKER. Now, Madam President, I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate Calendar Order 707, H.R. 3240.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 3240) to authorize the President of the United States to present on behalf of Congress a specially struck medal to the widow of Roy Wilkens.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York is recognized.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Madam President, we have before us a proposal first presented to the Senate several years ago, and passed by the Senate in combination with several other measures in S. 1729. My distinguished associate in the House of Representatives, Mr. RANGEL, introduced the companion bill, H.R. 3240. Congressman RANGEL's measure is the bill now before us.

Madam President, I rise today to voice my strong support for H.R. 3240, legislation advanced by myself and my good friend from New York, Congressman RANGEL, to mint a gold medal in honor of one of America's heroes, Roy Wilkins, and present it to his widow, Aminda Badeau Wilkins.

Permit me to remind my colleagues in this body that the Senate already has passed my companion measure to this legislation, S. 1348, as section 1 of S. 1729 on September 13, 1983. The House of Representatives followed this body's lead by approving Congressman RANGEL's bill, H.R. 3240, on March 13, 1984.

This gold medal will not be the first national honor for Roy Wilkins. He received the Presidential Medal of Freedom, our highest civil honor, from President Lyndon B. Johnson in January 1969. Nor is it likely to be the last honor for this great American.

These tributes are our opportunity to recognize Roy Wilkins' contributions to this country. In remembering his life and the role he played in history, we have a chance to deepen our understanding of ourselves and of our cohesiveness as one people. Indeed, the effort to make of us one people dominated Roy Wilkins' life. We are the benefactors of his struggle and his success.

Roy Wilkins was born at the start of the 20th century. His life reflected the main currents of this century, just as our present society reflects his visions and achievements.

We honor the grandson of a slave. I ask you to reflect on that for a moment, the social change which is a hallmark of American history. When we speak of the transition from slavery to national hero in but three generations, we realize how truly dynamic this society can be—and ought to be.

Several States will claim Roy Wilkins as their own. He was born in St. Louis, MO; he was educated and began his career in Minnesota. But it was in our State of New York that Roy Wilkins lived for more than 45 years.

He began his career in journalism, but, as with W.E.B. DuBois, whom Roy Wilkins succeeded as editor of the Crisis, journalism was for Roy Wilkins primarily a means of political action.

In retrospect, Roy Wilkins' succession to Dr. DuBois as the editor of the Crisis signified the importance of the role which Wilkins would play in our history. The Crisis magazine and the NAACP, for which it spoke, have been and remain leading institutions of social progress. The growth of the NAACP during Roy Wilkins' time, from 25,000 members in the 1930's to 400,000 in the 1970's, is well know. But this organizational achievement is only part of his story, only part of the reason Congress should honor him. The key part is the tenacity with which Roy Wilkins held to two goals: racial equality and nonviolence.

Looking back, it is remarkable—a sign of his idealism—that Roy Wilkins was able to retain these goals. In 1934, he was arrested in Washington for leading a march on the Office of the Attorney General, Homer S. Cummings—President Franklin D. Roosevelt's Attorney General, one might add. Lynchings of black Americans then occurred at a rate of some 35 per year; yet Cummings had failed to include lynching on the agenda of the National Conference on Crime. Wilkins' response to lynchings in 1934 characterized the method and determination of the civil rights movement which would follow for three decades, namely, organized acts of peaceful resistance to injustice.

I imagine that the strength and reserve required to face peacefully the violence against black Americans in the 1930's enabled Roy Wilkins to resist a more subtle and potentially more destructive challenge from within the civil rights movement in the 1960's. I refer to calls for black separatism which grew out of the civil rights movement of later days. Were it not for the strength and commitment of Roy Wilkins and others, the civil rights movement in the 1960's might have torn this country apart, doing damage which one shudders to imagine.

Roy Wilkins' character mirrored the values of strength and restraint which dominated his political action. Arnold Aronson, a long time colleague of Roy Wilkins, reminded those at Wilkins' funeral of an incident which expressed the perfect mix of Wilkins' personality and his politics. When a Washington, DC, hotel refused a room to Roy Wilkins, he protested vigorously to the manager, without pounding, without threatening, without yelling. When he finished, the hotel manager said, "Mr. Wilkins, I hope you succeed in getting a law passed that will make us all do what is right." Roy Wilkins did just that, and he did so more than once.

Aronson reminded us that the first such victory, the Civil Rights Act of 1957, was not perfect, measured by the legitimate demands of its advocates. But Wilkins' strength as a negotiator brought passage of this bill despite the dissatisfaction, and this set an example for civil rights legislation which marked some of the great moments in the history of the U.S. Congress.

In his autobiography, standing fast, Roy Wilkins describes just one of these great acts, passage of the 1964 Civil Rights Act:

> The Civil Rights Act was a measure for the people by the people. If Congress had not passed it, I don't think Negro Americans would ever have recovered from the injustice. Their faith in the Constitution and in orderly democratic processes had already been tested almost beyond endurance . . . The Civil Rights Act became a Magna Carta for the race, a splendid monument for the cause of human rights.

That was precisely what Roy Wilkins' life was about: the struggle for human rights, for dignity in a sometimes cruel world. His life was also about America, the notions of equality and freedom that this Nation should and can embody.

It is only fitting to close with Roy Wilkins' own words:

> We are proud of our race, of our color, of our history as Americans. We are so proud of it that we demand that it be accepted on an equality with every other minority or majority in this nation. We want to stand on an equal footing with our fellow Americans and help make our country what it was supposed to be

Madam President, I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this measure. It is only fitting that the Congress recognize Roy Wilkins' many and lasting contributions to the Nation by passing legislation to mint a gold medal in his honor.

Since we are voting on a House bill, it is not possible to have Senate sponsors of the measure. But I know that my good friend, the junior Senator from New York (Mr. D'AMATO), would wish to be associated with passage of this bill, as would the Senators from Minnesota (Mr. BOSCHWITZ and Mr. DURENBERGER), Mr. Wilkens having grown up in Minnesota, and later moving to New York, where his widow, Mrs. Wilkens, now resides.

I thank the majority leader and minority leader for their courtesy in helping to bring this bill to a vote.

Mr. BAKER. Madam President, I commend the Senator from New York for his urging consideration of this matter. May I say that for several days the Senator from New York has brought this matter to my attention. I am happy to say that his perseverance and the good will of a number of other Senators finally permitted us to clear this matter and bring it to the attention of the Senator at this time.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Madam President, I am pleased that passage of this measure has been taken on the occasion of the 75th anniversary of the founding of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, of which Mr. Wilkins was so long a distinguished leader.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Madam President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. BAKER. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

RULES COMMITTEE DISCHARGED FROM CONSIDERATION OF HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 295

Mr. BAKER. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the Rules Committee be discharged from further consideration of House Concurrent Resolution 295, to permit the 1984 "Olympic Torch Relay" to be run through the U.S. Capitol Grounds, and that the measure be placed on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SMOKEY BEAR WEEK

Mr. BAKER. Madam President, if the minority leader does not object, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of calendar No. 838, Senate Joint Resolution 273.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be stated by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution (S.J. Res. 273) to designate the week of May 13, 1984, as "Smokey Bear Week".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution.

AMENDMENT NO. 3051

(Purpose: To change the date of "Smokey Bear Week")

Mr. BYRD. Madam President, I send to the desk an amendment on behalf of Mr. HEFLIN.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from West Virginia (Mr. BYRD), for the Senator from Alabama (Mr. HEFLIN), proposes an amendment numbered 3051.

Mr. BYRD. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 2, strike out line 3 and insert in lieu thereof "That the week of August 5, 1984, through August 11, 1984, is".

Amend the title so as to read: Joint resolution to designate the week of August 5, 1984, through August 11, 1984, as "Smokey Bear Week."

Mr. HEFLIN. Madam President, we have had overwhelming support for our week in commemoration of Smokey Bear. Over 40 Senators have cosponsored this legislation, and I am hopeful that our resolution will pass the Senate. Due to the shortness of time for this resolution's consideration by the House of Representatives, I am offering an amendment to change the date of the commemoration from the week of May 13 to 19 to the week of August 5 to 11. August 9 marks the 40th birthday of the introduction of Smokey Bear into the cooperative forest fire protection campaign and, accordingly, I believe that will be an appropriate time for this celebration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 3051) was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as amended.

The preamble was agreed to.

The joint resolution and preamble are as follows:

S.J. RES. 273

Whereas August 9, 1984, marks the fortieth anniversary of the introduction of Smokey Bear into the Cooperative Forest Fire Protection campaign through the efforts of the United States Department of Agriculture Forest Service, The Advertising Council, and the National Association of State Foresters;

Whereas May 23, 1984, marks the thirty-second anniversary of President Harry S Truman signing the Act to enact section 711 of title 18, United States Code, protecting the use of the character Smokey Bear;

Whereas The Smokey Bear program has demonstrated the success of the United States Department of Agriculture Forest Service, The Advertising Council, and the National Association of State Foresters in producing a unique public service campaign to create and maintain public awareness for the prevention of forest fires;

Whereas The Smokey Bear program has encouraged children across the Nation to prevent wildfires by becoming junior forest rangers;

Whereas several generations of children have been taught about Smokey Bear and have become responsible adults who are careful with fire;

Whereas since the establishment of the Smokey Bear program in 1944, the damage caused by forest fires has been reduced from ten million acres to three million acres in 1981, saving over $20,000,000,000 for United States taxpayers; and

Whereas the Smokey Bear program on August 9, 1984 enters the forty-first year of successful stewardship of forests in the United States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the week of May 13, 1984, through May 19, 1984, is designated "Smokey Bear Week" and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation recognizing the successful efforts of the organizations and people involved in the Smokey Bear program and calling upon the people of the United States to observe such week with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

TVA HELPS CONTROL THE TENNESSEE FLOOD

Mr. BAKER. Madam President, Smokey Bear will have no problems today. I may say, parenthetically, that I am told that in my native State of Tennessee, for the first time in the 50-year history of the Tennessee Valley Authority, the theoretical and mythical 100-year flood occurred, and it was an extraordinary event.

Fortunately, there was no loss of life from the flood directly, and there was no great property damage, which is a great tribute to that agency and their ability to control that flood. Other States, I believe, have not been as fortunate.

Madam President, too often we in government are quick to criticize public institutions as being ineffective, burdensome, and never accomplishing what they were set up to do.

This has not been the case with the Tennessee Valley Authority.

Just the past several days, those of us from Tennessee have witnessed the benefits the flood-control program that was ushered in with the advent of TVA has meant to our region of the country. Over 6 inches of rain fell in Tennessee during the last 72 hours, which could have meant high loss of property and possibly the loss of lives. I am happy to report that TVA, with its system of dams, was able to keep the water levels within reasonable limits resulting in a minimum of damage to property and no loss of lives.

Witnessing the largest May flood in its 50-plus-year history, TVA has worked around the clock to lower the water levels in its reservoirs. It has been estimated that without the TVA system of dams, water levels in Chattanooga, TN, could have reached a crest level of 50 feet instead of the estimated 35-foot mark.

With clearing weather expected, most of those families that have been evacuated from their homes in Tennessee will be able to return.

I, along with my colleague, Senator SASSER, stand ready to work with Tennessee's Governor, Lamar Alexander, in supporting any request that he may make for emergency assistance for those areas affected by these weather conditions.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. BAKER. Madam President, I have one final matter. I inquire of the minority leader if he is prepared to clear this one item as if in executive session.

Mr. BYRD. Yes.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the minority leader.

REMOVAL OF INJUNCTION OF SECRECY

Mr. BAKER. Madam President, as in executive session, I ask unanimous consent that the injunction of secrecy be removed from the Convention on the Transfer of Sentenced Persons (Treaty Document No. 98-23), transmitted to the Senate by the President on May 7, 1984; and ask that the treaty be considered as having been read the first time; that it be referred, with accompanying papers, to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed; and that the President's message be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The message of the President is as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

With a view to receiving the advice and consent of the Senate to ratification, I transmit herewith the Convention on the Transfer of Sentenced Persons drawn up within the Council of Europe by a committee of experts from member States and observers from the United States and Canada, as adopted by the Council of Ministers, and signed on behalf of the United States at Strasbourg on March 21, 1983.

The provisions of the Convention are explained in a report of the acting Secretary of State which accompanies this letter. The major advantages of a multilateral treaty on this subject are that it provides uniform procedures for transfer of sentenced persons and saves the resources that would be required to negotiate and bring into force bilateral treaties with a substantial number of member States of the Council of Europe in whose jails approximately one fourth of our citizens imprisoned abroad are serving sentences.

I recommend that the Senate give favorable consideration to this treaty at an early date.

S. 2638. A bill to provide for research relating to the control of gypsy moths, to assist States and local communities in controlling gypsy moth infestations, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

GYPSY MOTH CONTROL ACT OF 1984

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the Gypsy Moth Control Act of 1984, a bill to establish a 5-year gypsy moth research program and a 10-year suppression program. I am pleased to have as cosponsors of this measure Senators BRADLEY, D'AMATO, HATFIELD, HEINZ, JEPSEN, LEVIN, MELCHER, and RIEGLE.

Those of us from the Northeast are all too familiar with the voracious appetite of the gypsy moth. Very soon, gypsy moth larvae will emerge from egg masses and, in response to light, climb into the crowns of trees. Then, suspended from silken threads, the newly hatched larvae will disperse and migrate, and begin to feed in earnest. During their 2-month maturation through a series of instars, gypsy moth caterpillars will devour up to 40 inches of foliage daily, feeding on oak, hickory, poplar, birch, beech, and maple leaves, as well as pine needles and hemlocks. Gypsy moth caterpillars in the West have eaten California oak, coastal manzanita, and low shrubbery. Because the insect is able to feed successfully on both hardwoods and conifers, there are literally hundreds of host plants throughout the United States.

Gypsy moths first appeared in this country in 1869 when Dr. Leopold Trouvelot, a French scientist, brought some to Massachusetts in an attempt to crossbreed them with silkworms. He hoped to produce a disease-resistant silkworm, but he failed. Several of the caterpillars escaped.

Mr. President, the gypsy moth was introduced into the United States absent its natural parasites and predators. Consequently, it could breed rapidly, and did—the first significant defoliation occurred in 1889. The insect has many attributes that have increased its viability: high reproductive potential; the ability to feed on a wide variety of trees and shrubs; and various behavioral and morphological traits that enhance survivial. Additionally, human influences such as land clearing, heavy cutting and burning, and urban sprawl seem to have benefitted the pest.

Today, the gypsy moth is well established in the Northeast as a serious defoliator of forest, fruit, and shade trees and ornamentals. Moreover, the insect is expanding its range. It is now distributed in western New York and Pennsylvania, and as far South as Maryland. Virginia, West Virginia, and Michigan are considered to be generally infested. Last year, isolated infestations occured in California, Florida, Illinois, Indiana, Minnesota, Missouri, North Carolina, Oregon, South Carolina, Tennessee, Washington, and Wisconsin. Prior to last year, isolated infestations were discovered in Alabama, Arkansas, and Nebraska.

In the Northeast, the gypsy moth's biggest impact has been on backyards—denuding shale and ornamental trees, littering pools and lawn furniture, and irritating people's skin. But beyond these nuisances, the gypsy moth poses a grave threat to urban, State, and commercial forests. Infestations in the South and Midwest threaten the commercial oak and hickory stands that produce the raw materials for hardwood furniture. One shudders to think what would happen if the insect were to become as firmly entrenched in California and the Pacific Northwest.

Mr. President, Congress first appropriated funds to combat gypsy moths in 1906. Since then, the Federal commitment has been sporadic, and usually responsive only to the immediate problem, at best. Clearly, such a haphazard approach has been inadequate: 52 million acres have been defoliated since national records were first compiled in 1924; 28.4 million acres have been defoliated in the last 4 years alone.

The legislation I introduce today with my distinguished colleagues is designed to insure that the Federal commitment to research and combat the gypsy moth will be a sustained one, funded at adequate levels.

U.S. Forest Service gypsy moth research is funded at $2.8 million for fiscal year 1984. The Gypsy Moth Control Act would amend the Forest and Rangeland Renewable Resources Research Act of 1978—Public Law 95-307—to authorize the current program through fiscal year 1989 at $3 million annually.

Federal research has proven to be a good investment, with applications far beyond gypsy moth control. Pioneering work concerning the occurrence and behavior of vertebrate and invertebrate parasites and predators was conducted early in this century. So, too, was research into silvicultural control methods and the proper management of infested woodlots. Initial research into population dynamics was undertaken prior to 1920, as well.

More recently, extensive research has led to the development of techniques to establish sterile males into gypsy moth populations. And tremendous progress has been made in the manufacture of synthetic pheromones—sex attractants—and microbial pathogens. The use of these techniques and agents could revolutionize pest control, reducing our dependence upon chemical pesticides.

The Gypsy Moth Control Act would promote further development and refinement of these environmentally benign biological controls. Emphasis would be placed on solving technology transfer problems that hinder greater use of bacterial and viral agents.

The effort to eradicate or contain the gypsy moth has been as unprecedented as the associated research, and oftimes as important. The widespread use—and subsequent ban—of Paris green, lead arsenate, and DDT were all precipitated by significant explosions in gypsy moth populations. A Federal domestic quarantine was imposed in 1912 to prevent the gypsy moth's Southern and Western migration, and was successful for many years. More importantly, most significant breakthroughs in aerial spray technology have been associated with efforts to suppress the pest.

The Gypsy Moth Control Act would amend the Cooperative Forestry Assistance Act of 1978—Public Law 95-313—to authorize a 10-year suppression program through fiscal year 1994, funded at $10 million annually. At present, roughly $4 million in Federal funds is earmarked for the Forest Service/State cooperative gypsy moth suppression program. This is not enough. States today are expected to assume 75 percent of the costs of suppression programs carried out on non-Federal public lands. Unfortunately, such a requirement discourages many financially strapped States from participating in the program.

Under the proposed legislation, the State share of the costs would be reduced 25 to 50 percent. This increase in Federal assistance is necessary if the States are to embark on expanded, effective programs. Private landowners would continue to be responsible for one-half of the costs of programs carried out on their lands.

Mr. President, the gypsy moth is perhaps the Nation's most destructive forest pest. The annual environmental, economic, and aesthetic damage is enormous. The isolated infestations that have occurred over the past few years indicate that the gypsy moth problem is no longer confined to the Northeast; it is rapidly becoming national in scope. A sustained Federal effort to research and suppress the pest is not only desirable; it is imperative. The Gypsy Moth Control Act will initiate this effort. I urge my colleagues to support this measure.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2638

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Gypsy Moth Control Act of 1984".

FINDINGS AND PURPOSES

SEC. 2. (a) Congress finds that—

(1) since its accidental introduction into the United States in 1869, the gypsy moth has caused significant environmental damage at tremendous economic cost;

(2) gypsy moths defoliated approximately 2.4 million acres of forest land in the United States during 1983, severely damaging or threatening urban, State, and commercial hardwood forests;

(3) many important technological developments and precedents have been associated with efforts to eradicate or contain gypsy moths, particularly in regard to aerial spray technology and methods of biological control; and

(4) sustained funding and commitment of resources is necessary for effective gypsy moth research and the development of sound pest management programs relating to the gypsy moth.

(b) The purposes of this Act are to—

(1) provide for an expanded and accelerated program of research into the nature, effect, and control of gypsy moth infestations, with particular attention to methods that use biological controls;

(2) assist State and local efforts to identify new gypsy moth populations and assess the size of current populations; and

(3) assist State and local efforts to develop and carry out programs to eradicate or contain gypsy moth populations, particularly those programs that use biological controls.

GYPSY MOTH RESEARCH

SEC. 3. The Forest and Rangeland Renewable Resources Research Act of 1978 is amended by—

(1) inserting immediately after section 6 (16 U.S.C. 1645) a new section 6A as follows:

"SPECIAL GYPSY MOTH RESEARCH PROGRAM

"SEC. 6A. (a) The Secretary shall establish and implement a special five-year program of research under this Act into the nature, effect, and control of gypsy moth infestations. Research conducted under the special program shall be directed toward developing appropriate technology for more effective and cost-efficient eradication or control of gypsy moth populations. Special emphasis shall be given to the development of (1) gypsy moth suppression methods that use biological controls and (2) technology that is appropriate for applications on non-Federal public and private forest land, including small nonindustrial parcels of forest land.

"(b) In implementing the special research program provided for under this section, the Secretary shall combine ongoing research projects with additional research projects, as appropriate to ensure the achievement of the objectives of the special research program.

"(c) At the completion of the special research program provided for under this section, the Secretary shall submit a report to Congress (1) on the operation of the program and the results of the research projects conducted under the program, and (2) stating the Secretary's recommendations with respect to additional research efforts necessary to improve gypsy moth suppression efforts.

"(d) There are hereby authorized to be appropriated $3,000,000 for each of the fiscal years during the period beginning October 1, 1984, and ending September 30, 1989, to carry out the provisions of this section."; and

(2) in section 7 (16 U.S.C. 1646), striking out "There are" and inserting in lieu thereof "Except as otherwise provided in section 6A of this Act, there are".

GYPSY MOTH CONTROL ASSISTANCE

SEC. 4. The Cooperative Forestry Assistance Act of 1978 is amended by inserting immediately after section 5 (16 U.S.C. 2104) a new section 5A as follows:

"GYPSY MOTH CONTROL

"SEC. 5A. (a) The Secretary shall develop and implement a special gypsy moth control assistance program under this Act, to be in effect during the ten-year period beginning October 1, 1984, and ending September 30, 1994, to encourage managers of non-Federal public and private forest land to develop and carry out efforts to eradicate or control gypsy moth populations on such lands.

"(b) In implementing the special assistance program under this section, the Secretary shall, in cooperation with State foresters or equivalent State officials, subdivisions of States, agencies, institutions, organizations, or individuals managing non-Federal forest land—

"(1) conduct surveys to detect and appraise gypsy moth populations affecting non-Federal forest land, or share in the cost of the conduct of such surveys by State foresters or equivalent State officials, as provided in subsection (c) of this section;

"(2) determine the biological, chemical, and mechanical measures necessary to eradicate or control such gypsy moth populations on non-Federal forest land, giving special emphasis, as appropriate, to gypsy moth suppression methods that use biological controls and the application of appropriate technology for more effective and cost-efficient eradication or control of gypsy moth populations on such forest land developed under the special research program established under section 6A of the Forest and Rangeland Renewable Resources Research Act of 1978; and

"(3) assist States, subdivisions of States, agencies, institutions, organizations, and individuals managing non-Federal forest land in developing and carrying out programs to eradicate or control gypsy moth populations by sharing in the cost of implementing such programs, as provided in subsection (d) of this section, and providing technical information, advice, and related assistance to such entities.

"(c) The Secretary shall make available to State foresters or equivalent State officials cost share assistance to facilitate the conduct by such officials of surveys to identify new gypsy moth populations and assess the size of existing populations affecting non-Federal public and private forest land. Such cost share assistance shall be made available to each State on an annual basis, through the end of the fiscal year ending September 30, 1994, and shall be used to cover a portion of the cost of State technical forest insect survey staffs and associated operating costs involved in the conduct of gypsy moth identification and assessment surveys and evaluations and the reporting on gypsy moth infestations, and the making of recommendations on the control thereof, to managers of non-Federal forest land. The percentage of such annual costs to be shared shall be that percentage, not to exceed 50 percent, of the costs that the Secretary determines necessary and appropriate to facilitate the conduct of such surveys and related activities.

"(d) The Secretary shall make available, to States, subdivisions of States, agencies, institutions, organizations, and individuals managing non-Federal public or private forest land, cost share assistance in developing and carrying out programs to eradicate or contain gypsy moth populations. Such cost share assistance shall be made available to such entities, under agreements, through the end of the fiscal year ending September 30, 1994, and shall be used to cover a portion of the cost of such programs as set forth in the agreements. The percentage of the costs to be shared under an agreement shall be that percentage (not less than 50 percent nor more than 75 percent with respect to any program carried out on non-Federal public forest land and not to exceed 50 percent of such costs with respect to any program carried out on private forest land) that the Secretary determines necessary and appropriate to facilitate the development and conduct of such programs.

"(e) The Secretary may issue such regulations as the Secretary determines necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.

"(f) There are hereby authorized to be appropriated $10,000,000 for each of the fiscal years during the period beginning October 1, 1984, and ending September 30, 1994, to carry out the provisions of this section.".●

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to cosponsor legislation offered by my distinguished colleague, the senior Senator from New York. This legislation, which would extend through 1989 the gypsy moth research program and provide $10 million per annum to fund specific eradication efforts is a much needed measure.

As many of my colleagues are aware, this pest threatens the forests of the Northeastern United States to a degree only exceeded by acid rain. I am personally committed to seeing the Federal Government maintain its proper role in the control, and eventual eradication, of this problem.

In this decade alone, millions of acres of trees have been defoliated by the gypsy moth. This pest destroys the natural beauty of the Adirondacks, leaving trees that look like stubble on the landscape. The Federal Government has an obligation to assist in the control of this menace.

I urge my colleagues to swiftly pass this vital legislation in order to prevent further damage to one of the most beautiful areas of this country.●

● Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I am delighted to join with my colleague from New York today in sponsoring the Gypsy Moth Control Act of 1984. Until 1982, outbreaks of gypsy moths in my State were unheard of. The moth has been a great problem in Eastern States for many years, and great damage has been inflicted on forests, nurseries, and homeowners' trees and bushes in those States.

That situation unfortunately has changed. In 1982, small infestations of gypsy moths were discovered in Marion County by the Oregon State Department of Agriculture. Isolated eradication attempts were made, and the problem was thought to be under control. It appears that the egg masses were brought into Oregon by persons moving there from the Eastern part of the country. However, it was apparent in 1983 that the moth was spreading rapidly, and the city of Salem was sprayed for the pest. Control efforts are still not having a great impact, and outbreaks this year have occurred in the Portland and Corvallis areas, and again in the Salem area.

I am very concerned about this new pest and have worked to secure funding, on a cost-sharing basis with my State, to undertake eradication programs. This year, $250,000 has been allocated to Oregon for control methods, primarily the spraying of bacillus thuringiensis, a biological control agent. Although the gypsy moth prefers deciduous trees and plants as its food source, it has been known to attack conifers, which could prove deadly to my State's economy, because much of it is forested with these types of trees.

This legislation authorizes both a research and eradication program through the Department of Agriculture at funding levels that should begin to control the pest. The cost-sharing aspect of the bill for control efforts is especially appealing, as Oregon already has made sound commitments to help in gypsy moth control programs.

One last key element of this bill is the research aspect. It has become abundantly clear to me that the public is very concerned about the use of chemical sprays to control pests of all kinds. Citizens in my State are very concerned about the short- and long-term effects of chemical sprays on human health, and every effort must be made to find alternative nontoxic pest control methods. This bill certainly is a step in the right direction.

I encourage my colleagues on the Senate Agriculture Committee to move expeditiously on this proposal.●

● Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I am pleased to cosponsor the Gypsy Moth Control Act of 1984, which is being introduced today.

Although the gypsy moth destruction has been the greatest in the Northeastern part of the United States, the State of Michigan faces the threat of the spread of gypsy moths.

In 1980, gypsy moths defoliated only 19 acres in Michigan. The damage spread to 452 acres in 1983. The State of Michigan stands to lose many valuable acres of oak to gypsy moth infestations. Two commodities in the State are already subject to quarantines by other States and Canada—timber and Christmas trees. While only 2 counties are currently subject to defoliation, 12 counties in Michigan are under a low-risk quarantine and these counties are being closely watched for the infestation of gypsy moths.

This legislation would expand the Federal funding for gypsy moth research from its current level of $2.8 million in fiscal year 1984 to $3 million annually through fiscal year 1989. The State of Michigan was involved in the testing program implemented by the Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service, which introduced sterile male techniques. According to the State Department of Agriculture, the testing in Michigan proved to be a very effective way of reducing the spreading of gypsy moths.

The Gypsy Moth Control Act also increases funding for the gypsy moth suppression program, which would be funded at $10 million annually through fiscal year 1994. The State share of the suppression program is now 75 percent. This legislation brings the State share to 25 to 50 percent. If we want our States to participate and expand their current programs, I believe we must reduce the State share to a reasonable level.

The gypsy moth destruction has been well documented in the Northeast and threatens many other States. The economic and environmental consequences from the destruction of these pests demand a strong Federal program.

I urge my colleagues to support this important legislation.●

By Mr. BOSCHWITZ:

S. 2639. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 with respect to the taxation of employee awards; to the Committee on Finance.

TAXATION OF EMPLOYEE AWARDS

● Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, I am introducing today legislation to amend to Internal Revenue Code with respect to the taxation of employee awards. The bill offers a simple, straightforward, nondiscriminatory solution to the problem of the taxability of employee awards and is supported by a wide array of hundreds of companies around the country in the incentive industry.

Present law (section 274 (b)(1)(C) and (b)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code (as amended by ERTA), allows an employer to deduct up to $400, and in the case of qualified plan awards, up to $1,600, of the cost of employee achievement awards; that is, items of tangible personal property awarded by reason of an employee's length of service, productivity or safety achievement. It seems clear that the intent of the sponsors of the ERTA amendments to section 274(b) of the Code was that eligible gifts should be excluded from an employee's income. Absent such an exclusion from the income of an employee recipient, the ERTA amendments will have little, if any, practical effect.

The ERTA provision, however, did not provide for any exclusion of the value of employee awards from the recipient's gross income, and the Internal Revenue Service has taken the position that an award, other than one of nominal value, such as a Christmas turkey or ham, is taxable to the employee. The potential taxation to employees of achievement awards brings into question the viability of these award programs by making the awards far less attractive to the recipient.

Section 828 of the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984, Tax Treatment of Employee Awards, would create a statutory exclusion from income for so-called traditional employee gifts such as watches and emblematic jewelry. This proposal would result in all other types of employee awards being taxable to the employee recipient.

This restrictive proposal clearly favors one segment of the incentive industry over all others. This inequality of treatment has no foundation in the original section 274(b) of the Internal Revenue Code, nor the ERTA amendments to that section. There is simply no justification for restricting an employer's ability to make a meaningful noncash award to its employees or for favoring one type of property over another. Indeed, the absence of adequate choices could have the effect of not motivating employees, whose personal tastes would not be satisfied by the restricted items offered, to achieve the accomplishments the employer wishes to award.

Furthermore, characterizing gifts such as watches and emblematic jewelry as traditional and all other gifts as nontraditional ignores the realities of the incentive industry. Award programs, which make use of a wide range of consumer products, have been in existence for well over 50 years.

Employee incentive awards should be promoted because such awards produce an important national benefit. There is little doubt that the recognition of employee achievement serves to strengthen the morale of the work force, fosters pride on the part of individual employees, and enhances employer-employee relationships. The Finance Committee proposal, however, is not the solution to the problem of the taxability of employee awards. In addition to its arbitrary restrictions on types of awards, it is estimated the proposal would result in a loss of $300,000,000 in revenue.

My bill offers a simple, straightforward, nondiscriminatory solution to the problem of the taxability of employee awards. The proposal draws on the language of section 274(b)(1)(C) of the code, and would exclude from an employee-recipient's income up to $250, and, in the case of qualified plan awards, up to $400 of the value of all awards deductible to an employer under that section. These dollar limits are substantially lower than those provided for in the Finance Committee proposal. My bill may even raise revenue because it will tax all award items above the $250 and $400 limits for the first time.●

By Mr. GOLDWATER:

S. 2642. A bill to suspend until July 1, 1989, the duty on yttrium bearing ores, materials, and compounds containing by weight more than 19 percent but less than 85 percent yttrium oxide equivalent; to the Committee on Finance.

SUSPENSION OF DUTIES ON YTTRIUM

● Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, I am introducing today a bill which would suspend for 5 years the duty on yttrium bearing ores and materials and enable domestic companies to fairly compete with foreign competitors.

At the present time, there are no significant domestic sources in the United States of yttrium concentrates, which are used in the production of high-purity yttrium aluminum garnets and yttrium oxide. Yttrium oxide is used to make yttrium aluminum garnets and yttrium iron garnets—products vital in the manufacture of certain items for our national defense. Among these products are defense warning system receivers and alloys for jet engines. Other applications include lasers, refractory insulating materials, strategic superalloys, energy-saving fluorescent lights, and all color televisions.

Under U.S. tariff classification, U.S. refiners import yttrium oxide concentrates for refining at a duty of 6.6 percent, which is 2.1 percent above what foreign refiners pay to import refined high-purity yttrium oxide.

The yttrium oxide market is very competitive and U.S. refiners compete domestically and in foreign markets with foreign companies which have access to duty-free feedstock and which can import high-purity yttrium oxide this country at a current duty of 4.5 percent. Major foreign companies offering high-purity yttrium oxide in the United States include the large French Goverment-owned company, Rhone-Poulenc, China Rare Earths of the People's Republic of China, the Norwegian Co., Magon, partly owned by the Norwegian Government and Mitsubishi Chemical, and several Japanese processors.

The low profit margin and highly competitive nature of the business if forcing U.S. refiners and producers out of business. During the past decade, two U.S. refiners have permanently closed, and now only two refiners which produce high-purity yttrium oxide remain in business in the country: the Research Chemicals Division of the Nucor Corp. in Phoenix, AZ, and Molycorp, Inc., in Louviers, CO.

My bill is very simple. It would suspend until July 1, 1989, the duty on yttrium bearing ores, materials, and compounds containing by weight more than 19 percent, but less than 85 percent yttrium oxide equivalent. This legislation is necessary to preserve our domestic industry. I wish to emphasize at this point that the legislation does not propose any increased duty to protect our domestic industry, but simply suspends one so that our domestic yttrium refining industry can be competitive with foreign companies both here and abroad.

The Subcommittee on Trade of the House Ways and Means Committee has held hearings on a similar bill, H.R. 2667, and the administration supports this legislation.

I urge my colleagues to support the enactment of this legislation and ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2642

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That subpart B of part 1 of the Appendix to the Tariff Schedule of the United States (19 U.S.C. 1202) is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new item:

SEC. 2. The amendment made by the first section of this Act shall apply with respect to articles entered, or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption, on or after the fifteenth day after the date of the enactment of this Act.●

By Mr. CRANSTON (for himself and Mr. WILSON):

S. 2643. A bill to extend the service area for the San Luis unit of the Central Valley project, California, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

EXTENSION OF SERVICE AREA OF THE SAN LUIS UNIT OF THE CENTRAL VALLEY PROJECT, CALIFORNIA

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to extend the service area for the San Luis unit of the Central Valley project in California. Specifically, the bill includes the Pleasant Valley Water District lands in Fresno County in the San Luis unit service area. It also makes clear that the Pleasant Valley Water District has the right to apply for a loan under Public Law 84-130 if funds are available under that program. I am pleased that my colleague from California, Senator PETE WILSON, is joining me as a cosponsor of this legislation.

Last November, I introduced S. 2068 to include the Pleasant Valley Water District within the boundaries of the San Luis unit and to authorize funds for the construction of irrigation facilities in the district. Since then, I have received comments on the bill from various California water interests. The legislation being introduced today reflects those comments and suggested amendments. As a result, I believe it now enjoys broad support from the California water community.

The Pleasant Valley Water District comprises approximately 38,000 acres in the agriculturally rich San Joaquin Valley near Coalinga. The land has been farmed since the early 1900's using ground water for irrigation. The ground water, however, has been dropping and losing quality at such a rate that the area could return to desert within another generation. This situation combined with the devastating earthquake in Coalinga in May 1983 which damaged the district's pipes and wells raises a serious question as to whether the area can survive. But if Pleasant Valley can proceed to construct a water distribution system, the opportunity and stimulus for Coalinga's rebirth as a productive area should be at hand.

In the past it has not been feasible for Pleasant Valley Water District to build the needed distribution system because of the lack of participation by Standard Oil of California. The company owns almost half of the land in the district—17,000 acres—far exceeding the acreage limitation under Federal reclamation law. In October 1983, however, Standard agreed to sell its excess lands under recordable contracts—contingent upon its being able to retain its mineral rights—thereby enabling the district to seek Federal irrigation water.

Water for Pleasant Valley would come from facilities of the Central Valley project in northern California through the delta down the California aqueduct to the San Luis Reservoir. For a number of years the Department of the Interior and the State of California have been in disagreement about how much of this water is needed to insure delta water quality. Only when agreement is reached on the delta water needs will Pleasant Valley and other districts be able to request a firm supply of any available water. But without being in the service area of the San Luis unit, the district cannot even do the preliminary work with the Bureau of Reclamation to begin the distribution system program. This legislation will permit the Pleasant Valley Water District to do this necessary planning to enter into an agreement with the Bureau of Reclamation for a permanent water supply when it is available. It does not give Pleasant Valley any priority for that water or any advantage over other districts within the service area of the San Luis unit.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill appear at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2643

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 1(a) of the Act of June 3, 1960 (Public Law 86-488; 74 Stat. 156) is amended by inserting in the first sentence thereof after the word "California," the phrase "and the area within the boundaries of the Pleasant Valley Water District in Fresno County, California, as such boundaries now exist or as they may be changed from time to time in accordance with applicable State law and as approved by the Secretary of the Interior.".

SEC. 2. Section 8 of the Act of June 3, 1960 (Public Law 86-488; 74 Stat. 160) is amended by inserting after the last sentence thereof the phrase "Provided further that the work to be undertaken pursuant to the first section of this Act in the Pleasant Valley Water District may be financed in accordance with the Act of July 4, 1955 (Public Law 84-130; 69 Stat. 245), as amended.".

By Mr. PRESSLER:

S. 2645. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code to provide for airline consumer protection; to the Committee on Finance.

AIRLINE PASSENGER CONSUMER PROTECTION ACT

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, I am introducing legislation today addressing an issue of great concern to hundreds of thousands of American air traveling consumers.

Since airline deregulation legislation was passed in 1978, there has been a great deal of change in that industry—some good and some bad. I opposed airline deregulation then—and continue to oppose it—for a number of reasons. In my home State of South Dakota, for example, we have suffered a great loss in air service and rates have skyrocketed. I am currently working on a number of fronts to address those problems. But, the focus of the legislation I am introducing today, is of such timely importance that literally thousands of air passengers are in risk of losing hundreds of dollars each. This issue is the problem of airline bankruptcy.

Recently, we have seen a growing number of bankruptcies by air carriers, including Braniff, Continental, Pacific Express, Air Vermont, and many other smaller carriers. Just last month a small carrier in my home State of South Dakota filed for bankruptcy. Several air carriers still flying are experiencing financial difficulties caused by the economy and by operating in a highly competitive, deregulated environment. Some of these carriers could also wind up in bankruptcy in the months ahead. Indeed, I would predict, Mr. President, that before a year is up, we will experience another bankruptcy by a major air carrier, resulting in a great financial loss to hundreds or even thousands of consumers in a single day.

Now proponents of deregulation say that this is simply how the free market system works. If a company is not being managed well enough, it should go bankrupt. Well, Mr. President, I agree with part of that reasoning, but the one big problem is that, oftentimes, many innocent consumers are greatly harmed in the process.

Let me stress at this point that this is not an industry bailout bill. The defaulting carrier would not receive 1 penny as a result of this bill. It is aimed at the consumer. These are business people, tourists, traveling families, and others for whom an airplane trip is a very substantial investment. We are talking about hundreds—in some cases thousands—of dollars per person. As chairman of the Senate Subcommittee on Business, Trade, and Tourism, I know what a drastic impact this could have not only on the individual consumer, but also on the many travel- and tourism-related small businesses across the country.

These are people who, in good faith, purchase tickets, but are unable to use them because of the subsequent bankruptcy of the airline. Under current bankruptcy law, the best they can expect is to occupy last place on the list of unsecured creditors.

In the past, the airlines themselves addressed this problem through the default protection program (DPP). The Air Traffic Conference of America had established the DPP to protect consumers in the event of situations such as bankruptcy filing, where the airline's service has been discontinued. However, this plan proved ineffective in dealing with the bankruptcy filing by Continental Airlines last September. Since then, all major carriers have withdrawn from the DPP, leaving the consumer without any recourse. Additionally, travel agents had previously been able to buy default protection insurance to protect themselves and their customers in the event of an airline failure. Now, however, I understand that such insurance is no longer available since the collapse of the default protection plan.

I have discussed this problem at great length with one of my State's most respected travel experts, Mrs. Melva (Mel) Pederson, of Watertown, SD. Mel is president of Pederson Travel Service, a 25-year-plus member of the American Society of Travel Agents, and chairman of my South Dakota Travel and Tourism Advisory Board. Her keen insight and experience in the travel industry have been invaluable to me as chairman of the Business, Trade, and Tourism Subcommittee. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that excerpts from recent correspondence I received from Mrs. Pederson and an article from Travel Weekly be inserted following my remarks. The experiences Mel has relayed to me confirm my suspicion that the traveling public is headed for a real economic catastrophe unless we act now.

I urge the Air Traffic Conference to examine ways to voluntarily protect the airline passenger consumer. Indeed, I would hope that we do not need any long-term Federal plan to resolve this problem. I understand that the airline industry is currently considering several voluntary industry proposals to adequately address this problem. I encourage them to step up efforts to work out this problem in the private sector. In the meantime, however, something must be done to bring stability to this situation and to protect the consumer from events over which they have no control.

My legislation will protect the interests of passengers left stranded and out-of-pocket because of an airline bankruptcy. The interests of these passengers clearly need some form of protection. Under present law, customers are left holding a ticket that other air carriers will not honor because they are unlikely to be reimbursed as unsecured creditors. The passenger today has no remedy. They may be stranded and penniless thousands of miles away from home. In some cases, where the carrier has been reorganized, the passenger may be offered the right to trade in the ticket for a new ticket. But, in many cases, the reorganized carrier has reduced operations and may no longer serve the passenger's intended destination. In the meantime, the consumer remains without remedy.

EXPLANATION AND PURPOSE

The purpose of this legislation is quite simple. It assures that members of the traveling public holding tickets on a bankrupt scheduled air carrier can have those tickets honored by other air carriers who continue to serve the intended destination. In return, these airlines would simply take a credit against the tax they pay into the airport and airway trust fund. As you know, we currently have billions of dollars in the trust fund. No additional taxes would have to be raised and no programs would have to be cut as a result of this proposal. In addition, this legislation allows for repayment of these funds into the trust fund, assuming the airline would subsequently settle its claims. The Secretary of the Treasury would, in effect, become a creditor of the bankrupt airline by acquiring the claim of the passenger against the bankrupt airline. The Secretary would then seek settlement of the claim in the regular bankruptcy proceeding. Any settlement achieved would be paid back into the trust fund.

This legislation has compelling logic. It provides a simple and direct remedy for thousands of consumers who would otherwise be stranded, inconvenienced, or lose the price of their ticket or tickets. It continues the present policy of providing substitute transportation first and ironing out reimbursement details later, to assure a smoothly functioning air travel system. It consolidates these individuals' claims against the bankrupt airline in an efficient manner to be pursued in accordance with bankruptcy law and procedure by the Secretary of the Treasury. No additional taxes would be raised and no programs or spending priorities would be adversely affected.

Other airlines who provide service to the consumer are reimbursed for the price of their equivalent service from the trust fund which is largely funded by the existing tax on tickets paid by the same airline passengers we are seeking to protect. The ticket purchaser may transfer the ticket to another person if, because of the passage of time, there is no reason for making the planned trip. The amendment provides a form of consumer insurance paid for by consumers who are the passengers on our Nation's airlines.

Mr. President, I would urge my colleagues to join me in support of this legislation, and ask unanimous consent that the full text of the bill appear following my correspondence from Mrs. Pederson.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PEDERSON TRAVEL SERVICE,
Watertown, SD, April 24, 1984.

Hon. LARRY PRESSLER,
407A Russell Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR LARRY: To briefly go over our telephone visit today regarding airline bankruptcies:

Not only the travel agents, but most of all the consumers, are in peril, paying for airline tickets, and then not being able to use them because of the default of an airline. The customer does not get his money back, nor does he have recourse to use the ticket on another airline, as was once possible before most airlines withdrew from the Default Protection Plan.

Today we received notice that Air Illinois, a small carrier based in Carbondale, Ill., has discontinued all scheduled passenger air service.

Each week we receive notice that certain airlines have withdrawn from ASP (Area Settlement Plan).

January 1, 1984.—National Commuter Airlines of Miami.

January 15, 1984.—Pocono Airlines of Avaco, PA.

December 27, 1983.—Devoe Airlines of Melbourne, FL.

January 1, 1984.—Pacific Cal Air of Oakland, CA.

January 29, 1984.—Air Vermont of Burlington, VT.

April 1, 1984.—Air Niugini of Honolulu.

And so on.

We in South Dakota were terribly concerned the last days of March 1984, when Republic Airlines threatened to shut down, following Continental's footsteps if the union did not come to terms with them.

When Continental defaulted we had several clients who lost their money because other airlines were not substituting for Continental in their city-pairs.

We need immediate emergency relief for everyone's sake—not only the travel agents, but especially the consumers.

Sincerely,

MELVA PEDERSON,
CTC, President.

HALLISSEY ASKS ATC TO APPROVE DPP REPLACEMENT PROGRAM

ASTA Senior Vice Chairman Joe Hallissey, CTC, this week called on the Air Traffic Conference to immediately approve an ATC bankruptcy protection system developed by the Special Task Force on Default Protection, a travel agency/airline group set up to find a replacement for the Default Protection Plan (DPP).

The task force, which ASTA initiated, has recommended a bankruptcy protection system funded from small contributions from both travel agents and airlines to reimburse passengers who are holding tickets on a bankrupt airline.

Although it would be more logical to have the system funded from a small ticket surcharge to be paid by consumers, Hallissey said it would be impossible to set up such a system quickly because Congress would have to adopt legislation.

"ASTA is so convinced of the pressing need for this type of protection that we are willing to support the proposal calling for travel agents to pay part of the cost for this protection, even though agents, unlike airlines, cannot pass this cost on to consumers," Hallissey said to the ATC.

According to Hallissey, "The important point for all ATC members to keep in mind is that we are all now living in a very dangerous situation. If any airline files for bankruptcy now, a great many passengers will be inconvenienced and they will turn in anger against all airlines and travel agents for failing to provide protection. ASTA feels this is the most serious problem hanging over the entire industry, and it is critical that action must be taken immediately to alleviate the danger."

Therefore, Hallissey asked ATC to call a special meeting as soon as possible to consider the report of the Special Task Force. "Once the plan is in effect, we could work together on refinements to improve it. The important thing now is to implement this plan as soon as possible," he said.

The DPP is virtually non-existent because most airlines have withdrawn their participation in the Plan. Recognizing the need to protect the public in the event of an airline bankruptcy, ASTA has been in the forefront of initiatives to develop an alternative to the DPP.

S. 2645

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

Section 4263 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (26 U.S.C. 4263) is amended by adding a new paragraph (g) at the end thereof to read as follows:

"(g) Every carrier providing taxable transportation as defined by section 4262 may take as a credit against the tax imposed by section 4261, an amount necessary to reimburse it for honoring tickets (other than free travel passes) previously issued to passengers for travel on any scheduled air carrier that later petitions for bankruptcy and is unable to provide the transportation purchased by the passenger. The amount of the credit shall not exceed the amount that the carrier would have received if it had charged that passenger for transporting on a stand-by or space-available basis. The United States shall succeed to all rights of the original ticket purchaser and shall become a creditor of the bankrupt air carrier for an amount equal to the credit that was taken for honoring the ticket of the bankrupt air carrier."

By Mr. SIMPSON:

S. 2646. A bill to amend the Rural Electricification Act of 1936 to insure the continued financial integrity of the Rural Electrification and Telephone Revolving Fund, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition and Forestry.

RURAL ELECTRIFICATION ACT AMENDMENTS

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I am today introducing a bill to amend the Rural Electrification Act. I believe this bill, at long last, provide a workable and permanent solution to the problems of the Rural Electrification and Telephone Revolving Fund, a solution which does not burden the taxpayers with yet another layer of deficits.

For some time now, this body has been considering legislation offered by our colleagues and strongly supported by the associations representing the rural electric and telephone borrowers. I salute those members for their efforts on behalf of the REA programs, because those programs have proven to be among the most successful ever created by this Government.

But I have been deeply concerned over the developing information which identifies the costs which would accompany this legislation, costs which have been pegged by competent authority at somewhere between $10 and $20 billion. Even more distracting has been the conclusion that even with these great costs, the fund will probably still go broke.

Various attempts have been made to correct the association-sponsored legislation, but with every new repair attempt, some new flaw arises. Now we have been told by knowledgeable sources that this legislation will actually result in erratic interest rates which could severely hamper the ability of REA borrowers to plan for their financing needs and which could indeed threaten the solvency of the REA Revolving Fund.

My bill offers us one way out of the maze caused by the original legislation. It creates a formula for determining the REA Revolving Fund rates which is stable, workable, and certainly fair and reasonable. It provides for a significant discretionary or hardship loan program. It does not rely on bold guesses about economic conditions 2, 3 or 4 years from now. And most appropriately of all, from any standpoint, it places the cost of the REA programs on the REA borrowers, where it belongs and where the REA borrowers have many times said that they want it.

The other great advantage of the bill is that it guarantees the availability of adequate funding for REA borrowers without pricing that money out of reach. With this measure in effect under current program size and cost of money conditions, the REA Revolving Fund would be fully self-sustaining with interest rates averaging about 2 percent below the Government's own cost of borrowing.

I feel this bill provides for a reasonable middle ground between the awesome costs which the previously introduced legislation would have entailed and the heavily reduced program size which the administration has proposed to submit as a solution to the REA Revolving Fund problem.

I urge my colleagues to support the legislation and I ask unanimous consent that a copy of my "Dear Colleague" letter and a section-by-section summary of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the materila was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, May 3, 1984.

DEAR COLLEAGUE: Having been previously toasted lightly on the legislative fires of immigration reform, nuclear regulation and chairing of the Veterans' Affairs Committee, I don't know why I should choose to tie myself to the stake for one last try—but hear me out on this one.

Next week several of your constituents (and mine!) will be in Washington, D.C. urging the very prompt and immediate passage of S. 1300, a bill which purports to assure the "self-sufficiency" of the Rural Electrification and Telephone Revolving Fund (RETRF). As that crew rides in from the west—and indeed that's from where many will be making the journey—you will be bombarded with information—and misinformation—that the various trade associations have been spreading diligently over the landscape about S. 1300 and its "enemies" who would destroy it.

I come from a state that has been magificently served by the REA over the years. One of the first national directors of that organization was one J.C. "Kid" Nichols, a Wyoming businessman, who was a dear and lifelong friend of mine. When this remarkable agency first embarked upon its mission in this country it was a stunning thing to observe. It literally changed the face of America. But after the extraordinary effort had been largely completed—when over 99 percent of rural America then received electrical energy—then some very creative financiers, accountants, lawyers and businessmen entered the fray. The complexity of the financing schemes and revolving fund capers of the REA would make an atomic scientist blanch. For they will have your eyes whirling like slot machine wheels as they patiently describe the remarkable and complex financing procedures of REA. Why shouldn't it be good—for few can really understand it.

CBOs (Certificates of Beneficial Ownership), borrowings, low-percent interest loans, financing commitments, off-budget borrowing and an extraordinary array of the most electrifying fiscal and credit crunching ways to electrify rural America. However, what will really electrify you is the real cost. I think you need to know that this "self-sufficiency" bill really does not compare in any way to what your constituents may have been informed. Bear with me for a moment. Let me relate some of the tales of woe that have been used to increase your fervor and your favor. Let's review the bidding. Here is the pitch presented by the trade associations who really have juiced up the citizens in America (if you will pardon that allusion!). Let's sort them out as "the pitch" and "the fact".

1. The Pitch: "Immediate action is needed right now to avert Rural Electrification and Telephone Revolving Fund bankruptcy."

The Fact: Indeed RETRF operations must be altered in order to assure the fund's long term solvency—but remember, we were always told that the ever generous "revolving fund" would "take care of everything" and that "everything" was in good order. We surely didn't get to this point of distress overnight and there is aboslutely no cogent reason to be rammed into action at this particular moment of the legislative year. Congress has already been mighty generous by delaying the RETRF deterioration for yet another year by appropriating $197.8 million to the fund in 1984. Those who are zealously fanning the flames and telling us to "act immediately" don't really want you to slow up long enough to consider any other solutions, or to really understand what S. 1300 is going to cost this country.

2. The Pitch: "This legislation was prepared by a 'blue-ribbon' committee including past REA administrators and the 'best minds' in the industry."

The Fact: This bill was not drafted by objective parties. It was certainly prepared by the craftiest and wiliest minds in or out of the industry, but it is proposed to really serve the special interest groups that will benefit most from it. Furthermore, while the "blue ribbon" committee may have agreed on the concept of it—the specific language of the bill was drafted by trade association technicians who see the present financing system in total disarray. Ah, and they always said it "wouldn't cost a nickel!"

3. The Pitch: "The $7.9 billion 'equity transfer' is not a 'forgiveness', and it really won't cost the Treasury or the taxpayer a cent."

The Fact: Try not to chuckle at that one. Even the Congressional Budget Office calls it a "forgiveness". So do the Congressional Research Service, the Government Accounting Office, the Office of Management and Budget, the U.S. Department of Agriculture and the Treasury. And each and every one of them also say that this "forgiveness" will cost the taxpayers literally billions of dollars. You might wish to ask your banker for this kind of an "equity transfer" on your home mortgage.

4. The Pitch: "The bill shows the borrowers' 'willingness' to pay a higher RETRF rate."

The Fact: Such "willingness" to pay higher RETRF rates is commendable. The real fact is that the technicians who sliced this rate-setting formula together would have pleased Rube Goldberg, for the rates under this bill will be too low to prevent the RETRF insolvency. Thus the bill really perverts the honest willingness of reliable borrowers to pay rates that are actually high enough to preserve the RETRF.

5. The Pitch: "Technical problems with the rate-setting formula have now been 'corrected' or 'fixed' in the amended House version".

The Fact: Borrowers have no idea whatsoever what is in store for them under the amended rate-setting formula. Extensive computer modeling of the House formula amendment shows that rates will be erratic, unpredictable, and quite subject to manipulation. The amended formula might have the possibility to work in theory, but it is more unlikely to work in actual practice. But the trade associations won't be too concerned about that because if it fails they'll simply bash our doors down again at some future time for some additional subsidies.

6. The Pitch: "This bill does not 'forgive' any borrower's current debt."

The Fact: That is right down the pike—an absolutely true statement and one that has never really been at issue. But the trade associations have used this plump "straw man" to divert our attention from just how this legislation reduces interest rates on future loans by only about 2 percent—compared with the rates which would be required without all of this new spirit of "forgiveness" and subsidy. Hear that once again please. All of these "forgivenesses" only reduce RETRF rates by 2 percent or less.

7. The Pitch: "Refinancing of the loan guarantees and REA borrowings from the Treasury is very 'fair' and 'won't cost the Treasury a penny.'"

The Fact: How a "downward-only", penalty free refinancing can be called "fair" is beyond my pale of comprehension. We do have a word for that out in Wyoming. A really "fair" proposal would have interest rates floating down and up with the government's cost of borrowing. The potential cost of this "one way" refinancing is staggering—easily in the billions of dollars. But the supporters of the measure say that these refinancings won't cost anything because Treasury won't permit them. Well if they won't be used, why not let's toss them out now?

8. The Pitch: "Even if this bill does 'cost a little', it's 'fair' (again that word) since cooperatives only get a fraction of the subsidies provided to other utilities."

The Fact: Here is an absolute flight from truth. Comparative subsidies have been studied by many organizations including the GAO and CRS. Only the trade associations continue to suggest that co-op subsidies are somehow less than those to the investor owned utilities—by use of a dazzling complex and analytical procedure. The trade associations would hope that certainly if they are to repeat this fiction enough, it will be accepted because it "sounds familiar."

And now the real capper:

The Pitch: "People who oppose this bill or would want to change it in any way are trying to 'turn off the lights' in rural America.

The Fact: This is the one that gets me. In a recent report by the Inspector General of the U.S.D.A. it was found that there were 54 co-ops which had 50 percent or more of their consumers living in Standard Metropolitan Statistical Areas. They are telling you or me that we dare not oppose any part of this legislation or question it or try to improve it because we will then be branded as an "enemy" of rural America—and that the ranchers and farmers will be there to meet us with a phalanx of pitchforks and shovels when we get back to the old home ground. Certainly there may still be rural citizens in the United States of America who require the extraordinary boons and benefits of electrical power—if so, then let us serve those people.

Let us create those long lines of power that serve only very few people and let us fully subsidize those and get that power out there to those less fortunate persons. But those persons are now very few and the cost of serving all of those people is really peanuts compared to this legislative package we are asked to swallow. I do only urge that the trade associations will spare me the imagery of the leather-faced lady in the tattered calico dress—with tangled and matted hair like Marjorie Main—mashing away on a wooden washboard using grandma's lye soap while the nearest light bulb glimmers some 50 miles away over the mountain. I will honestly want to take care of each and every one of those persons that the trade associations can produce, and will use taxpayer's money to do it. That I commit to—but I really balk when I see REA's peddling power to substantial corporations. One co-op in my own home state had 1982 power sales of 386,000 megawatt hours—and 354,000 of those hours (91.7 percent!) were sold to large industrial and commercial users and yet that co-op still qualifies for 2 percent REA loans.

That is not right or "fair" (an often used term in this debate and those usable by both sides!). It is a very real example of awesome and even arrogant special interest steam rolling—for now we are being "advised" that we have to think and vote the way the paymasters of an extraordinarily generous P.A.C. fund will tell us. And please know that I am the beneficiary of some of those P.A.C. funds—and I have also picked up an honorarium or two. But as thoughtful legislators—Democrats and Republicans alike—we should all be offended at the assertion that by our actions in question this bill, it is akin to ripping the old wires and insulators out of the chickenhouse.

I guess I must be a perverse rascal. I oppose this bill precisely because of what I am being told—that I dare not oppose it—that it would indeed be "political suicide" to get involved. And this is an election year for me! But I have been fed a long string of misrepresentations on this baby—about what this bill really does and how much it will really cost the taxpayers. Annie Landers had it right when she said, "Wake up and smell the coffee."

I know personally those fine gentlemen and gentlewomen who serve on the various boards of directors of REAs in my own State of Wyoming and there are a remarkable and dedicated lot of them. I also feel that many of them honestly don't have any concept of what this extraordinary "bailout" bill really is. For those persons are the "salt of the earth" types—the farmer, the rancher, or the small businessman, the guy that really makes America hum—and these are the same people that write us those wrenching, serious and searching letters saying, "Al, what are you going to do about that $200 billion deficit?" They just have to be searching their souls when they come out to Washington next week to visit with us on this measure.

I deeply believe that the trade associations have consciously or unconsciously misled the public about what this bill really does. And maybe they have been doing that for years. I would not like to think so. Ask your constituents when they hit town if they have been told that the Congressional Budget Office has found that this bill will cost their government over $10 billion bucks by the year 2010.

One of the reasons why we are up to our fannies in deficits (and for me that is a long way off the ground!) is because past Congresses have made some dazzling previous political decisions for us—"built in" this and "built in" that—like this commitment of 1984 dollars in legislation crafted many years ago. Take a look at those CBOs (Certificates of Beneficial Ownership) and where we go from here on them. In the year 2006 a first balloon payment of $353.6 million will become due. But nowhere in the proposed legislation is there any money provided for repayment of that principal amount. In fact, the House formula amendment specifically states that interest expense is to meet interest income—but how about the principal? When that first CBO comes due I hunch we will be asked for another simple conversion of "debt" into "equity". The total CBO amount now outstanding is approximately $3.5 billion.

We all ceremoniously wring our hands (and I do too, and I don't leave myself out) about the deficit and try and search, and grapple to figure out honestly how to make a "down payment" on it. And yet the trade associations that press for S. 1300 would have us decide in this year of 1984 to give away billions of 1985-2016 tax dollars to bail out an industry that doesn't even need to be bailed out. I have only labored in this vineyard for a bit over five years, but I have never seen one quite like this. This bill is a classic case study of how special interest groups—using a magnificent blend of emotion, hype, high drama, guilt, political retribution and wretched distortion—all with a rich background of violin music from "the days of yore" in an attempt to unload today's problems on tomorrow's taxpayers by mobilizing and manipulating some very fine citizen constituents. We still have a crack at changing the ending of this story and we might just make it a case study of how an informed and alert Congress decided to educate itself and refused to blindly and blandly just add billions of dollars to the indebtedness of future generations of rural Americans and all other taxpayers.

I am looking at some alternatives. I would hope that you might resist the pressure to "sign on" to S. 1300 or maybe even withdraw your present support of it. I would urge you to counsel with your good constituents and inform them on some of the facts that the trade associations have withheld from them. I will be furnishing the stack to you. Finally, I would sincerely urge you to work with me to develop a reasonable, honest and fair alternative to S. 1300 that will keep those rural lights burning without searing the taxpayers' pockets for a long time to come.

I would hope you might lay back on this one and take a very close look at it. If you mull around in it long enough you might see how an extremely sophisticated special interest lobby has taken a most magnificent program and through use of a remarkable array of scalpels, wrenches and sledge hammers has fashioned a bizarre blend of on-budget/off-budget financing and subsidy packages through use of the Federal Financing Bank and other methods over these many years that would greatly and deeply disappoint, sadden and distress the creators of rural electrification in this country. This session would be a good time to address the issue as to where it all went awry. Just be assured that it did. So I am ready to dig in for the long haul on this one. I get lots of dazzling flack from the trade associations—but no answers. Will you join me in seeking and getting some?

I thank you for your attentiveness.

With best personal regards to you.

Sincerely,

ALAN R. SIMPSON,
U.S. Senator.

SECTION-BY-SECTION SUMMARY

SECTION 1

Separates the RETRF into two separate and distinct accounts, one for Telephone borrowers and the other for Electric borrowers. Substantively the same as the split contemplated in S. 1300.

SECTION 2

Provides for amortization of CBO's, with level annual debt service. This change will assure that CBO principal begins to be repaid, thus reducing temptation to provide "forgiveness" in some future years. Use of amortized CBO's results in substantial interest savings to the RETRF vis-a-vis existing simple interest payment schedule, and is thus a prudent financial step not withstanding any other legislative actions.

SECTION 3

Requires that 'standard rate' be established periodically for each account of the RETRF. Such rates shall be calculated using the formula:

CBO interest plus CBO principal divided by interest receipts times CBO rate.

Sets 5 percent minimum for such standard rate, and permits Administrator to make discretionary loans at lesser rates, but not less than one-half of the standard rate.

The proposal also envisions phasing in the new standard rate by setting the first year's interest rate at 80 percent of the formula-derived amount, then increasing that percentage by 2 percent per year until the tenth year, at which time the standard rate will be 100 percent of the formula-derived rate.

The structure of this formula will accommodate lower interest discretionary loans by the Administration for extreme hardship losses. The reduced interest receipts of such loans will be reflected within the formula and will result in marginally higher standard rates. The formula will retain RETRF solvency under any set of plausible CBO rate conditions.

SECTION 4

Reaffirms the policy of encouraging and assisting borrowers to develop their own resources and independence.

Places $850/$250 million caps on electric and telephone programs respectively. All other financing needs must be met through supplemental sources.

SECTION 5

Deletes automatic RETRF access for telephone borrowers with three or fewer density per mile. Eliminates restrictive language requiring TIER of 1.5 or higher for access to RTB financing.

SECTIONS 6 AND 7

Taken together, these sections assure that monies received by the Administrator as a result of class A stock redemption will be returned to Treasury rather than be converted to permanent equity of the RETRF.

By Mr. KENNEDY (for himself, Mr. RANDOLPH, and Mr. MATSUNAGA):

S. 2647. A bill to revise and extend titles VII and VIII of the Public Health Service Act, relating to health professions educational assistance and nursing educational assistance; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

HEALTH PROFESSIONS AND NURSING EDUCATIONAL ASSISTANCE AMENDMENTS OF 1984

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, today I am introducing for myself and Senators RANDOLPH and MATSUNAGA S. 2647 a bill which will revise and extend titles VII and VIII of the Public Health Service Act, relating to health professions educational assistance and nursing educational assistance, the "Health Professions and Nursing Educational Assistance Amendments of 1984."

For more than two decades, we have had a partnership with our Nation's health professions schools and students to meet our needs for qualified health professionals. Working together, we have dramatically increased our Nation's capacity to train health professionals, we have encouraged a renewed interest in primary care, and we have established a national health service corps that has the potential for fielding almost 3,600 physicians and other health professionals in 1985 to meet the needs of the underserved.

Despite the fact that we have made substantial progress in solving the problems that were first identified years ago, much remains to be done. Many low- and middle-income students may no longer be able to afford the price of education in our health professions schools. Four years ago, I noted that high levels of student indebtedness will frustrate our efforts to continue to improve appropriate specialty and geographic distribution among our health professionals. This warning is still true today. We must be doubly concerned about the reality that under our current system of payment for health services these high levels of indebtedness will surely be passed along in higher costs to those seeking health care.

A student's ability to pay for education must not become an implicit or explicit admission criterion. We must have health care professionals who come from all areas of our society: women, minorities, low-income whites, and the physically handicapped.

Our Nation's nurses are essential to our ability to provide health services and are critical members of the health care team. Without them, our ability to meet the health needs of our citizens is jeopardized.

A recent study of nursing and nursing education completed by the Institute of Medicine concluded that as of the fall of 1982, there was no longer a generalized national shortage of RN's or of LPN's. However, there are identified shortages that occur unevenly thoughout the Nation in different geographic areas, in different health care settings, especially those that serve the economically disadvantaged and in specialty distribution or continues to be a need for Federal support for nursing programs.

The problems of geographic and specialty distribution of our health professionals are persistent. Nine years ago, as chairman of the Subcommittee on Health of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, I conducted hearings on Geographic and Specialty Maldistribution. I am pleased that progress has been made in reducing the magnitude of the problems, but I believe that we must not relax our concerns about these issues. I am not prepared to deny the poor of rural America and inner-city neighborhoods access to primary health care on the basis of their needs.

The Reagan administration has proposed some $80 million in reduced funding for health professions training, including reduced funding for physicians, nursing, pharmacy, veterinary medicine, and public health training. Mr. Reagan's premise seems to be that the market and free enterprise will take care of our future needs, so a fiscal year 1985 budget that is less than one-third of fiscal year 1981 is justified. Mr. Reagan's view on health professions is unacceptable:

It is clear that this body should act on authorizing legislation that rejects the premises found in the President's fiscal year 1985 budget proposal for health professions education.

The proposed $38 million reduction in nursing training from fiscal year 1984 levels is unacceptable. The proposed $30 million reduction in primary care/family medicine program support is unacceptable. The proposed $8 million reduction in area health education centers is unacceptable. And the proposed $7 million reduction in public health program support is unacceptable.

I believe that my bill, the Health Professions and Nursing Educational Assistance Amendments of 1984, is legislation responsive to the current needs of our society for qualified trained health professionals.

It includes provisions for appropriate authorization levels for existing health professions programs, makes provisions for a modest increase in the health professions student loan program, and creates a modest service contingent loan forgiveness program.
